WHAT WE OWE THE FARMER.

If every farmer stayed his hand
And said: "I will not till my land,
I will not sow the golden grain
Nor plant one seed upon the plain,"
What should we do?

Where would our cities be to-day,
With all the [illegible] pomps and rich display,
Without the gifts of farm and field—
The fertile meadow's generous yield?
What should we do?

How hard he works from day to day
To till the soil, to make the hay,
The fruits of earth to gather in
To store for you the barn and bin—
Just think of this!

The frost may come and spoil his crop,
The pouring rain his roots may rot,
The drouth may parch and spoil his grain—
O grudge him not his hard-won gain.
Just think of this!

WORKING THE "QUEER."

How This Business Was Carried on During the War.

An Inexperienced Detective's Remarkable Success in Unearthing a Gang of Counterfeiters—Army Officers and Soldiers Implicated.

The amount of counterfeit money in circulation at the close of the war was something appalling. Counterfeiting began with the first greenback and shinplaster issued, and though the Government officials broke up many gangs during the war, five new ones started in where an old one was dispersed. It was a safer business than ever before and more profitable than it will ever be again, unless we have another war. Much of the stuff was worked off through soldiers and it was only the very prudent citizen at home who stopped to scan and criticise his money.

In the spring of 1864 thirty thousand dollars' worth of counterfeits were sent to one Indiana regiment in the field, and scarcely any attempt was made by the recipients—thirty or forty in number—to conceal the fact. At the same time a citizen who was at the front to sell postage stamps and stationery to the boys was quietly selling counterfeit one-dollar bills for fifty-five cents each. One brigade, as I had positive knowledge, purchased eighteen thousand dollars' worth of the "goods," inside of three days.

The soldiers purchased this money on the same principle that a respectable, law-abiding citizen smuggles a suit of clothes across the border. It was not considered a crime in any sense, and many instances came to my knowledge where commissioned officers were as deep in the mire as private soldiers. Indeed, a paymaster was said to have paid out several thousand dollars' worth of counterfeits to the troops in the regular way. A secret service detective finally appeared in camp, and I was detailed to assist him in securing clews and pointers. Such was our luck that I was discharged from the service in the field and taken into the bureau at Washington.

As a soldier and "one of the boys," I had but little trouble in ascertaining where the counterfeit money came from. It was made in several Northern States, but the most perfect bills came from Mitchell County, Ind. I got hold of a circular which read that perfect counterfeit one and two-dollar bills, warranted to pass any where as genuine, could be had at sixty cents on the dollar by addressing "J. E. M., Shoals, Mitchell County, Ind." I wrote to this address from our camp in the Shenandoah, and inside of a week received twenty one-dollar bills. They were fully up to the guarantee. I could have passed every one of them on the sutler. When I therefore reported in Washington for duty I was all ready to move on the enemy. I was green in the detective business, of course, but as there happened to be a rush of business just then I was ordered off to Indiana on my own hook, and that almost without instructions. I first visited Madison and New Albany, but not a counterfeit was afloat and not a person could be found who knew of any thing wrong at Shoals. I then proceeded to the town direct, giving out that I was looking for a location to start a big cooperage business.

I had made up my mind that the postmaster had something to do with the business, but I changed it as soon as I saw him. He was an old man, simple minded and honest from top to bottom. As he was the owner of the piece of land which I had thoughts of buying, I was in his company, more or less, inside and outside the office. He had never, so far as he knew, been stuck with a counterfeit, and none of the business men in the place had any trouble. This satisfied me that my pointers were only skin deep. While the gang used the Shoals post-office their headquarters might be a long distance away.

My lay was to keep my eyes open for "J. E. M.," and a whole week went by before I made a discovery. I was at the office every time the mail came in, but no one inquired for those initials. Correspondents were not told to address in care of any box, but I was satisfied the letters were placed in one. By persistent observation I got to see most of the mail taken out, and one day I saw the postmaster throw seven letters aside as he sorted the mail. These were afterward placed with as many more, tied up in a package and left under the shelf of the general delivery window. I had now to see who called for this package. One evening, a quarter of an hour before the office closed, a gaunt-looking woman, poorly dressed and walking with a limp, entered and approached the window. The postmaster handed her the package and asked:

"Well, is Tom any better?"

"A trifle, sir, but not much," she replied.

"He is getting lots of mail?"

"Yes, sir. He does lots of good. The soldiers say it is a sure cure every time."

That evening, as the postmaster and I sat together in my room at the hotel, I carelessly referred to the woman and her letters.

"Say, the day will come when Uncle Sam will give that family a pension," he replied.

"For what reason?"

"For caring for the health of so many of his boys down at the front. That woman's husband is laid up with a fever-sore. They live out here about seven miles. They make a sort of porous plaster out of roots and tallow which will prevent any one from taking cold if worn on the chest. This plaster will drive out rheumatism or neuralgia in two hours, and is a great thing to heal hurts and wounds."

"Do they have any sale here?" I asked.

"No, I guess not. The folks laugh at them, but they go off like hot cakes in the army."

"Then he sells a good many?"

"He sometimes gets fifty letters a week, and each one with fifty cents inside."

"He and the wife live alone, eh?"

"No. They have a nephew with them, I believe. He is said to be a young man from Ohio who was drafted into the army, and ran away to escape service. I guess he is knocking about the woods most of the time."

No one but a thoroughly honest old man could have been so simple, I was satisfied, now that I had the case in my hand, but there was more of the ground to be looked over. I engaged the postmaster to go out with me next day to look at a tract of land lying on the road to "J. E. M.'s" place. The man's name was Roberts, and when I asked why his letters did not come properly addressed, the postmaster explained:

"I can't just remember what the woman said about it, but I believe he used to have a partner in the business, and is afraid to use his legal name."

The next day we drove out to inspect the tract of land, and I so shaped things as to cut across the woods and make a call at Roberts' cabin. I had hoped to discover some evidence here to confirm my suspicions, but I did not do as well as expected. Roberts was supposed to be almost helpless with his ailment, but as we approached the place I caught sight of a man walking briskly between the house and the barn, and afterward knew that it was the cripple. It was an ordinary log house, divided into two rooms. When we reached it the man was lying on a lounge, and seemingly asleep, but the fresh earth on his boots had not yet dried. Not a sign of the letters could be seen, and when I spoke about his wonderful plasters and my desire to purchase I was informed that he was just out. It was plain to me that both Roberts and wife were under constraint, and though the postmaster was my guarantee they were shy of me. Common hospitality forced them to offer us a bite to eat, but I knew they felt relieved when we took our departure.

As soon as we reached the shelter of the woods I sent the postmaster across to the horse and buggy and secreted myself to see what would happen. In about twenty minutes Roberts appeared at the door, carefully looked about him, and then went to the barn, which stood about ten rods from the house, and hung an old sheepskin on a peg near the door. This door faced a highway which was so little used that it scarcely showed a wheel track. It struck me that he had hung up the sheepskin as a signal, and, though he returned to the house and every thing was very quiet, I waited for two hours. Then I was rewarded by seeing a man ride past on horseback. He was evidently familiar with the signal, for he rode his horse through a gateway to the barn, and Roberts at once went out to meet him. I saw them have two or three packages between them, and they kept up a conversation which lasted half an hour. Then the sheepskin was taken down, the stranger rode away, and Roberts returned to the house with a package in his hand.

As soon as I rejoined the postmaster I thought it best to take him into my confidence. He was dumfounded at my suspicions, but yet, in the new light of things, could recollect many little things going to show that I might be correct. Mrs. Roberts did not come to town that evening, as I anticipated, but next forenoon she arrived and posted twenty-one letters, each one of them directed to a soldier. Thirteen of them were directed to members of one Wisconsin regiment, and each and every one no doubt contained counterfeits.

I now reported to headquarters, and asked for two men to aid me. I met them at New Albany, and, after canvassing the case, a third man was sent us from Louisville, making up our party to four. Each proceeded to Shoals by his own route, and as many strangers were coming and going, the presence of our party provoked no unusual comment.

During my absence Mrs. Roberts had received two big mails and posted one, and nothing had occurred to create alarm. On the day after our arrival she came in with fifteen letters and took out twenty-nine. It was in the evening, and the four of us were on the road to the Roberts cabin within an hour. I had seen the messenger come and go by daylight, but that might have been an exception. When we reached the place we posted ourselves so that no one could approach or leave without being seen, and though the lights were out before eleven o'clock we remained alert until broad daylight. It was ten o'clock in the forenoon before Roberts hung up the sheepskin and a quarter to twelve before the messenger arrived. It was the same uncouth fellow I had seen on the other occasion, and he received the mail of the night before and handed out a packet of letters to be posted.

We had our plans all perfected. Two of the force were left to arrest Roberts, and the other two of us lay in ambush down the road and arrested the messenger as he came up. He proved to be the right sort of a man. He no sooner found himself in custody than he wanted to squeal on the gang, and in half an hour we had all the information he could give.

Roberts and his wife were of different stuff, but when confronted with the messenger and made to understand that he had given the whole thing away, they became quite anxious to slip their necks out of the halter. They were the agents of the gang, and where do you suppose the gang had its headquarters? On a house-boat which moved up and down the Ohio river, pretending to be in the service of the Government in locating obstructions, noting the changes in the channel, and recording depths. The money was printed in Louisville, and this headquarter-boat supplied several towns on the river. Nearly all the "queer" was mailed to the soldiers, and there was a regular system about it. All the circulars sent to the Army of the Tennessee referred would-be purchasers to an address at New Albany. The Army of the Potomac was supplied from Shoals. The troops in the Southwest were supplied from Madison.

The messenger stated that the boat would be at a certain point about six miles away at ten o'clock that night, and we were on hand to board and capture her. There were four men aboard, one of whom had charge of the correspondence. He had a snug little office fitted up, bought postage stamps by the hundred, and had about him a bushel of compromising documents. The receipts must have averaged $300 or more per day, and among the letters ordering the "queer" were epistles from several Captains and a Major. The messenger knew no one outside the boat. Roberts and his wife knew only the messenger. Man and wife got a regular salary of fifteen dollars per week, while the messenger got twenty dollars. Of the four on the boat not one would betray his comrades, and so we did not get the printers and engravers at that haul. We got about thirty thousand dollars in counterfeit money, over one thousand dollars in gold and a mass of evidence which raided the armies and put a decided stop to the business which had so long flourished. Several officers were court martialed and dismissed, and a number of supposed respectable citizens along the river found it healthy to remove to distant points.

Two years later, when a gang of counterfeiters in Rhode Island was broken up, and two of the slickest captured, one of them, who went by the name of "Frenchy," told me that he printed all the money used along the Ohio up to the date of my raid, and that the printing was done within a square of a police station in Louisville. He said that the gang included at least seventy-five men, some of whom were city or county officials, coal dealers, steamboat men and grocers, and the profits of each one amounted to at least fifty dollars per week. Out of the pall only two men were sent to prison, but it ended the business at once along the river.—N. Y. Sun.

REMARKABLE VOYAGE.

How a Lewiston (Me.) Man Came from Ireland to New Jersey.

"How did you come over, Pat?" asked a Lewiston (Me.) Journal man of a well known laborer in the yard of one of the Lewiston mills after the story teller had done telling his story.

"I left home," he began, after expressions of diffidence, "when I was a lad, and my cousin says he to me, 'My boy, my boy,' and begorry I was sad, indeed. I didn't ship nor pay passage. I didn't register on the ship's books, for them days were afore the steamship times. I just stowed myself in the ship's hold, until one day the churnin' and the thumpin' got that loud that I was afraid and I come aloft to the deck of the ship."

After he got on deck, his narrative continues, the captain fell on him and gave him three lashings a day on his bare back, with unfailing regularity. This became so monotonous that one day he fell on his knees and pleaded for his life, and the captain had a big cask rolled up out of the ship's hold, its head knocked in, a lot of food put into it, Patrick put into the cask, the head replaced, and with only the bunghole open, the entire cask and contents rolled into the sea. For days he drifted on and on. "I had only the bunghole to look out of, and the great green waves all around me."

"How did you get water?"

"All the water I had to drink was what washed through the bunghole."

"And you like salt water?"

"Sure it's only a matter of taste."

After Pat had drifted many days, and had begun to grow very fat from his inactivity, he one day felt the cask bumping on the shore, and pretty soon was washed up high and dry.

With a certain naivette, he says that he had by this time begun to be sort of frightened. He saw no signs of life until after several hours some cows and bulls came roaming over the seashore, where they had come down to drink. At this point it is better not to question the taste of cows for salt water. One of the bulls came smelling around his cask, and playfully leaned up against the bunghole to rest. Pat put out his hand and quietly grabbed the bull's tail. Then he pulled it through, and bracing his feet against the head of the cask gave the tail a twist.

The bull awoke. He looked around. The cask had him. With a snort like the wrath of Jove he started. Whew! How he ran. He bounded over fields and hedges, into the streets of the city, past wharves and docks, past the custom-house, up to the city building, where, in weathering a street corner, he split the cask in twain over a lamp-post, and Pat stood forth from his prison house of weeks, a free man.

He was in New Jersey.

CHINESE TORTURES.

Plunging a Criminal Into Quicklime—Self-Incineration of a Priest.

Two horrible stories of torture come in the China mail, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. One was the case of a coolie at Swatow, who was accused of kidnaping. He was tortured in the ordinary Chinese way for two days, but he either wouldn't admit his guilt or had nothing to confess. He had no money to placate his tormentors, so on the third day he was trussed up naked in the broiling sun and surrounded with a layer of quicklime. He was allowed no food, but any amount of drink, which the unfortunate wretch swallowed greedily under the tropical sun, and soon began to perspire freely. When the perspiration came in contact with the quicklime the victim suffered as though suddenly plunged in boiling water or thrown upon the red-hot coal. His screams could be heard for a long distance, and he expired in as great agony as do the criminals who suffer what is called the "lingering process," the stripping of the flesh by keen knives until the loss of blood brings welcome death.

The other case is one of self-inflicted torture by a Buddhist monk of Wenchow, who rejoiced in the name of Lofty and Profound. He had taken mendicant orders, allowing his hair and beard to grow, never washed, and constantly mortified the flesh with fasts and scourgings. Finally he resolved to collect funds for a monastery, but after spending a year in begging on the streets he grew discouraged and vowed to seek "sitting transformation," that is, to seat himself in a furnace constructed of kindling wood, and, setting fire to it, enter the enjoyment of Nirvana. Several cases of this self-immolation had recently occurred at Wenchow, and the curiosity to see another brought great crowds to the monastery, where the rite was to be performed. All preparations were made, the funeral pyre was built, when foreigners living near by sent an appeal to Chihsien, and the mandarin interrupted the ceremony. The monk refused food, and entered the chest which was to have been his funeral pyre. In the morning he was found dead. Then his body was placed on the pyre and was consumed. The self-immolation of priests occurs in one of the richest districts of Chinkiang, noted for the scholarship of the litterati and their bitter hostilities to foreigners.

THE LOFTIEST VOLCANO.

A Faint Outline of Mount Cotopaxi's Impressive Grandeur.

Winter tourists who go south to spend the frost-bitten months should visit the Andes and go into training for a walking match. A writer in the American Magazine says:

Cotopaxi is the loftiest of active volcanoes, but is slumbering now. The only evidences of action are the frequent rumblings that can be heard for 100 miles, and the cloud of smoke by day and the pillar of fire by night, which constantly arise from a crater that is more than 3,000 feet beyond the reach of man. Many have attempted to climb the mountain, but the walls are so steep and the snow is so deep that the ascent is impossible, even with scaling ladders.

On the southern slope of Cotopaxi is a great rock, more than 2,000 feet high, called the "Inca's Head." Tradition says that it was once the summit of the volcano and fell on the day when Atahualpa was strangled by the Spaniards. Those who have seen Vesuvius can judge of the grandeur of Cotopaxi if they can imagine a volcano 15,600 feet higher, spurting flames and lava from a crest covered with 3,000 feet of snow, with a voice that has been heard 600 miles. And one can judge of the grandeur of scenery on the road to Quito if he can imagine twenty of the highest mountains in America, three of them active volcanoes, standing along the road from Washington to New York.

Extra Fine Misapplied.

There are some persons so "refined" that they are as effectually encased from contact with their fellow beings as if actually boxed in by glass and wood. A mispronounced word, an ungrammatical expression, is with them sufficient to outweigh any degree of moral worth. To be sure, it is pleasant to an educated person to meet both refinement and worth; but he who accepts the former at the price of the latter, or turns away from the latter because not framed in the former, is always a surface creature, whose skim-milk verdict of approbation is better lost than won.

THE GIFT OF SPEECH.

Why Men and Women Grow Wrinkled and Care-Worn.

A Lady Writer's Astonishing Theory—She Tries to Prove That the Power of Speech Is at the Bottom of Most Human Misery.

Not long ago our old cat passed through a severe domestic affliction, writes "Amber" in the Chicago Tribune. She lost five as handsome offspring as cat ever laid claim to within the sixtieth fraction of an hour. Yet there she lies upon her cushion, as sleek, as placid, and seemingly as happy as though her departed babies were by her side.

There is not a day but some creature of the brute creation endures trouble which, if borne by men and women, would reduce endurance to its ebb. Horses are weighted with heavy burdens, lashed with cruel whips, left standing hour after hour by unsheltered curbstones. They are suffocated in nose-bags, tormented by rude boys, starved by stingy masters and overchecked by wanton dudes. And yet who ever heard of a wrinkled and haggard horse?

Innocent and addle-pated chickens are cooped in close quarters, carried head downward by the legs, thrown into vile-smelling and airless underground holes, jostled over stony roads, and yet set them free and five minutes after they are as placidly amused and as idiotically inconsequential as though their life had yielded nothing but ripe oatfields and moist chicken feed.

If any thing created ever knew anguish the sheep has sounded the plummet of possible despair. Worried by dogs, caught and sheared by clumsy hands, turned loose upon the hillside in its shorn condition to prove the fallacy that any one up aloft tempers the wind for such poor creatures, decoyed to the shambles and hit in the head by bungling butchers—and yet who ever knew a sheep to bear in its face the token of life's many vicissitudes? Are they not veritable types of serene and lovely composure and supernatural equanimity?

The average woman begins to show lines about her mouth before she is out of her teens. At thirty she is hollow-eyed, at forty wrinkled, at fifty haggard, at sixty a crone. A man to whose lot falls a little more than the average share of earth's trouble, is broken down and ready for the grave before he is fifty, and ten to one goes out of life in the wake of his own desperate bullet. In thinking the matter over I have come to the conclusion that the reason why humanity bears marks of suffering unknown to the brute creation's greater experience of suffering lies in the gift of human speech. Bestow upon the afflicted cat, the tormented horse, the long-suffering chicken and the innocent sheep the power to voice their complaints and rest all the listening ears, and the wrinkles, the white hairs and the sunken cheeks would follow sure as fate! It is because they can not talk things over that they escape the brand of this iron of special torment. Something happens to us, and we give ourselves no rest until every friend and distant correspondent knows it and drops in to condole with us. If the darling baby dies we feed our bitter sorrow with contributions from every outside quarter. The minister keeps the knife turning in the wound by dropping in occasionally to comfort us and pray with us. If sickness enters the house, be it trivial or serious, it becomes the absorbing subject of conversation with every one we meet. If it is a cold we tell over all the symptoms; if it is a fever we dilate upon the suffering; if it is a broken limb or a terrible accident we gloat over the details.

If special disaster overtakes us and we are bankrupt either in gold or faith we talk, and talk, and talk the matter over with every friend we have until every repetition leaves a wrinkle. When we salute one another in the street it is always: "How do you do?" referring to the body and not to the soul. The leading form of the salutation is: How are you as to the perishing part of you? Have you any aches or pains? Any infirmities or organic disease about you to-day? Just as Simple Simon asked the pieman for a taste of his ware we say: "Now's the time to trot out the ache or a nice little section of the lungs or liver if you have them about you." Our salutation should relate to the spirit. We should be more concerned with the welfare of the immortal part of us than with the welfare of our bodies and of our digestion.

I am hardly prepared to say that the gift of speech is a curse, but I think that I am justified in saying that the misuse of it redounds to our everlasting confusion and distress. A backbiting tongue certainly does more mischief than the word the sealed lips could ever work. The man or woman who assails the fair and delicate fabric of character with brutal speech is more to be dreaded than the thug who sandbags his victim. Any of us would rather be knocked down than to dwell perpetually with a nagging tongue. A brawling woman can make more contention than any other created thing unless it is a guinea hen or a peacock. A brutal word hurts more than a blow. You can heal a physical hurt, but there is no balm for a heart bruise. A word is not like a kite. You can't draw it back with a string; once spoken it is like a bird let loose from a cage, it will never come back and be locked behind the bars of forgetfulness again. Would it not be a good idea, then, so much as is possible, to forego idle gossip about troubles that can't be helped and to resolve to be mute where we can not say pleasant things? Sympathy is necessary to us all, but sympathy carried to an excess is like the overdose of opium, it weakens the fiber and dulls the spirit. Too much chattering about troubles that must be endured rather than cured will end in making weaklings of us. The way to get along in the world is to keep our breath and our strength for the battle-field and not waste it in idle chat about the camp-fire. The man who talks is never the man who does. The time that the gallant Sheridan put in in riding down to Winchester would never have immortalized his name had he descended from his horse and talked the situation over with every straggler he met.

New Building Materials.

A patent has been granted for a process of manufacturing boards, slabs or plates, chiefly applicable to the usual building purposes of wall and ceiling linings or coverings, and also as a lining for ice-chests, flues and the like. Each board or plate is composed of the following materials: A large number of small tubes, either specially made of paper or other suitable material or formed of vegetable stalks. These tubes are uniformly distributed, so as to form a number of cores for the semi-liquid mass which is subsequently cast in. A plastic mass consisting of plastic mineral matter, such as burnt gypsum, cement or lime, and finely divided solid particles of organic origin, such as small coke, wool, hair or feathers, with or without the addition of a liquid binding substance, such as glue water or a mixture of water with alum, green vitriol and soluble glass in the following relative quantities: Gypsum, cement or lime, fifty parts; small coke, ten parts; wool, hair or feathers, one part; binding substance, consisting of alum, vitriol and soluble glass, one part.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

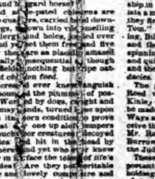
The Present Session of Congress and What It Promises—Good Feeling Among the Leading Rivals for Speaker—Some Picturesque Features of the Next House.

[Special Washington Correspondence.]

This session of Congress is not going to be productive of much legislation. The members have not yet got through with their hand-shaking, and the Republican side of the House is still bubbling with delight over the result of the late election. The Democrats maintain a very dignified and sober countenance, but it is evident that the iron has entered their souls. It gives some of the old stagers on the Democratic side a chance to display their good nature under adverse circumstances. Mr. Randall, with his restored health, seems to be as blithe and happy as a boy. The defeat of President Cleveland is, evidently, regarded by him as in the nature of a vindication of his own views on the tariff. The two most congratulated men on the Republican side are Judge Kelley and Tom Reed. Judge Kelley is the father of the House, and is invested with certain unwritten rules and usages in etiquette that ought to make his presence in public life peculiarly pleasant. He is always regarded as entitled to the floor, and whatever he may have to say amounts to a question of privilege. He is never expected to rise from his seat when another member comes to shake hands with him.

He is always very ceremoniously given the opportunity to make the first selection of a seat. One of the first duties of a Congressman returning to Washington at the opening of a session is to pay his respects to Judge Kelley. This year that was an especial pleasure and enthusiasm among Republicans. They flocked about his seat like blackbirds about a corn-crib. The old gentleman sat in his peculiarly stiff and uncouth way, a broad smile girdling his homely, honest visage, and shook hands for hours with one after another of the Republican members.

Between Tom Reed, Julius Cæsar Burrows, Joe Cannon and Mr. McKinley, who are all active candidates for the Speakership in the Fifty-first Congress, there exists a most cordial good fellowship. When they first met this session it was: "Hello, Tom." "How are you, Joe?" "Good morning, Billy!" "How are you, Julius Cæsar," and the great quadrumvirate were seen spinning along in a jolly cross fire of jokes and quips about the result of the campaign and the prospect of their respective candidacies.



CANNON, REED AND BURROWS.

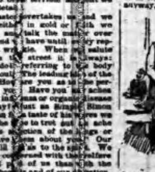
The general feeling seems to be that Reed will be speaker, and that if McKinley does not go into the Cabinet he will be made chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, while Cannon will receive the chairmanship on Appropriations, Mr. Randall's present important position. Burrows would probably go to the head of the Judiciary Committee if he wished to.

These committee chairmanships are important places, the men who occupy them holding in their hands the fate of two-thirds of the legislation of the House. No man in the last three Congresses has had so much power as Mr. Randall. Not even Speaker Carlisle has been able to wield such powerful one-man influence.

The attitude into which the leading men on both sides of the chamber will be put after the 4th of March by the result of the election will be decidedly picturesque. Mr. Reed, from being the vigilant, tireless, unerring leader of the Republicans, will probably be required to translate himself into a calm, judicial, equipoised arbiter of a thousand consciously occurring conflicts of opinion and will. Burrows, Cannon, McKinley and one or two others will begin to dress themselves with reference to the supreme leadership on their side of the chamber. Burrows is a man of great force of character, plain spoken, very sensible, a good orator, pleasant in appearance—interesting at all times.

He is not so quick nor so biting as Reed—perhaps not so successful in confounding and ambushing the enemy. And Cannon, the old "war horse," is a jolly old partisan, never so happy as when he has a quid of tobacco in each cheek and a fight coming up. His speeches are straight from the shoulder, and what [illegible] on the enemy's sides like a trip hammer on hot iron. He has a very long memory and a quaint, Lincolnish way of putting things, so that he has made terrific holes in the arguments of the opposition more than once.

Of Mr. McKinley little is expected except quiet, good management in the direction of tariff legislation. He is a modest fellow anyway, given little to talk, and his popularity is due to his unselfish and unassuming course, both in legislation and politics. Whispers are frequent and loud of his being the Republican candidate for President in 1892, and certainly at this early day that seems quite a possibility, although it is not out of the question to expect that President Harrison may be his own successor.



MR. KELLEY'S RECEPTION.

On the Democratic side the opportunities for Mr. Randall are superb. He and Mr. Carlisle will now be on the floor. Breckenridge, McMillan, Crisp, Mills and the other prominent Democrats, who have been so enthusiastic and capable in their support of Mr. Carlisle, will be here as usual. They will need such a man as Reed has been on the Republican side, with a memory big enough and clear enough to be possessed of every detail of parliamentary precedents and a vigilance and a readiness equal to every demand of floor tactics. It is not discreditable to Mr. Carlisle or any of his friends, and probably no injustice, to say that they do not possess one-half Mr. Ran-

CAUGHT IN A TRAP.

A Shrewd Scheme for Blackmailing Business Men.

How a Detroit Merchant Was Surprised by a Pretty Adventuress and How He Cleverly Turned the Tables on His Gay Visitor.

"Yes," said a Detroit merchant the other day to a Detroit Free Press reporter, "ninety per cent of the stories about attempts to blackmail the business men of the country are true."

"Possibly you may have had an experience of the kind?" suggested the reporter.

"Yes," replied the merchant, "and that is why I speak with so much positiveness."

"But it wasn't a success?" the reporter ventured to remark.

"No," was the reply; "and probably only because I kept my wits about me. The adventuress visited the counting-room three times during an interval of ten days. On the first two occasions my partner or some one else happened to be present, but on the last occasion she found me alone. She pretended to be getting subscribers for an art journal, and really interested me in the engravings she had with her, for my taste was somewhat in that line. She had a sweet voice and was a fluent talker. She was prettily dressed, and had just enough of gush not to awaken my suspicions."

"Handsome, was she?" asked the reporter.

"Well, yes—stylish, at least—and with what might be called a superb figure. Suddenly she announced that unless I gave her fifty dollars she would set up an outcry and alarm the entire store. I looked at her a moment in dumb amazement. There was a look in her bold, brown eyes that I did not like.

"I saw my peril. My integrity at home and in the community is A No. 1, as you very well know. But, suppose she had screamed and brought clerks and customers into the counting-room? Not a few would have been ready to believe any charge she might have made against me. Even after a man has been entirely vindicated his character is still somewhat smirched, and against that there seems to be no redress. My wife is not the least bit jealous and trusts me implicitly, and yet I would not have had her serenity disturbed for ten times the sum demanded of me. You can understand from this how a married man whose character is not above reproach is quite likely to submit to the extortion. I determined to outwit the designing woman.

"That is a cool demand," I said, with a half-satisfied little laugh. "The amount does not surprise me—it is the sublime assurance. You are very bright and pleasing and full of daring, and I wouldn't mind knowing you better."

"My reply threw her off her guard. My temporizing pleased her. Her eyes warmed up, and she leaned closer to me.

"But," I said, "I haven't the money about me."

"Your check will do," she quietly rejoined.

"All right," assented I.

"I filled up a check for the amount, signed it and handed it to her. She scanned it in a business-like way and then said:

"I am much obliged to you."

"Oh, don't mention it," I said, with a glance that led her to suspect that I was a trifle fascinated. "I know you must be in need, or you would not descend to such a trick. But allow me to suggest that you have not been wary enough."

"Why?" asked she, with a puzzled look.

"This telephone connects with the bank upon which I have drawn the check," I said. "I could stop its payment before you reached the sidewalk."

"That is true!" she said, with a discomfited air. "I'll not take the check."

"She laid it down and I picked it up.

"First I admired your impudence," I said; "now I am beginning to admire you. Will you please write down your name and address? Possibly I may call. I'll send my head book-keeper to the bank with you. He'll vouch for you and you'll get the money."

"She looked at me keenly, then penciled down her name and address. She thought that I had 'tumbled to the racket,' as the saying is, and that she could presume on my cleverness in the future. I touched the call-bell and a cash boy entered.

"Tell Mr. T. to come here," said I. "I want him to go with this lady to have a check cashed for her."

"The pretty little adventuress had smoothed her hair and repinned her collar. When the head book-keeper came in I said to him:

"Mr. T., this lady has a work of art to show you. It is issued in monthly parts, and the price seems quite reasonable. She'll explain it to you as she did to me."

"I caught up my hat and walked out of the counting-room with the check in my hand. The look of baffled rage which she sent after me was comical to see. She frowned on the book-keeper, wrapped up her sample copies and left."

"She'll try it again," remarked the reporter.

"Not here," replied the merchant. "I'm never here alone now—neither is my partner. The very next day the book-keeper's desk was put inside the railing. I tell you there are all the time schemes going on, and you have to be pretty sharp if a designing woman happens to be at the bottom of them. I didn't think so at first, but I think so now."

"And did she give you her real name?" asked the reporter.

"That I can't answer. The address was correct, but she moved before a detective got there. She was a little afraid of the result of her experiment with me."

"Am I at liberty to use this episode?" asked the reporter.

"Why, certainly, sir. I supposed that to be the object of your inquiries. An inkling of the matter reached you, didn't there?"

"Yes."

"So I suspected. Well, the story is just as I have given it to you. But you must not publish my name or that of the firm."

"I'll not, since it is your wish," said the reporter.

Belonged to No Order.

"Bob," said a stranger who lived across the street, "is your father a Mason?" "No, sir," replied the boy. "Does he belong to the Knights of Pythias?" "No, sir." "Ah! Perhaps he is an Odd-Fellow?" "No, sir." "Is it possible! Then he must be an Elk?" "No, sir." "Is he a Grand Army man?" "No, sir." "That's strange. Er—can you tell me what in thunder your father means, then, when he gets out on the sidewalk every morning and makes all kinds of signs and swings his arms and hollers?" "Oh, you mustn't mind that." "Why not?" "Pa has had St. Vitus's dance for three years."

Where He Had Gone To.

"By the way, where is Jones now?" asked Briggs. "I haven't heard of him for a long time." "He has gone to the spirit land," replied Quimby. "What, is he dead?" "I didn't say he was dead. He has moved to Kentucky."

It Was a Pretty Foot.

The funniest incident of my trip was in a sleeping-car, writes "Gath" in the Cincinnati Enquirer. It was in the morning, when most of the passengers had got out of their berths, and only several sets of curtains were drawn tightly in front of still slumberous persons. Suddenly a foot was thrust out between two curtains. It was small, white and symmetrical—no more than a feminine No. 2—and the merest bit of ankle in sight looked soft and fine. The men glanced at it from the corners of their wicked eyes. The women deprecated the exposure. Then a bold, brazen fellow went right straight to the pretty foot, grabbed the ankle and flung the whole member rudely into the berth.

"He wouldn't treat his bride so," said a woman close by. "It must be his sister."

Then the head of a ten-year-old urchin emerged where the foot had been, and a sleepy, angry, boyish voice said: "Look here, Sam, you let me alone. Next time you ketch a hold of my foot that way I'll kick the gizzard out of you."

There was a subsidence of sentimental interest and a risibility of mirth.

How to Clean Ivory.

Ivory ornaments, unless carefully [illegible], become yellow. They are very easily cleaned and with a little trouble will look fresh and retain their luster for a long time. The simplest way to clean them is to brush them with a new tooth brush, not very sharp, to which a little soap is applied. Then rinse the ornament in luke warm water. Next dry it and brush until the luster reappears. A little alcohol applied upon the brush will increase this luster. If the trinket has become very yellow dry it in a gentle heat. The yellow will soon disappear and the ornament look as good as new.

THE OLD AND THE NEW.

The old year is gone and the new is before us.

We must now write 1889.

May there be luck in odd numbers as said Rory O'More.

May peace and prosperity be the heritage of the people of this widely expanded land.

May just and beneficent laws be enacted and enforced.

May the rights of the [illegible] sovereign over all mercenary designs.

May national unity grow stronger and stronger and sectional animosity fade away into everlasting oblivion.

May the hum of contented industry be music in the air and abundant harvests beautify and gladden the earth.

May gaunt pestilence nowhere abide, but the blessings of health be universal.

May the great injunction—"Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people," be engraven upon the memory of each American citizen.

May practical honesty and unpretending virtue be the required passports for all places of honor and emolument.

When the sun of 1889 dips beneath the horizon, may we all be wiser and better than when it arose.

ONLY THE CONSTITUTION.

It is a question whether the Republicans in the Senate of the United States are not transcending constitutional authority in the matter of tariff or revenue legislation.

The Constitution, Article I, Section 7, declares that "All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills."

The House of Representatives originated and passed a tariff measure, known as the Mills bill, and duly transmitted it to the Senate.

By a just interpretation of the Constitution, it then became the duty of the Senate to either adopt, amend, or reject that identical House-originated bill.

Instead of doing as the Constitution clearly directs, the Republican Senatorial majority prepared, reported and are discussing an independent project, virtually as much so as if the House of Representatives had never taken action upon the subject.

Doubtless the Republican Senators do not expect their self-originated tariff to become a law, but, expecting or desiring what they may, nothing can justify their flying in the face of organic direction.

If Senators approve of the House bill let them pass it, otherwise reject, or propose amendments and return it to the source from whence the highest law in the land declares that all revenue measures must originate.

That would be Constitutional.

Rigid loyalty to the Constitution in all its parts, is the essence of patriotism and the only pathway of national safety.

In a Government "of the people, by the people, and for the people," public purity must have its fountain in the people themselves, and the political corruptionist must be made infamous by patriotic public opinion.

Let the Republicans in Congress manipulate tariff measures on behalf of monopolies and other selfish interests as much as they please, the Democratic party will uncompromisingly fight on for honest protection to labor, equal encouragement to all branches of industry, for the rights of the people, irrespective of class, and for the permanent growth and prosperity of legitimate trade and American commerce. That is the banner of Democracy and it is nailed to the masthead.

A young man named Black, from Elizabeth, was unceremoniously "bounced" from a North avenue billiard parlor a few days ago, for making himself obnoxious to the owner of the place. He persisted in returning to the place, so that the proprietor, Mr. L. Apgar, swore out a warrant for his arrest. Wednesday A. M. Officer Lynch spied the young man and succeeded in capturing him after a long chase through lumber yards and over freight cars. He was held for the Grand Jury in the sum of $100 bail on a charge of assault, and Judge Suydam fined him $5 for attempting to escape from Officer Lynch.

The Tableaux and Those who Graced Them.

The very novel and pleasing Christmas entertainment given by the Seventh Day Baptists, in the Park House, last week and reported exclusively in THE PRESS was repeated at Reform Hall, New Year's night, before an audience that entirely filled the auditorium. The entertainment was even more successful upon its second presentation, and the high stage helped the effect greatly.

In addition to what has already been said in these columns, of the entertainment, the following description of the characters and costumes of the tableaux will not be without interest. Tennyson's beautiful poem, "Dream of Fair Women," was read by Miss Anna Titsworth, and illustrated as follows:

The first tableau was "Beauty and Anguish," represented by Miss Florence Titsworth, in a becoming dress of blue silk, draped with white, and Miss Nan Randolph in black.

Second—Helen of Troy: Miss Lulu Lewis, draped as a statue.

Third—Helen and Iphigenia: the Misses Lulu Lewis and Ida Spicer.

Fourth—Cleopatra: Mabel Potter in Egyptian costume, reclining on a couch.

Fifth—Jephtha's Daughter: Miss Mabel Maxson in Jewish costume, with tambourine in hand.

Sixth—Fair Rosamond: Miss Florence Potter.

Seventh—Queen Eleanor and King Henry: Miss Lu Clawson and Mr. Frank Clawson.

Final tableau—group.

At the close of the entertainment, the Rev. Dr. [illegible] and President John H. French, made addresses, the latter presenting to the Seventh Day people, the thanks of the Reform Club for their kindness.

—Social parties are now the rage in all parts of the country among the farmers and villagers. They vie with each other in getting up splendid suppers, and while not served up by an army of liveried and obsequious servants as is sometimes the case in cities, yet they are pleasant and enjoyable occasions.

A Card of Thanks.

The Committee of the entertainment at Goodwill Lodge, No. 101, K. of P., take this opportunity to thank the Park Avenue Glee Club and those brothers of Perseverance Lodge who so kindly and ably assisted us in giving our entertainment.

A Birthday Surprise.

The Four-in-hand Circle—an organization for select social enjoyment during the Winter months, composed of sixteen young ladies and gentlemen of the city and borough—surprised Miss Lillie Force at her home on Duer street, December 28.

The occasion was the anniversary of her birth, and the coming of her friends was a thorough surprise, and sincerely appreciated as an evidence of their esteem and kindly feeling. The company numbered twenty-two who all enjoyed themselves completely from early evening until about midnight, during which time refreshments were served.

ONLY A PARLOR MATCH.

A parlor match set fire to a lace quilt in one of the bedrooms in the residence of Mr. Charles Wann, Willow avenue, Washington Park, North Plainfield, Sunday evening at 8 o'clock, and had it not been for the timely efforts of Mr. Wann, and some friends who were visiting the family, the damage might have been serious.

The bed narrowly escaped taking fire from the sparks, and a thick quilt that had been used to smother the flames, was discovered in time smouldering, and had to be thrown out of the window to prevent a second fire.

Johnny, Get Your Gun!

(From the "News" of November 20, 1888.)

Miss Fuller displayed her skill on the violin, giving in fine style Raff's "Cavatina."

(From the "News" of December 21, 1888.)

Miss Fuller played the violin. Her playing was execrable. It marred what was otherwise a creditable entertainment.

DEDICATING THEIR NEW HALL.

Nothing shows the progress and importance of a community more pointedly and forcibly than the erection of buildings devoted to the spread of knowledge and intellectual culture, and it is, therefore, that we point with pride to the magnificent edifice just dedicated to the dissemination of moral, physical and intellectual development by the Plainfield Gesang and Turn Verein Society, wherein were held the dedication exercises, yesterday afternoon. The history of the Society has already appeared in these columns, and space today will not permit us to reproduce it. Suffice it to say that the Society's growth, since its organization in 1861, has been rapid, so that it now bids fair to become one of the leading organizations of the city.

The heroic struggles of the members have been fully rewarded, showing that indomitable perseverance will vanquish fate, and that organized determination will eventually win, in temporal as well as intellectual effort. The edifice just opened is a model of architectural skill, replete with everything that is needed for the convenience, exercise and instruction of the members, and an ornament to the public buildings, if, indeed, it can be classed among such. The building is equipped with a commodious hall suitable for balls or theatrical performances, a bowling alley, reception rooms, cloak rooms and kitchen. The whole is compact, and forms a pretty little structure.

Tuesday afternoon was the announced time for the formal opening of the new hall, and although the building is not yet completed, the main hall was gotten in readiness, and the exercises took place as advertised. Delegates from the various German Societies in Newark, Elizabethport, New Brunswick, Perth Amboy and other places, arrived in town early in the day, and were escorted to the Society's hall on East Second street. Soon after two o'clock, a short procession took place through the principal streets of the city, and preceded by the new city cornet band the members of the local Society and visiting delegates marched to the hall on Somerset street, where the exercises took place.

The new hall was crowded to its utmost capacity, many ladies, members of the City Council and other city officials being in the audience. The interior decorations were modest and neat, consisting principally of flags and evergreens. The exercises opened with an overture, Grotesque, by the orchestra, followed by an address by Mr. Martin Heubner, who spoke in German, with special reference to the new hall, its purpose, and the duties of the members towards the future prosperity of the Society. While the Society was assembled on the stage, Mrs. T. Smith in a few well chosen words presented to Mr. H. Liefke, President of the Board of Trustees, the key to the new building, and he responded appropriately. Calisthenics and horizontal bar exercises by pupils of the training school followed, led by Mr. Fred. Becker. The Casino Maennerchor, Singing Society of Newark rendered a vocal selection, and a song by the Germania Quartette Club of Newark, fairly set the audience wild with enthusiasm. In response to the loud and continued applause, Mr. Wm. Fiahle, one of the quartette, and a former member of the Plainfield Society, sang a delightful tenor solo.

Another pleasing feature of the entertainment was the acrobatic feats by the Leon Bros., of Newark, who did almost everything but tying themselves in a knot. Members of the Park Avenue Social Club contributed some vocal selections.

On account of the length of the programme some of the numbers on the same were necessarily omitted. Part second opened with an overture, "Enchantment," followed by a song by the Plainfield Society, and an exhibition on the horizontal and parallel bars by the National Turn Verein of Newark, Elizabethport Turn Verein and by members of the Turning Section of the Plainfield Gesang and Turn Verein. The Aurora Society of New Brunswick, contributed a vocal selection, and Miss Emma Becker of Newark, sang sweetly a soprano solo, "Forget Me Not," responding to an encore. Several other vocal selections, with piano accompaniment, brought the dedication exercises to a close.

In the evening there was a grand ball, which was also largely attended. Prof. [illegible]'s orchestra furnished the music for dancing, which was continued until an early hour this morning. The following [illegible] composed the various Committees:

Floor Manager—Charles F. Meyer.
Assistants—Fred Becker, Wilbert Marsh.
Reception Committee — Hugo Weigmann, M. [illegible], H. [illegible].
Committee of Arrangements — Carl [illegible], Chairman; Rudolf Koenig, Secretary; William Krause, Treasurer; Henry [illegible], Charles F. Meyer.

Shooting Match.

The members of the shooting section of the Plainfield Gesang and Turn Verein Society, participated in a shooting match at Hyde's range, on Christmas day. Mr. F. Bedfiel made the best record, at 200 yards, and was awarded first prize.

Three More New Houses Almost Ready.

Mr. John W. Moore of Grove street, owner of the property corner of Front street and Washington avenue, has torn down the old dwelling and ice houses which have stood there for years, and is erecting three pretty cottages, which will be ready for occupancy in a few months.

A Watch for the Pastor.

The scholars of the Presbyterian Sunday school, at Dunellen, held their Christmas anniversary on Monday evening. An interesting programme consisting of vocal and instrumental music, recitations etc., was followed by the distribution of gifts to the scholars and teachers. During the evening, Rev. Mr. Stellinger, the pastor, was presented with a handsome gold watch.

New Jersey Game and Fish Protective Society.

The Board of Directors of the New Jersey Game and Fish Protective Society met in this city, December 28, with the full Board present. Mr. P. C. Ohl was elected President to fill a vacancy, and the other officers of the society are: Treasurer, W. R. Jones; Secretary, W. L. Force. The meeting was an enthusiastic one in relation to matters pertaining to the protection of game. The Secretary reported that during the year 46 arrests had been made and fines collected from violators of the game laws. Twenty-five new members were admitted during the year, and fifteen new applications were sent in above evening.

Mrs. Steed Sings a Girlhood Song on Her Ninetieth Christmas.

Mrs. Thomas Steed has often told her relatives that she would live to see ninety Christmases.

Christmas was the fulfillment of her prophecy, and to celebrate the event she treated her children, grandchildren and great grandchildren to a Christmas song of her girlhood days as she sang it in the little chapel which she then attended. Her voice proved still sweet, especially to so appreciative an audience.

Mr. Steed, who died about fifteen years ago, was the proprietor of the hat factory at Wetumpka Falls, which building was still standing on the bank of Somerset street, until recently, where the stone crusher now is.

Since her husband's death, Mrs. Steed has made her home with her son-in-law, Mr. Aaron Allen. The aged lady enjoys the best of health, goes all over the house, and makes the long Winter evenings pass pleasantly for all with her personal reminiscences of many years ago. She bids fair to see her one hundredth Christmas.

Second Poverty Cotillion.

The second Poverty Cotillion was given December 26 by Miss Kittie Stewart of 66 West Seventh street. Owing to the sudden illness of Mrs. Stewart, it was held at the home of Miss Gussie Murray on Central avenue. The affair was, if anything, a greater success than the first one, and many new and unique figures were introduced.

Mr. Fred W. Walz led the Cotillion, assisted by Mr. Howard W. Beebe. Among those who participated were Miss Gussie K. Murray, Miss Kittie Stewart, Miss Alice Fairbairn; Miss Libbie Johnson and Miss Fanny Stewart of New York; Miss Lillian Dorman, Miss Lisa Hart, Miss Janette Goddard, Miss Bela, Miss Josanne Harte, Miss Elaine Marsett, Miss Kathie Yates, Miss Carrie Streuli, Miss Sadie Hayes, Miss Clara Corliss, Miss Jean Erickson, Miss Sadie Hunter, Miss Hattie Gardner, Miss Emily Tracy, Mr. and Mrs. Louis G. Timpson, Messrs Fred W. Walz, Howard W. Beebe, G. Harry Squires, E. Louis Walz, Geo. S. Beebe, Marion S. Ackerman, John F. Munn, Jos. W. Sandford, Frank F. VanBuren, E. M. VanBuren, Percy H. Stewart, Chas L. Hyde, Jr., Frank Hyde, F. Rittenhouse of Washington, W. Wright of New York, Mr. Borden, Messrs Dexter Tiffany, Everts Tracy, A. D. Shepard, Jr., of Fanwood, Chas. Dumont of Brooklyn, R. A. Fairbairn, A. Streuli, F. E. Streuli.

A CHRISTMAS FESTIVAL THAT TWO HUNDRED ENJOYED.

The Seventh Day Baptist people, of this city, are—as we have had occasion to say before—the great originators of novel celebrations, entertainments and festivals. It goes without saying therefore, that their Sabbath school celebrated Christmas, December 26, at the Park House, in a way that was entirely new, entirely enjoyable, and entirely gratifying. The Entertainment Committee were: Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Titsworth, Mr. and Mrs. George Titsworth, Miss Anna Titsworth and Mr. David Titsworth.

Cards of invitation admitted the members of the congregation, the scholars and their friends, and at seven o'clock they crowded the parlors and hall that were most profusely and tastefully decorated with greens and bunting by a committee consisting of Mr. Arthur Titsworth's class—the Misses Mabel Potter, Florence Titsworth, Grace Lewis, Lu Clawson, Grace Randolph and Messrs. Frank Clawson, William Hubbard, Asa Randolph and Mr. Rogers.

One of the parlors was shut off by a scarlet curtain, and before this the evening's programme was begun. Tennyson's "Dream of Fair Women" was read as expressively as only Miss Anna Titsworth of all our elocutionists can read it. The poem was illustrated during its progress, by picturesque and finely arranged tableaux.

A song by ten little begowned and night-capped damsels, followed. "We are all nodding for Santa Claus to come," was sung by these sweet-voiced maidens whose names were: Eva Lewis, Lizzie Allis, Violet Truell, Myrtie Randolph, May Rose, Bessie Randolph, Edith Titsworth, Ethel Titsworth, Bertha Mitchell and Nellie Miller.

The drawing of the curtain then revealed a "real, live cottage"—its bright red bricks making a brilliant contrast to the snow-covered roof. Over the cottage door was the name "Santa Claus," and three little ladies—Lizzie Allis, Mabel Mitchell and Eva Lewis—besieged it in behalf of the Sabbath school. After much effort they succeed in arousing Santa's dwarf attendants—Eddie Lewis and Arthur Spicer, the Deacons' sons—and finally awakened the old gentleman himself—Mr. Lou Titsworth—who appeared above the chimney.

An amusing dialogue took place, in which Santa states that he doesn't know how he came to forget the Seventh Day Sabbath scholars, and regrets it very much; but, he declares, his presents are all given away and his reindeers are turned out to pasture for another year. But he calls the Queen of the Fairies—Miss Ethel Titsworth, and her attendants Edith Titsworth and Bertha Mitchell, gorgeously attired—to his aid; and by her magic spell the walls of the cottage fall away and reveal a mammoth tree covered with gifts for all the little ones.

Supper was subsequently served in the dining rooms, which were decorated with hundreds of lighted Japanese lanterns. Fully two hundred were seated at long tables that were heavy laden with pyramids of fruit and flowers, transparent forms of many colored jellies, bowls of salads and quantities of every good thing. The Refreshment Committee consisted of Mrs. F. A. Dunham, Mrs. D. E. Titsworth, Mrs. J. G. Miller, Mrs. J. D. Titsworth, Miss Lucy Dunham, Mrs. J. N. Vanderbilt, Mrs. D. W. Rogers, Miss Nancy Randolph and Mrs. Edward Stillman.

The Legislative Session.

The approaching session of the Legislature promises to be one of the most important and exciting in the history of the State. There is a United States Senator to elect; an effort will be made to repeal the Local-Option-High-License law; wholesale changes of the Legislative districts are proposed; and other measures of deep and general interest will be considered. The Democratic majority is very small—one in the Senate and four in the House—and the struggle over these partisan schemes will be close and exciting.

Too Insignificant for Mr. Brady.

Mr. Bernard Brady, whose dwelling was recently damaged by fire, was offered—as stated in yesterday's PRESS—something towards reimbursement for his loss by the fire insurance company whose policy he had but which had expired, last September.

The sum offered, Mr. Brady says, was ten dollars—but a small part of his loss. This, he told a PRESS reporter, he refused because, he thought, it was only done as a cheap advertisement for the company, and was too small a sum to be of any service to him.

Christmas at Hope Chapel.

About three hundred persons gathered in Hope chapel, December 26, to witness the regular Christmas entertainment of the Sunday school. Mr. H. C. Squires, the Superintendent, presided, and announced the numbers from an informal programme, which consisted of singing and recitations by the scholars, and an address by the Superintendent. During the evening Santa Claus appeared and presented to Janitor Philip Stewart a purse of $25 for his faithful services.

The members of the infant class each received gifts, and candy and oranges were distributed among the older members.

A Silver Wedding Surprise.

Mr. Jacob E. VanWinkle and his wife, of 19 Park avenue, were surprised by their brothers, sisters, nephews and nieces, Monday evening. The date was the 25th anniversary of their wedding, and the company enthusiastically celebrated it besides leaving more lasting tokens of their esteem behind them in the shape of a number of useful and ornamental presents.

The surprise was in charge of Mr. and Mrs. Edward VanWinkle, and was most successfully carried out. The guests numbered twenty-two. Mr. Jacob VanWinkle is a brother of ex-Mayor John H. VanWinkle of North Plainfield, and of ex-City Treasurer Jeremiah VanWinkle.

Inventions and Discoveries of Jerseymen.

The following are the patents granted to citizens of New Jersey during the past week, and reported for this paper:

H. F. Cleve, Lyndhurst, soda water apparatus. C. N. Dutton, Camden, oscillating meter. S. R. Gardner, Port Oglden, platform spring for vehicles. H. Hussong, Camden, dyeing machine. J. Illingworth, Newark, ingot former. H. Kadow, clutch for bags. W. A. Martel, South Orange, stove lid. J. Marthaler, Jersey City, flooring. W. Orr, Trenton, wire cloth lathing. E. S. Parsons, Elizabeth, machine for cutting off blanks for needles. J. Scully, South Amboy, machine for unloading cars. A. Snow, Chambersburg, pottery kiln. A. S. Staats, Newark, curb stop.

The Lighted Candles on the Altar.

Before preaching his Christmas morning sermon, the Rev. S. P. Simpson, rector of the Church of Our Savior, Netherwood, took occasion to congratulate the congregation upon the prosperity of the church, and to acknowledge the gifts of a new altar and its various decorations of coverings, candle sticks, etc., which were used for the first time on that occasion.

They were gifts, he said, of those who were moved to make them by their interest in the church; but if they were objected to by any one, they could be withdrawn. He spoke of the symbolism of the lighted candles on the altar, and the object lesson they were designed to keep before the mind of the worshipper.

Xmas With the Colored Folks.

Mt. Olive Baptist Sunday school held its Christmas festival December 26, and the scholars had a right merry good time. Mr. S. B. Joseph, the Superintendent, was the presiding officer, and the programme was made up as follows:

Carol—"Christmas Morn has Come Again" .... School.
Prayer .... Pastor.
Carol—"Christmas" .... School.
Punch and Judy.
Vocal Duett .... By the Misses Vail.
Singing—"Watching for Santa Claus"—By seven little ones.
Presentation of gifts.

At the conclusion of the above programme, the scholars and teachers adjourned to the Sunday school room, where ice cream and cake were served in abundance. The Messrs Martin Bros. also favored the audience with some vocal and instrumental music. The candy which was to have been distributed in boxes did not arrive in time, and it will therefore be given to the scholars on Sunday next.

TUESDAY'S SHOOTING.

There was a large attendance of the sporting fraternity present at the Middlesex Gun Club grounds at Dunellen, Tuesday, to witness and take part in the several events arranged for the day. Representatives were present from the Essex, Jersey City Heights, Suburban, Union and Scotch Plains Gun Clubs, and enjoyed the day's sport, personally conducted by Mr. S. G. Smith, the efficient President of the Middlesex Club. The shooting was from five Keystone traps, and according to the Keystone system.

In the forenoon there was a match for $50, between two teams composed of "Tee Kay" and N. Apgar on one side, and Clifford and D. Terry on the other. The match was at 25 blue rocks each. The two former broke 42 out of a possible 50, and won the match, their competitors scoring 41 points. The match was shot in fourteen minutes, showing the rapidity by which the shells can be delivered from the traps, under the Keystone system.

The afternoon was devoted to live and clay bird sweepstake shooting, and some excellent scores were made.

The Congregationalists' Christmas.

The Christmas Festival of the Congregational Sunday school, December 26, was a most satisfying affair in every way to all present; and the large collection of toys and other gifts that were gathered together—as is the scholars' annual custom—for the Children's Home, brought lots of joy to the little inmates of that institution.

Superintendent George W. Rockfellow presided over the exercises in the chapel on West Seventh street, which consisted of singing, recitations and responsive readings. Miss Lulu Fuller and Mr. Ernest Suffern gave "Two Welcomes;" Miss Carrie Fuller recited an enjoyable piece; Mr. Ernest Suffern told of "Mr. Nobody;" and Miss Clara VanFleet recited "Three in a bed."

The appropriate dialogue of "Emmanuel," was taken part in by Eva DeCamp, Ella DeCamp, Maggie Weseman, Grace Overton, Maggie Hurlburt, Nellie Rock, Clara VanFleet and Fred Gaub, in a very praiseworthy manner. Miss Grace Overton recited "After Christmas," and Miss Clara Force, "The Stranger in the Pew." The Misses Elsie Suffern, Bessie Pound, Mary Whiton and Julia Belknap, joined in a pleasing dialogue of "Christmas Time."

There was a Christmas tree twenty feet high, and loaded with presents for all in the infant class, and there were quantities of candy and oranges for everybody.

THE COUNCIL MEETING.

ADJOURNED SINE DIE WITHOUT CEREMONY.

The Council of 1888 held its final meeting 28th ult., and considered a generous amount of regular and unfinished business. It was nearly nine o'clock before the regular order of business was taken up, and the session was a lengthy one in consequence. The roll call showed the following members present: Messrs Marsh, Dunham, Dumont, Erickson, Myers, Moffett and Squires.

President Marsh said it was necessary to fill the vacancies in the Second and Fourth Wards caused by the resignations of ex-Councilmen Wm. Taylor and T. J. Carey. Mr. E. J. Ginna was elected from the Second ward, and Mr. E. B. Clark from the Fourth.

The chair assigned the newly elected members on the following Committees: Mr. Clark chairman of the Printing and Stationery, second on the Auditing and third on the Salaries, Officers and Election Committee. Mr. Ginna was appointed chairman of the Finance Committee, second on the Fire, Water and Lamps and third on the License Committee. Mr. Myers was placed first on the Laws and Ordinance Committee, second on the License and third on the Street Committee. Hon. Job Male, the Mayor, administered the oath of office, and the Council proceeded to business, by the clerk reading the minutes of the previous meeting.

An invitation was received and accepted from the Gesang and Turn Verein Society inviting Council to attend the dedication of the Society's new hall, to-morrow afternoon. Tickets of admission accompanied the invitation.

A petition from Henry Liefke, asking permission to erect a wagon shed covered with corrugated iron in the rear of No. 29 West Front street, was received, referred and subsequently granted with the proviso that the structure shall not be larger than 100 feet square, by 12 feet in height.

An extra lamp on Clinton avenue was petitioned for, but the matter was referred together with a petition for a stone or board walk facing the Stewart property on West Sixth street.

Mr. Geo. R. Rockafellow presented his bond as Constable. It was referred and later accepted and filed.

Sundry poor claims, election and registration bills, fire department claims, and claims for police services, salaries and street work were presented and referred to the proper committees, who examined them and transferred them into the hands of the Auditing Committee. Other claims of a miscellaneous nature were referred as follows:

John Johnson, for collecting taxes, sundry claims amounting to $1,407.82; F. A. Dunham, for collecting delinquent taxes, $1.47 and $3.12; J. A. Thickstun, coal, $12; T. J. Carey, incidentals, $4.50; Geo. W. Rockfellow, bil. $8.17; M. C. Bird, rent of station house, $62.50; W. M. Stillman, rent of Council chamber, $70; W. L. Force & Bro., advertising, $13.50; Times Printing and Publishing Co., advertising, $21.75; T. W. Morrison, $66.90; F. A. Dunham, $11 and $150; Coward & Murray, for storing globes, $24; Mrs. TenEyck, nurse of scarlet fever patient, $40; Geo. W. Rockfellow, for provisions furnished typhoid fever patient, $11.40.

The monthly reports of the Treasurer and Collector were received and filed, after being examined by the Finance Committee.

Chief Carey submitted his yearly report. It was in substance as follows: whole number of arrests made during the year, 217, of which 198 were men and 19 women. The offences are given as follows: drunk, 53; drunk and disorderly, 40; disorderly conduct, 35; riding on railroad cars, 17; fighting, 20; theft, 8; fast driving 6; insulting ladies on the street, 5; illegal selling, 5; violation of hack ord., 4; peddling without license, 3; obstructing sidewalks, 3; indecent language, 3; trespassing of animals, 3; interfering with officers, 2; swimming in nudity, 2; suspicious characters, 2; breaking windows, 2; indecent conduct, 3; playing ball on street, 1; incendiary, 1. The disposition of the parties arrested was as follows: fined, 153; reprimanded, 27; sentenced to county jail, 34; to State Prison, 3. The total amount of fines collected was $1,103.

The report continues: "City Judge Suydam has been uncompromising in his rulings to maintain the supremacy of law, meeting out proper justice to all violators of city ordinances." The Chief acknowledges his indebtedness to Corporation Counsel Marsh for his wise direction and useful advice in the many cases requiring legal knowledge. The report was received and filed.

Street Commissioner Angleman also submitted his yearly report, showing that during the year 8,300 lineal feet of roadway have been spread with crushed stone, making with formerly stoned streets, nearly 20 miles of macadamized driveways. The thoroughfares thus permanently improved during the year are Putnam street, Franklin place, East Second street, West Second street, West Fourth street, Plainfield avenue, and South Second street. On these streets private citizens have contributed generally for the cost of stone, the city paying for spreading the same. A considerable portion of the street appropriation this year has been expended for cracked stone and labor necessary for keeping recently macadamized streets in repair. This work has been done on Park avenue, Central avenue, Broadway, East and West Front street, and on Crescent, Belvidere and Woodland avenues. Other work was done on gravel roads—Randolph road and Arlington avenue have also received attention. The report was filed.

The City Judge also submitted his quarterly report, showing that 44 persons had been arraigned before him during the quarter; 25 were fined, and fines amounting to $149 have been collected. Filed.

Mr. Clark from the Special Committee reported that the matter of adjusting the Schorb smallpox claim had been examined. The committee reported in favor of repudiating any claim for damage to business, and recommended that $185 be paid the claimant in full for services rendered on account of the smallpox patient, Joseph Shultice, who was taken ill with the disease and quarantined in the Schorb building, a year ago, with the understanding, however, that said claimant pay over the said amount on account of delinquent taxes. The report was received and recommendation adopted.

The Alms Committee presented a partial report on the claims sent in during the evening, and the bills were sent to the Auditing Committee.

Mr. Ginna asked permission to have the annual report of the Finance Committee laid over until the next meeting. The request was granted, a motion by Mr. Dumont providing that when the report was completed, it be filed with the Clerk. Mr. Ginna said that the City Treasurer had not his report compiled at five o'clock this evening. Consequently the Finance Committee was unable to report.

Mr. Erickson, from the Fire, Water and Lamps Committee, returned for examination a coal bill from the D. J. Boice estate; the committee returned, without recommending, the petition of Mrs. De Forrest and others, presented at a former meeting, asking for additional lights on West Second street. The same gentleman submitted a renewal of the street lighting contract, as properly executed. The report was received and the contract accepted.

Mr. Dumont, from the Street Committee reported on the Weber bill, sent in at a former meeting, claiming damages by reason of the Liberty street sewer overflowing, and water backing up so as to flood his cellar. He submitted an opinion in writing from the Corporation Counsel, stating that their was nothing on the statute books that would make the city responsible in this particular case. The report was received and filed.

The same Councilman reported back, without the Committee's recommendation, the several petitions for street railway privileges. He said the Committee had conferred with representatives of the various companies, and they had agreed to submit more definite propositions.

The Collector's bond, for $15,000 with the names of Levi Hetfield, Andrew Love and John Ross, was returned by the Finance Committee and ordered recorded.

Mr. Ginna introduced a resolution which prevailed, directing the City Judge to issue his warrant to Collector Johnson for the collection of delinquent taxes. The resolution also abolished the office of delinquent tax collector

The Street Commissioner was, upon motion of Mr. Erickson, requested to ascertain and report what he could obtain for the globes now being stored at a cost of $24 a year.

Mr. Clark called attention to the town clock, which he says is running on "half time."

The ordinances relating to the collection of taxes, and also to the duties of the City Clerk; also the ordinance in relation to the storing of kerosene, were all called up and adopted on the third reading. Some opposition was made to the latter ordinance, which provides that not more than five barrels of petroleum or kerosene oil can be kept in stock at one time. Messrs Dunham and Squires voted against its adoption.

A poor claim of M. Shannas, ordered paid by the Council of 1887, was withdrawn and cancelled, as the claimant could not be found.

The Auditing Committee reported on the claims presented during the evening, and they were ordered paid. The clerk was instructed to make requisition of the School Board for its pro rata of taxes for 1888; the Clerk was also requested to send a bill to the Central Railroad Company for a portion of the cost for police services at the station.

Council adjourned sine die at 10:30 P. M.

He Will Play a Baptist Organ Elsewhere.

Mr. Clarence B. Ike, Organist at the Church of the Holy Cross, and whose term has expired, has accepted a position at the Baptist church, Elizabeth, N. J. The vacancy in the North Plainfield church, has not yet been filled.

Young People's Sociable.

The members of the Young People's Society of the Congregational church held a sociable at the residence of Miss Hattie Barnet, on Broadway, Monday evening. The attendance was not so large as on former occasions, but a pleasant and profitable evening was had by those present. The programme included a well-rendered solo by Mr. Moon, entitled: "The Blue Alsatian Mountains."

The Return of the Missing.

Mr. Abram Vail, of 22 Peace street, returned home on the morning of New Year's Day, after an absence of twenty-two days during which his whereabouts were unknown.

Mr. Vail states that he has been to San Francisco, which is the destination suggested by the reports in THE PRESS of his disappearance and the circumstances surrounding it.

Park Avenue Baptist Sunday School Election.

At the annual election of officers of the Park Avenue Baptist Sunday school, held Sunday, the following were elected for the ensuing year: Superintendent, Mr. Theodore I. Runyon; Assistant-Superintendent, Mr. David M. Runyon; Secretary, Mr. A. J. Laing; Treasurer, Mr. Edwin B. Day; Librarian, Mr. Nelson Van Winkle. It was also voted to hold a Teachers' Meeting once a week, for the purpose of preparing the lessons and talking them over together, on Tuesday evenings, beginning the first Tuesday evening after the annual Week of Prayer.

The officers also adopted the first Constitution and By-Laws the Sunday school has ever had, after carefully discussing each article and section.

In the evening Dr. Lowry's Christmas programme, entitled: "The Royal Son" was creditably rendered by the school and its friends. It included a solo by Miss E. Runyon, and appropriate recitations by Miss A. Spangenburg and Mrs. Dilts.

Sore Throat Spreading in the Valley Back of North Plainfield.

THE PRESS exclusively told the story last week of the death of Victor Mercier, of Union Village, a lad of 14 years, who caught a cold from breaking through the ice into the pond, and died of pneumonia a few days afterwards.

His death occurred on Monday, and on Thursday, a sister, Lena, twelve years of age, died of quinsy. This made the fourth death among the children of Mr. and Mrs. Mercier, in six weeks, and at present another boy, of eleven years, lies dangerously ill.

It is reported today, that the parents are also stricken down; and other families are threatened. The neighbors are so frightened at this spread of the epidemic of sore throat, that no help is offered. Even the store keepers, it is said, refuse to sell to any members of the sick families. Mr. Mercier's case is indeed a sad one as he is out of work and has no prospects of earning a cent again until Spring opens and the brick yards are at work.

THE BISHOP'S VISIT.

There was a large congregation at the Church of the Holy Cross at the afternoon services, Sunday, to welcome Bishop Scarborough who had accepted an invitation to be present. The Rev. S. P. Simpson of the Church of Our Savior, Netherwood, was also present and assisted in the services. Among the congregation were nearly all the members of Grace church choir, together with their leader, Mr. W. B. Cock. The boys occupied seats together. They made a nice appearance, and took the deepest interest in the singing and services. It was the first time they had heard the surpliced choir.

The Bishop did not preach a sermon. He addressed the congregation, however, congratulating them on having a surpliced choir, and the recent improvements to the church and Sunday school buildings, which he said were a sure sign of prosperity and of earnestness on the part of the rector, Rev. T. Logan Murphy and others who labored for the welfare of the church. He encouraged them to continue in the good work, and complimented the boys and young men consisting the choir, for the noble work they were engaged in, and the manner in which their singing was rendered. It was natural that errors should occur, he said, as they were not born musicians. There was great labor attached to the training of a choir, and this should be borne in mind by professional musical critics, and they should not be too severe in their criticisms, but should encourage rather than discourage them in their efforts. He had often heard unjust criticisms which had pained him, and he knew from experience that the boys and young men would become more and more in love with their work and training, and he was sure that some of them would in time be studying for the ministry.

The Bishop's remarks were listened to with the deepest interest, and at the close of the services many of the congregation waited to speak with him and welcome him. He received them most cordially.

—It is said that the acoustic properties in the new Gesang building on Somerset street, are excellent, and that every word uttered from the stage can be heard in every part of the house.

The Murder Case Called.

The trial of Morris Nolan for the murder of Farmer Race, was called in the Somerset County Court at Somerville Jan. 2. The jury includes four North Plainfielders as follows: George Collins, Abram King, L. R. Blackford and John Emmons.

ALTERNATE REP.—T. Cosén.

The Evening School for Men.

This new department of our public school gives much encouragement to its friends, whose hopes for it were mingled at first with some anxiety. The attendance, good order and general spirit of work are very promising. The Board has determined that an average attendance of at least forty must be maintained to warrant their continuing the school. This limit has never yet been approached. The smallest number present at any session since the opening, was fifty-six, while the average for the three weeks of work was sixty-six; that for the last week being seventy-two. This excellent attendance is not the only encouraging feature. The material of the school is as hopeful as its numbers. The boys and men who have availed themselves of this opportunity are as a rule far from dull, and seem eager to make the time spent as profitable as possible.

In this department it is the aim of the Board to furnish an education suited to the needs of the every-day life of the class of men and boys who attend the school. Instruction is confined to the fundamental subjects. Arithmetic takes the most prominent place, as that is found to be the study most needed. With this, reading, writing, spelling and the correct use of language is taught throughout the school. In addition, the lower grades have instruction in geography, and for the more advanced class there is some elementary work in the principles and practice of bookkeeping. It is the purpose also to provide for this advanced class some simple instruction in the history and theory of our government such as will tend to make the men more intelligent citizens.

The present success and promise of the school is largely due to the excellent corps of volunteer-teachers, who, besides their interest, bring from their work in the day school's experience in teaching and knowledge of the most efficient methods.

The sessions of the school will begin again on the evening of Wednesday, January 2, at half-past seven; at which time any who wish to attend the school and have not yet done so, may make application at the High school building on Fifth street.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

AN ORDINANCE

Concerning the storage of Petroleum or Kerosene Oil within the City of Plainfield.

The Inhabitants of the City of Plainfield, by their Common Council, do enact as follows:

Section 1. That no person or persons shall store, or keep, or have on hand, or permit to be stored, kept or had on hand at one time, within the city of Plainfield, petroleum or kerosene oil in quantity exceeding two hundred and twenty-five barrels.

Sec. 2. That no person or persons shall store, keep, or have on hand, or permit to be stored, kept, or had on hand, at one time within the city of Plainfield, petroleum, or kerosene oil in quantity exceeding five barrels, unless the same shall be contained within a building of one story only above the ground, the outside walls and roof of which building are of brick, stone, iron, slate or other incombustible substance, and unless further there shall be constructed, on the premises adjacent to said building, a substantial wall of masonry, iron or other incombustible substance, which wall shall be of such dimensions and shall be placed as to make it impossible, in case the maximum quantity of petroleum or kerosene oil named in section 1 of this ordinance should escape from such building, for any of such petroleum or kerosene oil to flow beyond the said wall.

Sec. 3. That any person or persons, convicted under sections 1 or 2 of this ordinance, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding sixty days, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Sec. 4. That no petroleum or kerosene oil, whether in barrels, casks, tanks, or other vessels, shall be stored or kept upon any sidewalk or roadway of said city, nor shall barrels, casks, tanks or other vessels that have been used to contain petroleum or kerosene oil be stored or kept upon any sidewalk or roadway of said city, and any person, who shall violate any of the provisions of this section, shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine not exceeding fifty dollars for each and every offense.

Sec. 5. That upon conviction of any person or persons under any section of this ordinance, it shall be lawful for the chief engineer of the Plainfield fire department to serve a notice, written or printed, or partly printed and partly written, upon the person or persons so convicted, requiring all petroleum or kerosene oil and all barrels, casks, tanks or other vessels that have been used to contain the same to be removed from the premises described in the complaint on which said conviction was obtained, within five days from date of service of such notice, and for every failure to comply with such notice, within said five days from date of service, the person or persons so failing to comply with such notice shall be deemed guilty of an offense under this section, and upon conviction be punishable by a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars or imprisonment not exceeding sixty days, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Approved December 31, 1888.

AN ORDINANCE

Concerning the Collection of Taxes.

The Inhabitants of the City of Plainfield by their Common Council do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. That the Collector of Taxes of said city shall receive as full compensation for the faithful performance of all the duties of his said office from the first Monday in January, A. D. 1889, the sum of fifteen hundred dollars per annum, payable in monthly installments of one hundred and twenty-five dollars, and the City Clerk shall prepare and render to the Board of Education of said city a bill for the portion of such salary payable by said Board of Education, to be calculated on a pro rata basis, as soon as the tax levies for the year shall be determined.

SEC. 2. That in case the Common Council shall at any time, designate any officer, other than the collector of taxes, as the officer to receive and execute any warrant or warrants for the collection of taxes, such officer, so designated, shall so long as he shall continue to hold said office, have free access to all books of the collector.

Adopted December 29, 1888.
Approved December 31, 1888.
JOB MALE, Mayor.
Attest: O. B. LEONARD, City Clerk.

AN ORDINANCE

HARPER'S BAZAR.
ILLUSTRATED.

HARPER'S BAZAR will continue to maintain its reputation as an unequalled family journal. Its art illustrations are of the highest order, its literature is of the choicest kind, and its Fashion and Household departments of the most practical and economical character. Its pattern-sheet supplements and fashion-plates alone will save its readers ten times the cost of subscription, and its articles on decorative art, social etiquette, house-keeping, cookery, etc., make it indispensable to every household. Its bright short stories and timely essays are among the best published; and not a line is admitted to its columns that could offend the most fastidious taste. Among the attractions of the new volume will be serials stories by MRS. FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT, MRS. ALEXANDER, WILLIAM BLACK, and THOMAS HARDY, and a series of papers on nursery management by MRS. CHRISTINE TERHUNE HERRICK.

The Unexpected Death of a Former Prominent Plainfielder.

Mr. E. Holbrook Depew, an ex-Councilman and ex-Fire Commissioner of this city, dropped dead in a hotel at Milwaukee, Dec. 27.

Mr. Depew has been for some time past acting as inspector of risks for one of the largest fire insurance corporations of the country, and in such service traveled all over the United States. He was on an extended trip at the time of his death, and was not expected to return until July of next year. Word was received a few days ago, that he had had a stroke of apoplexy on Christmas, and in the absence of positive information it is natural to suppose that another similar attack was the cause of his death.

The deceased leaves a widow and adult children, residents of this city.

Mr. Fred Thorn of Craig place, entertained a few friends on New Year's Eve.

Mr. Thomas Hale of East Fifth street, has returned from an extended trip to Boston.

Mr. E. V. L[illegible] of West Fifth street, is slowly recovering from a severe attack of rheumatism.

Miss Walters of Brooklyn, is the guest of Miss Nettie Allison of Somerset street, North Plainfield.

Mr. J. Phillips of Canada, is visiting at the residence of his brother, Mr. Percy Phillips at Dunellen.

Miss Grace H. Wheeler, of New Rochelle, N. Y., is visiting friends in Plainfield and Evona.

Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Shepard and family, will spend the Winter months at The Buckingham, New York City.

Dr. and Mrs. Charles Stillman of New York city, spent New Year's Day with relatives and friends in this city.

The Misses Kate C. and Jennie B. Wilson of Bound Brook, spent a part of the Holiday week with friends in this city.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Degraw of Philadelphia, are visiting at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. B. E. Force of West Fourth street.

Through Miss Eleanor Shepard, the Mission Band of the Presbyterian churches of this city, has been presented with fifty dollars.

Mr. "Tim" Day, who had the misfortune to break his leg, a few weeks since, is again able to get out with the aid of crutches.

Mr. Edward O. Hale, of Cranford, has been appointed Assistant Deputy in the Sub-Treasury office, New York, at a salary of $3,000.

Mr. Chas. Fowlison of North Plainfield, returns to Springfield today, to resume his course of training for a Y. M. C. A., secretaryship.

The members of the Tuesday Night Social Club were entertained at the residence of Mrs. Mann[illegible], on Crescent avenue, Monday evening.

Mrs. V. Vintlaune, and her two sons, Masters Ethan and Victor, of Port Orange, Fla., are visiting at the residence of Mr. A. Saltzman on Central avenue.

Miss Emma F. Martin of Somerset street, North Plainfield, left Monday afternoon for New York State, where she will spend a couple of weeks with friends.

Miss Ella Conkey and a few invited friends, witnessed the closing of leap year at the residence of Mr. N. W. French on West Fourth street, Monday evening.

Miss Nettie Bilyeau of this city was united in marriage to Mr. George Wagner of Elizabeth, at the residence of the bride's sister, in Elizabethport on Christmas day.

A sociable was given at the residence of Mr. John Milliken at Dunellen, on Monday evening. Dancing and refreshments were included in the evening's programme.

Mr. William F. Kaufman and family have returned from a many months visit in the Adirondacks, and all are in the best of health. Mr. Kaufman, particularly, is much improved.

Mrs. L. M. French and daughter, Miss Minnie, who were injured in a runaway accident, recently, have so far recovered from the effects of their injuries they received, as to be able to go out.

Mr. and Mrs. Leander Lovell entertained the members of the choir of the Crescent Avenue church, at their residence on the Crescent, Saturday evening. There were refreshments and dancing.

The reception given to Prof. Miller in Assembly Hall, on Monday evening, was a pleasant affair. It was attended by High School graduates from the classes of '81 up to and including 1888.

Mr. Otto Arend of East Second street, on behalf of Mrs. E. Treft of Newark, evening presented to the Plainfield Gesang and Turn Verein Society, a New Year's Gift, in the shape of a $150 check.

Mr. Jesse H. Griffin, a resident of New York State, will deliver an address at the Friends' meeting house, on Peace street, under the auspices of the Friends' Temperance and Literary Society, on Sunday afternoon next.

Miss Nettie Homan entertained a select few of her friends at her residence, West Fifth street, New Year's Eve, at which time the old year was danced out, and many pleasant greetings for the new year were exchanged.

Mr. Geo. Miller, one of the proprietors of Laing's Hotel, was the recipient of a handsome silver-headed cane, presented to him by Mr. R. W. Maxwell, on Monday evening. The inscription on the cane was: "To my boarding boss."

Mrs. Susan Stillman died of old age at her residence, 46 Central avenue, at midnight of Tuesday, in the 91st year of her age. She was the widow of Thos. Stillman whose death occurred twenty-three years ago on the same day of the year.

Miss Fannie Sanson gave a "progressive angling" party at her residence on Broad street, Westfield, Tuesday. The first prize was awarded to Mr. Will Howe, and Miss Hart secured the "booby" prize. Refreshments were served in abundance, followed by dancing.

The holiday number of the Royal Craftsman, Assemblyman Ulrich's paper, is a neat production, and is a credit to both the editor and publisher alike. It is filled with a generous amount of miscellaneous reading matter, together with much matter of interest to the Masonic fraternity.

An evening sociable was held at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. I. H. Boehm, No. 7 West Front street, Tuesday, that was heartily enjoyed by a large number of the friends and acquaintances of the host and hostess. Dancing was a prominent feature of the evening's enjoyment.

At two o'clock of Christmas morning, occurred the death of Mrs. Rebecca DeCamp, widow of David B. DeCamp. She was within four days of completing her 79th year. Her sons who survive her, Messrs Alonzo and Hiram DeCamp, are well known in this city. She died at the residence of the latter in Chester, N. J.

Mr. John Crowley and Miss Emma Clifton both of this city were married by Rev. T. Logan Murphy at the residence of the latter, on New Year's Eve. The newly-married couple took up their residence near the Pond Tool Works. The bride is a sister-in-law of Assistant Foreman Charles Foerster of the Pond works.

Brother Henry Woodland, whose name has been enrolled as a member of Jerusalem Lodge for over twenty years, succeeds Worshipful Brother Chandler as Worshipful Master of Jerusalem Lodge. We trust he will preside as capably and harmoniously over the Lodge as he did over the organ in years gone by.—Royal Craftsman.

One of the many good stories in the Christmas number of The Journalist, is by Mr. Walter Irving Clark, a young newspaper man of this city. It is a very well told tale very smoothly written, and so excels in many of the best qualities of style that it proves the author's thorough appreciation of the better methods of newspaper writing.

Mr. Ernest O. Chamberlin, who may be remembered as having at one time been connected with the Herald that was sunk in the sands of Bound Brook journalism, and also editor of the defunct Bulletin, published in this city, is now at Indianapolis, writing the New York Sun despatches relating to President-elect Harrison's daily life and future plans.

UNIVERSAL REJOICING.

The Christmas Anniversaries in the Various Churches—What Our Corps of Reporters Saw and Heard Concerning the Festivities—Old "Santy" at His Best.

[From THE PRESS of Dec. 28.]

The eager expectations of the Sunday school children were fully gratified at the annual Christmas anniversaries held in the several churches last evening, and many a child went home with hands and hearts filled with candy and joyous spirit, wishing, perhaps, that the Christmas celebrations might be repeated again to-night.

In the several churches wherein was held the Christmas festival, last evening, there was a scene of great activity, yesterday; crates of oranges and cases of candy were unloaded from trucks and carried into the massive structures, where willing hands were in waiting to divide and distribute the dainty sweets, designed to gladden the hearts of the Sunday school children in the evening. So far as our reporters were able to ascertain, being of a modest disposition, nothing happened to mar the evening's enjoyment.

IN THE FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH,

or rather, the church chapel, the seating capacity was taxed to its utmost to accommodate all who applied for admission last evening, and a large number of persons found seats in the galleries. Rev. Dr. Ketcham, the pastor, was an attentive listener, and evidently enjoyed the proceedings. Shortly before eight o'clock, Mrs. H. A. Pope, presiding, called the school to order, and announced the first number on the informal programme, a song, "Carol, Sweetly Carol," by the school. Rev. Dr. Ketcham invoked the divine blessing, and the scholars sang, "Waken Christmas Children." Interspersed was a part piece, entitled, "His Love Embraceth All," which included Father Time and representatives of the months. Each of the representatives in turn quoted a verse appropriate to the season, to which Father Time responded. This was followed by a recitation by Miss Jeanne Derby, entitled, "Mrs. Santa Claus asserts herself"—the young Miss acquitting herself creditably.

Mrs. Pope then announced "The Smith Family from Abroad," and Miss Flora Petrie, a talented lady, read an exhaustive historical sketch of the "remarkable" family, tracing their ancestry from Biblical times down to their relationship with President-elect Harrison. She concluded that the family, or members thereof, would be tendered appointments in Harrison's Cabinet, in which event she extended an invitation for all to visit Washington. Miss Petrie's paper was certainly well constructed, and showed careful thought in its preparation.

An improvised curtain was drawn, disclosing the "Smith family" in all their glory. On the extreme right the head of the popular Dr. Hedges was recognized protruding through an opening in a canvas sheet, and the painting on the canvas represented a man of about 375 pounds avoirdupois. He was known as "John Smith." Next to Dr. Hedges, the "Infant Prodigy" was impersonated by Mrs. C. I. Westervelt with precision, she displaying a pretty face through a hole in the canvas, and at the same time manipulating dolls, rattles and various other toys to perfection. "Aunt Jane," Miss Anna Petrie, represented a comely lady, posed on the extreme left. "Bubby," Mr. Al. Hoagland, helped to make up the picture. "Sonny" and "Sissy," Mr. Chas. Hutchinson and Miss Julia Ketcham, and "Pa" and "Ma," the former impersonated by Mr. John Petrie and the latter by Miss Bessie Blair, completed the "Smith Family." The "family" entertained the large audience for an hour or so with quaint and ancient songs, solos, etc., appropriate for the occasion. The entertainment given by this remarkable family kept the audience in a continual strain of laughter. Miss Josie Petrie accompanied on the piano.

At the conclusion of the programme, a box of candy and an orange was presented to each scholar, and this brought to a close the Christmas anniversary of the First Presbyterian Sunday school.

CRESCENT AVENUE CHURCH.

The primary department of the Crescent Avenue Sunday school, numbering about twenty classes and 140 scholars, assembled in Bethel chapel, yesterday afternoon, at 2:30 o'clock, and enjoyed the holiday festival prepared for them.

Mr. James and Walter Murray exhibited through their polyopticon an assortment of amusing and entertaining pictures, the most admired features of which were the features of the Rev. Mr. Richards and Mr. I. C. Pierson. The principal part of the afternoon's diversion, however, was a "chalk talk" by the artist, Spedon. He proved himself as clever with his tongue as he is with his charcoal and his crayons. His efforts to both instruct and please the audience of little ones, were very successful.

Boxes of candy were distributed to the children, and a committee consisting of Mrs. Fanny Foster, Miss Mary Mosher and Mr. Arthur Baynon served iced-cream and cake galore, to all.

In the evening at eight o'clock, the scholars of the older classes assembled at the same place, but not in very large numbers. One threadbare axiom does not apply to the Crescent Avenue Sunday school—that the roll increases at Christmas and excursion times. Probably one of the smallest gatherings of scholars during the year, was at the Christmas festival.

Mr. H. O. Newman led the singing, and Mr. W. D. Murray introduced Mr. Spedon again. The artist and humorist entertained and instructed the older as successfully as he had the younger audience. Superintendent H. C. Squires, of Hope Mission, presented little Miss Maggie Porter, one of his infant scholars, and she spoke sweetly an appeal for a doll. Iced cream and cake was then tendered those present, at the hands of the members of Mr. W. D. Murray's and Mr. Stephen Cabosse's classes.

TRINITY REFORMED CHURCH.

The elaborate decorations in Trinity Reformed church, described in THE PRESS on Monday, were all left for the Christmas anniversary of the Sunday School, last evening. The main auditorium was comfortably filled with the scholars, teachers and friends of the School. Superintendent E. K. Anthony acted as Master of Ceremonies, and Mr. A. L. Titsworth officiated at the organ, skillfully manipulating the keys. The programme was varied and entertaining. It included, by special request, a duett by Miss K. U. King and Miss Emma Whitlock, entitled: "Glad Bells are Singing"; a recitation, "The Christmas Tree," by Miss Lena Weber, both in German and English dialect; carols by the School, and an interesting and entertaining address by Rev. Dr. Hurlbut. Space will not permit us to individualize, suffice it to say that each and every number on the programme, given below, was creditably rendered:

Singing—"Happy Christmas Bells"	School
Prayer, by the Pastor	Rev Cornelius Schenck
Duett—"Glad Bells are Ringing"	Misses K. U. King and Emma Whitlock.
Recitation—"The Christmas Tree"	Lena Weber
Recitation—"A Christmas Greeting"	Lucy Carroll.
Singing—"Wondrous Star"	School
Recitation	Master Joseph Runyon.
Singing	Infant Class
Address	Rev. Dr. Hurlbut.
Recitation—"My Little Dolly"	Gertie Ther[illegible]
Recitation	[illegible]
Singing—"The Angel Song"	School
Recitation—"Who Loves Best"	Florence Taylor
Short address by the Pastor.
Singing	"Glory to God in the Highest."
Distribution of Presents.

The usual distribution of candy and oranges followed, and Mr. Elias Bird is entitled to the credit for the excellent supply he provided for the children.

The Entertainment Committee was composed of the following persons: Mr. J. H. VanWinkle, Mrs. C. Schenck, Mrs. P. H. Bennett, Miss E. Benedict, Miss S. Berg, Miss N. Mattison.

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH.

The exercises in this church, last evening, were under the immediate supervision of Mme. Alberti, the elocutionist. Miss Minnie Marsh presided at the piano. The exercises opened with a piano solo by Miss Florence Randolph, followed by a reading, "The boy Wanted," by Mme. Alberti, and an address by Mr. Chas. W. McCutchen. This was followed by a Christmas piece entitled "False Sir Santa Claus." The character "Sir Santa Claus" was impersonated by Mr. S. S. McCutchen who occupied a lofty seat, and ridiculed old "Santy," while a chorus of girls and indulgent parents stood by. Mr. L. H. Bigelow assumed the role of "Old Santy." The following persons took part:

Chorus — Misses Minnie Ammerman, Susie Woodland, Ethel Hotchkiss, Emma Case, Florence Serrell, Dolly Seers, Florence Runyon, Grace Bonny, Edgar Serrell.

Indulgent Parents—Mrs. Geo. A. Chapman, Mrs. DeWitt Brokaw, Mrs. L. H. Bigelow, Mrs. B. W. Vail, Miss N. Worth, Miss Maggie Case, Miss Gussie Runyon, Mr. C. McCutchen and Mr. D. Runyon, Santa Claus' Police; H. Runyon, "Boo-Boo Man;" L. W. Randolph, "Whooping Cough Man;" Edgar Serrell, the "Wandering Jew;" Grandfather, Geo. F. Brown; Grandmother, Miss Lizzie Smalley; Fairy Bountiful, Miss Edith Taylor; Jack Frost, W. Runyon; Mrs. Jack Frost, Miss Kitty Case; Jack o' Lantern, Master Willie Thiers.

Handsome boxes of candy were presented to the scholars and teachers, and the members of the infant class received additional gifts in the shape of dolls, etc.

CHURCH OF THE HEAVENLY REST.

Notwithstanding the pouring rain of yesterday, a company of over sixty adults and children of all ages, from the parish of the Heavenly Rest were assembled at the house of Rev. Dr. Taylor for the observance of their annual Christmas festival. Amusements and parlor games were freely indulged in up to the hour of five o'clock, when a bountiful repast was served, of which all showed a proper appreciation, and then after another hour spent in singing carols and the usual seasonable festivities, handsome gifts supplemented with boxes of fruit and candy, were distributed to each one of the happy children. The party broke up at 9 o'clock, when all were sent back in carriages to their homes at Evona.

WARREN MISSION.

At half-past two o'clock of yesterday afternoon, the primary department and the smaller of the intermediate scholars of Warren Mission, numbering about 200, assembled in their chapel. A programme suitable for the little ones was carried out, including singing, recitations, and an entertainment in ventriloquism and mimicry by Prof. Savindo, one of the most remarkable in his line that is in the country. Then followed the usual feast of three C's—cake, cream and candy.

In the evening at 7:30 o'clock, the older scholars enjoyed their festivities. The new Superintendent, Mr. F. E. Moon, presided. There was enjoyable orchestra music under Prof. Fifield, and an address of welcome by Mr. John Voehl.

The assemblage, led by Mr. M. M. Dunham and the orchestra, joined in the grand old hymn, "Coronation." There were recitations by Miss Kitty Dunn, Ida Vermeule and John Voehl, and Prof. Savindo again astonished the audience with his skill. A male quartette from the Crescent Avenue church, Messrs Runyon, Schoonmaker, Baynon, and Gavett—and afterwards Messrs Runyon, Pierson, Baynon and Gavett—sang some beautiful selections.

There were several presentations during the evening, including: A purse of money to Mr. DeWitt Frazee, who had faithfully led the singing with his cornet; and a handsome book to Miss Yates, by her class. Mrs. F. H. Gardner's class of young Bereans, made her a present, and Miss Rachael Mair's class did the same. Mr. C. W. Hillman's class gave twenty dollars to the General Fund of the Mission; and eighteen dollars, the profits of the last entertainment of the Berean Class, was also presented to the Fund through Mr. Gardner, the teacher.

All the members of the school, and their friends, then partook of the bountiful refreshments that were served.

The Programme Committee consisted of Messrs. M. M. Dunham, J. W. Gavett, Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Ryder, and Miss Mabel Gillies. Committee on Refreshments consisted of Mrs. L. V.N. Talmage, Mrs. E. W. Pack, Mrs. Ege, and Messrs C. W. Hillman and F. H. Gardner. The Decoration Committee was Mr. F. E. Moon aided by the members of the Christian Endeavor Society of Warren Mission.

PARK AVENUE BAPTIST.

The Park Avenue Baptist Sunday School celebrated its annual Christmas festival last evening, by excellently filling out a programme arranged by Froelich. The exercises began at eight o'clock by the school singing, "The Christmas Festal," followed by a prayer by the Pastor. The School next sang "Monarch of the Year," followed by a Christmas cantata in four parts, by the larger scholars and some of the primary class.

The first scene was the indignation meeting; second, fairy-land scene and singing by the fairies; the third scene was "Christmas at the Cottage," including solos by Miss Elma Runyon and L. Hillman. Both were very creditably rendered. Scene four opened by Miss Elma Runyon singing a solo entitled, "Evening Prayer." Snow men, skaters and fairies entered, followed by the father's return. This cantata was very finely executed in all its parts, and great credit is reflected on those who took part.

Next was a song by the school, entitled, "Tell Out the Christmas Story," which was then followed by a few appropriate remarks by the Assistant Superintendent, Mr. D. M. Runyon. The school sang "All Hail the Power of Jesus Name." Recitations were delivered by the Misses Minnie Gulick, L. Van Winkle, R. Pond, F. Potter and G. Remsen. The Misses M. Duryea, C. Day and M. Anthony contributed some vocal selections.

The primary class sang "There's a rumble in the chimney." Sleigh bells were heard, and Santa Claus appeared, singing "I'm Santa Claus" to the evident delight of the children. With the assistance of Rev. and Mrs. Dilts and Mr. D. M. Runyon, Santa Claus distributed presents, and after promising to return next year made his exit after which the benediction was pronounced. Then refreshments were served by Messrs Chas. Runyon, Chas. VanWinkle, Nelson VanWinkle and Miss Mabel Runyon.

The Committee of Arrangements consisted of Mr. David Runyon, Mr. A. Day, Mr. Staden, Mrs. Dilts, Miss L. Heyniger, Miss Spangenburg, and Miss Whitfield. The room was beautifully decorated with Chinese lanterns, some of which took fire and fell to the floor, but no damage resulted.

CHURCH OF THE HOLY CROSS.

The Church of the Holy Cross Sunday school celebrated their Christmas festival December 28, in the church. Promptly at half-past seven the Surpliced Choir was heard in the distance chanting the processional Hymn. They entered the North door followed by the Sunday school, each class bearing its respective banner. They proceeded down the aisle, and advanced up the middle aisle—the choir taking their respective seats in the chancel, and the various classes in seats assigned them in the body of the church. The seats in the side aisles were reserved for the members of the congregation and strangers.

The beautiful church was crowded by the friends and relatives of the children. The interior of the edifice never looked so pretty. The Christmas greens were distributed uniformly throughout the church, and the two Christmas trees in front of the lectern and pulpit, almost moaned with handsome and appropriate trimmings.

The following was the programme for the occasion: Processional; Responsive reading; Anthem; Carol, "O Little town of Bethlehem;" Responsive, "The Prophets Vision;" Carol, "Carol loudly, Carol sweetly."—Lord's prayer and Versicles.—Carol, "It came upon the midnight clear."—Scripture lesson.—Carol, "The Sweet Story of Old."—Creed and Collects.—Carol, "Carol, Carol Christmas."—Distribution of gifts.—Carol, "Tune your Harps to Holy Song.—Benediction.—Recessional.

The singing was particularly well rendered, and was certainly very creditable to the scholars, the Surpliced Choir and the young ladies consisting of the former choir. The musical services were under the leadership of Mr. Charles Kellogg, Musical Director, and Mr. Clarence E. Ike, the Organist.

When the hour arrived for the distribution of gifts, the children were delighted. As their classes were called, each and every scholar—as well as the Superintendent, teachers, in fact every person identified with the school and choir—received a handsome gift. The rector and his wife were not forgotten. A happier lot of children could scarcely be found. At 9 o'clock they left for their respective homes, each carrying one or more packages, and every little heart was made glad.

At the close of the exercises—by a prearrangement—the Rector, Superintendent of the school, teachers, members of the choir, the young ladies of the former choir, all of the younger members of the church, assembled in the handsome choir room, where refreshments were served. The object of this social gathering was that all should become better acquainted and the remainder of the evening was profitably spent in discussing the Christmas festival event, and the future welfare of the Sunday School. It has now a membership of 175, and is in a most prosperous condition, largely due to the united efforts of the Rev. T. Logan Murphy, the rector of the church, Mr. Henry Wells, the Superintendent, and the teachers.

GRACE CHURCH.

December 28, the evening of Holy Innocents Day, the Sunday school of Grace Episcopal church, held its Christmas Festival in the pretty gothic church building on Sycamore street. The auditorium and annex was crowded with the scholars and their friends, and many visitors were compelled to stand.

Tasteful programmes announced the exercises as they progressed, beginning at 7:30 o'clock with an organ voluntary by Mrs. W. A. Freeman. There were responsive readings of "The Prophesy," "The Annunciation," and "The Advent," and a prayer and scripture lesson by Archdeacon Rodman.

The carols, that were a principal part of the exercises, were unexceptionally beautiful. So many rich melodies are seldom grouped upon one programme, and the taste of those who selected them, and the ability of Mrs. Freeman as a director, deserves particular praise. Master Fred Freeman sang two solos in a most pleasing manner—one being especially effective with the soft vocal accompaniment of the other choir boys.

Archdeacon Rodman began his address with the remark that probably the children expected one of the old fashioned sermons the ministers used to preach, of two or three hours long; but he assured them he only intended to talk for a few minutes of the childhood days of the Holy Child whose birth they were celebrating. Following his address, presents for all were distributed from the mammoth tree that stood before the altar steps. Each scholar was called up by name, and received a gift from the hands of Messrs DeGraff, Stover and Drayton.

The decorations of the church interior, were quite elaborate and unusually beautiful. The pillars were bound with greens that were also hung in long and graceful loops from beam to beam. Wreaths and stars of evergreen swung in the arches, and the choir rail was also draped with the same emblematical material. All this decoration was due to the artistic taste and untiring efforts of the members of the St. Andrew's Society.

INFANT BEREAN CLASS.

The Christmas festival of the Plainfield Infant Berean Sabbath school at Cutter's Hall, December 28, was a most satisfying affair in every way to all present. Santa Claus entered through the back window with two large baskets of gifts. Following is the PROGRAMME.

Singing	Infant Class.
Prayer	J. B. Cleaver
Recitation	Ada Perrine.
Singing	School.
Recitation	Sadie Perrine.
Singing	Willie and Minnie Noster.
Singing	Three Ladies.
Recitation	Bertha Rockfellow.

Santa Claus entered with his gifts and distributed to every child a bag of candy, oranges and cake. Mr. Cleaver presented each child with a hand-some Christmas card. Cake was served to the entire audience and after a good time the Rev. J. B. Cleaver pronounced the benediction. The room was elaborately decorated with trees, wreaths, etc.

Fire at Green Brook.

A little before midnight, Sunday night, Sloth's grist mill at Green Brook was totally destroyed by fire, together with all the machinery and contents. The fire was evidently the work of an incendiary. Mr. W. A. Hollman, the owner, estimates his loss at about $3,000. There was about $1,000 insurance on the building, but the contents, including machinery, corn, meal, feed, etc., was uninsured. The fire was plainly seen in North Plainfield, and cries of "Fire" were heard on the streets. No general alarm was sent out.

THREE SCHOOLS TOGETHER.

The three Sunday schools of Crescent Avenue church and the Hope and Bethel chapels, united in a Christmas service, Sunday, in the church.

Superintendent Newhall lead in the responsive readings, and the Rev. Mr. Richards delivered an address from the text: "The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and a little child shall lead them." Miss Utter officiated at the organ, and Miss Dewey at the piano.

The singing was grand. Mr. H. O. Newman was the leader, but the schools carried the music through with great enthusiasm and effect. Besides the choruses in which all joined, some special carols were rendered. Miss Alice Holmes and Mr. Elmer Runyon, sang solo parts of "Softly the Night is Sleeping." Minnie Martin, Lizzie Firebrook, Maggie Porter and Minnie Finnigan, little ones of Hope Chapel, sang "Jesus Once was a little Child." Marie Newman, Mary Collier, Constance Patton, Ida Denham, Preston Parry, Carmen Sutphen and Charles Davis sang the beautiful carol, "March of the Magi."

Mr. William D. Murray gave a pleasing reading of "A Vision of Christmas Tide," and Sarah Richards, Eva Benton, Sarah Schuyler and Marie Newman, of the Crescent Avenue Primary Department recited, "Star of Bethlehem." One of the musical features of the occasion was a duett by Mrs. J. K. Myers and Mr. E. E. Runyon. Mr. Newhall closed the exercises with a few words of appreciation for the schools, and the sincere wish of a Happy New Year for all.

Better Lighting Facilities in the Borough.

Mr. C. F. Averill, Superintendent of the Plainfield Gas Co., has just completed the enlargement of the gas main running into North Plainfield, so that hereafter the gas will be carried into the Borough with greater force than heretofore. The work has been going on under Mr. Averill's personal supervision, with but little or no inconvenience to the consumers. About $600 was expended by the Company to complete the work.

Dangerous Negligence.

It is unwise to neglect a case of indigestion as a case of fever or other more serious disease; for, if allowed to progress, as great danger to live may result. A few HAMBURG FIGS will put the bowels in a healthy condition, in which they may be kept by occasional use of this medicine. 25 cents. Dose, one fig. Mack Drug Co., N. Y. J. G. Count that day lost whose low descending sun
Brings neither information, cash, nor fun.

With a proper use of time there should be no such days. Each day, rightly spent, is bound to bring its share of information and wealth, while as for fun, modern life is full of it, especially during a political campaign.

But what has this to do with the selection of a New Suit or possibly an Overcoat? At first sight, nothing, and yet it has. Whoever wants real, solid, genuine information about clothing has only to keep his eye on the statements we make from time to time to get it. You will not be told that we are selling at a sixteenth part of the price you pay elsewhere. You will not find us advertising "Genuine All-Wool Suits, Satin Lined," for $3. But there is one advantage which our advertising has over some very attractive baits offered elsewhere, and that is, we have what we advertise, every time. The fact is we don't have to make unreliable statements to sell our goods. All we have to do is to attract you to our store and the goods tell their own story. If you are a judge of values in clothing we extend a cordial welcome to you to compare our offerings with others. If you are not a judge, this is a safe place to buy, as the price is the same to all.

EGYPTIAN WOMEN.

Peculiarities of Their Looks, Dress, Manners and Customs.

In youth the women of Egypt, writes a correspondent of Truth, generally have lovely forms—plump, supple and elegant. An excess of flesh is rare among them. Graceful curves, an upright carriage and finely molded hands and feet are common characteristics. Their faces, too, are usually pleasing and often beautiful, with the richly-bronzed [illegible] of the south. [illegible] is the expression of these faces, so bewitching are the glances of their dark eyes, that an experienced traveler declares they are the most perfect women in the world.

The eyes of nearly all are large, black and almond-shaped; their soft expression [illegible] further heightened by long lashes and the universal use of "kohl," with which they blacken the edges of the lids. They have oval faces, sometimes a little broad, and clear olive complexions. The lips are usually quite full; the nose is straight, though a little wide. Glossy black hair, with eyebrows that form a lovely arch, complete the features of these sirens, famed since Cleopatra for their beguiling beauty.

They dress the hair in an elaborate fashion. It is cut short over the forehead, but on either side of the face hangs a full lock, often curled or braided. The rest of the hair is arranged in numerous braids, usually from eleven to twenty-five, but always an odd number. Three black silk cords bearing little ornaments of gold are generally fastened to each braid, hanging down the back in a glittering shower. The head-dress is a complex arrangement. It consists of a kind of turban, round which is [illegible] bound a gay kerchief or a long strip of muslin folded into a narrow band. The latter is usually black or rose-colored. The central part is ornamented for several inches with spangles that fall over the forehead, while the ends are decked with a gay edging and tassels of colored silk, above which a few more spangles are worn. On the crown of the head-dress is worn a round convex ornament called the "kurs." It is about five inches in diameter and as costly as the wearer can afford. Wealthy ladies, and even the wives of some small tradesmen, wear these composed of diamonds set in gold. Others wear a simple golden kurs, silver being seldom seen, except by servants. The head-veil consists of a long piece of white muslin embroidered at each end with colored silk and gold, or of colored crepe ornamented with gold thread and spangles. This is drawn well forward upon the head, while the long ends hang down behind nearly to the ground. The face-veil, always worn in public, is a simple strip of white muslin fastened just below the eyes, from which it falls nearly to the feet. It completely hides all the features except the eyes, but as these are commonly the greatest beauty of the women, it serves rather to heighten admiration than to quench it.

INSECT GENERALSHIP.

Curious Stories of Battles Between Wasps and Their Enemies.

"A story which appeared a few days ago concerning a fight between a wasp and a spider reminded me of a similar battle which I witnessed a short time ago. I was walking across a field when I saw a spider's web on the grass, and noticed that a wasp had just been caught in its meshes. The spider was on the watch, and showed unmistakable signs of delight as its victim kicked and struggled in the vain endeavor to set itself free. The wily creature sat at the bottom of the web holding the rope that was to bind its prey. When the wasp ceased its struggle the spider approached. But the winged insect had not given up. As it saw its captor it showed fight and exerted itself to the utmost to get near enough to use its sting. The spider retreated a little, but apparently only for the purpose of tightening the strings that held the prisoner.

"A moment later the wasp was turned over and bound more firmly than ever. It seemed as if the spider took advantage of each movement of its adversary to wind another rope about its legs and tie them yet more firmly. The skill displayed was very [illegible] to see—I had no idea insects knew so much. Finally, when the wasp was so bound that it could neither kick nor sting, the spider jumped upon it, killed it almost instantly by biting, and then proceeded to feast upon the carcass.

"At another time I witnessed a fierce struggle between a large hornet and a colony of wasps which had built a nest in the window of an old shed. The hornet crawled up the glass toward the nest, and when the wasps saw him they formed in battle array to defend their home. The intruder moved forward, when a wasp darted from the ranks to sting him. But the courageous little fellow hardly seemed to touch his enemy before falling dead upon the window sill. At this the wasps retreated in a body to the other side of the nest to lay plans for battle, sending out a spy now and then to reconnoiter. As the hornet came closer all suddenly rushed toward him in a body. A large wasp stepped out of the ranks, flew over the hornet and alighted beyond him. The invader halted, and the little army also stood still, watching him. The unequal armies eyed each other for some time, when suddenly it appeared as if the large wasp gave a signal and his companions rushed forward, making quick work of the enemy. Several wasps fell dead before the hornet was conquered, and the survivors did not venture to approach their prostrate foe until he had been dead for several minutes."

The above tales were told to a Dispatch reporter by an intelligent Pittsburgh naturalist, for whom the study of insect life seems to have a peculiar fascination.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR.

How Chicago Society Ladies Have Their Whiskers Pulled.

Few, perhaps, realize the expense and discomfort that society ladies incur in the interest of good looks. The mortification and mental torture caused by a hair or a [illegible] a well-defined mustache can never be fully comprehended except from experience. What will she not do to get rid of the disfigurement? Said a State street physician, who is [illegible] a "superfluous hair extractor," to a Chicago News reporter:

DON GRAYSON'S VISION.

The Story of a Rash Deed and Its Consequences.

THE sun went down behind the mountains and a gray, cheerless twilight settled over the landscape long before Don Grayson reached his destination. The jaded horse stumbled most provokingly, and it seemed to the weary traveler that the end of the route would never be reached.

He drew his overcoat tightly about him, pulled his hat over his eyes to shield them from the cold mist beginning to fall and urged the unwilling beast to quicker pace.

Down in the valley a few lights glinting faintly told him that he was yet a long way off from the Golden Eagle.

"It don't matter," he muttered, desperately, picking his way over the rocky pathway; "I feel as if the very deuce was after me, anyway. Strange that I do feel so nightridden to-night, though; wonder if I did do such a terribly wrong thing leaving Alicia without giving a reason?"

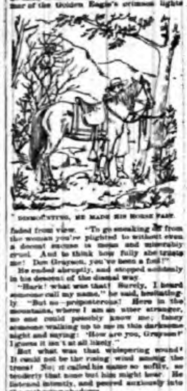
He kicked savagely at a stone in the road, and continued:

"I had no excuse, of course; but God knows she is better off without me!" And his hand went up instinctively to a flask in his side pocket.

With this soliloquy he jogged on, stumbling, slipping, sliding down the lonely mountain road, while the night came drearily down.

Another jog in the crooked, winding way, and the lights in the valley were hidden by the intervening trees.

"I wish I had gone over and told her all," he said, with contracted brows, as the glimmer of the Golden Eagle's crimson lights faded from view. "To go sneaking off from the woman you're plighted to without even a decent excuse is mean and miserably cruel. And to think how fully she trusts me! Don Grayson, you've been a fool!"



DISMOUNTING, HE MADE HIS HORSE FAST.

He ended abruptly, and stopped suddenly in his descent of the dismal way.

"Hark! what was that? Surely, I heard someone call my name," he said, hesitatingly. "But no—preposterous! Here in the mountains, where I am an utter stranger, no one could possibly know me; fancy someone walking up to me in this darksome night and saying: 'How are you, Grayson?' I guess it isn't at all likely."

But what was that whispering sound? It could not be the rising wind among the trees! No; it called his name so softly, so tenderly that none but him might hear. He listened intently, and peered anxiously into the gathering shadows.

Ah! what was that? A filmy something was beckoning to him from the shrubbery at his left, and once more came the blissful intonation, seeming so far away yet distinctly sweet.

Dismounting and making the horse fast, Grayson felt an unaccountable, curious determination to fathom and unveil this strange manifestation.

"It won't hurt me," he said, "and I am no coward. Besides, there is no one here to laugh at me, so I shall get at the bottom of this something if I don't reach Goldboro to-night."

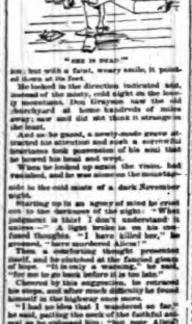
Stepping carefully down among the tangled vines, he followed the floating object, which receded as he advanced. "If ever I heard of such an experience as this!" he ejaculated, as he followed on after the mysterious fascination. A great log lay directly across his way, and in the dusk he, not noticing the obstruction, ran against it and fell, hurting himself severely.

With a muttered imprecation, he gathered himself up and looked about for the strange object he had been pursuing, when lo! at his side stood the vapory form, distinct and familiar to his astonished eyes.

Don Grayson forgot his jaded beast waiting above him in the road; forgot that it was growing night—dark, cheerless night—and only seemed conscious of one thing; and that was that within a few feet of him a familiar form held such a power over him that he could not move.

"As I'm alive! why, Alicia, how came you here?" he cried, in an agony of surprise; but the vision answered him not a word. It beckoned to him presently, however, and retired a few paces further.

All the old passionate love for the woman he had forsaken swept over his soul, and he reached out his arms toward the sweet vision; but with a faint, weary smile, it pointed them at its feet.



"SHE IS DEAD!"

He looked in the direction indicated and, instead of the misty, cold night on the lonely mountains, Don Grayson saw the old churchyard at home hundreds of miles away; saw and did not think it strange in the least.

And as he gazed, a newly-made grave attracted his attention and such a sorrowful loneliness took possession of his soul that he bowed his head and wept.

When he looked up again the vision had vanished, and he was alone on the mountain-side in the cold mists of a dark November night.

Starting up in an agony of mind he cried out to the darkness of the night: "What judgment is this? I don't understand it unless—" A light broke in on his confused thoughts. "I have killed her," he groaned, "have murdered Alicia!"

Then a comforting thought presented itself, and he clutched at the fancied gleam of hope. "It is only a warning," he said, "for me to go back before it is too late."

Cheered by this suggestion, he retraced his steps, and after much difficulty he found himself in the highway once more.

"I had no idea that I wandered so far," he said, patting the neck of the faithful animal as he unbound him; "but poor Alicia! I will go to her at once. God forgive me for what I have done!"

When Don Grayson reached Goldboro, letters awaited him there. And among them was one with a black seal, which he opened with a shudder.

"She is dead," said the epistle, in a strange hand, "dead and buried in the old churchyard you know so well." And the bitter tears of remorseful grief dropped on the missive destined to shut him forever from his kith and kin.

Don Grayson never went back to his native village; but the isolated cave of the hermit on the mountain-side reveals to you his hiding place, although few know the story of the man hiding there.

MATTERS OF HISTORY.

UNTIL the year 1410 all painting was in mastic or water colors.

THE most ancient known coins are of the fifth century B. C., and are Macedonian.

THE first iron ore to be discovered in this country was found in Virginia in 1715.

IN five centuries France had 226 years of war and 174 of peace; and in these wars were fought 154 bloody battles.

A FRENCHMAN named Papin, who died in Germany in 1688, was the first man to make experiments on the power of steam.

CHINA'S admitted history begins in 1122 B. C., and the Celestials claim twenty-two dynasties of Emperors, two of them, Hia and Chang, before the age of Samuel.

SILVER was first coined by Phidon, King of Argos, about 869 B. C., the epoch of the building of Carthage, and 140 years after the building of Solomon's Temple.

QUARANTINE, a place for the detention of infected vessels and individuals, and provision for averting the spread of contagious diseases, originated with the Venetians in 1467.

THE first English Dukes were Edward, the Black Prince, as Duke of Cornwall, and John of Gaunt, as Duke of Lancaster. The title was extinct in England during the reign of Elizabeth, and until Villiers was made Duke of Buckingham by James I.

ROAD-MAKING was reduced to a science by McAdam during the latter half of the eighteenth century, and from him comes the term "macadamizing," as applied to road-making by using stones broken into small, irregular sizes.

IN 1776 cotton spinning was performed by hand spinning-wheels, when Hargrave, an ingenious mechanic of Blackburn, Eng., made a spinning jenny with eight spindles, and having permitted one Peel, of the same place, to view his invention as a curiosity, under a pledge of secrecy, the latter appropriated the idea, and Hargrave died in great poverty.

CHATHAM.

A Famous Old House of the Colonial Days.

Every now and then some of the old colonial mansions of Virginia is sold, and a wealth of ancient history brought to public notice. The latest old mansion to figure in this way is Chatham, where George Washington married Martha Dandridge. This house was built by William Fitzhugh, the founder of that family in this country, whose manuscript volume of correspondence, covering the period from 1679 to 1699, is regarded as one of the most valuable sources of colonial history in existence. He was the ancestor from whom Governor Lee gets his name Fitzhugh, and General "Rooney" Lee, now in Congress, owes one of his initials to this ancient Fitzhugh.

Chatham is known in war history as the Lacy House, where General Burnside had his headquarters during the siege of Fredericksburg. It stands on a hill overlooking the town, and was studded thick with Union artillery in 1862. One of the Fitzhughs born at Chatham in the last century was an abolitionist. It was he who settled "Ravensworth," Fitzhugh Lee's present home. If this Fitzhugh Lee had converted the people of Virginia to his way of thinking, many a page in our history would be brighter. The Chatham estate is a fine one, embracing over a thousand acres. It was bought by Mr. McMahon, a leading New York lawyer, for fifty thousand dollars.

WHY GIRLS CHEW GUM.

Information Gathered by an Enterprising Chicago Reporter.

In spite of the manifold warnings of physicians; in spite of the fact that the shape of Cupid's bow is changed; and in spite of all the contemptuous and sarcastic remarks which are constantly appearing in the papers, gum-chewing in this country is rapidly on the increase.

Two-thirds of the girls, be they pretty or otherwise, that one meets on the highways of this city are either working their jaws for all they are worth or have a small lump tucked away in some obscure corner of the mouth and give it a gentle squeeze between the teeth when they are sure of being unobserved.

Gum-chewing is less disgusting than tobacco-chewing.

And if it becomes a natural habit, as it seems likely to do, we may comfort ourselves that the gum-chewing American is far preferable to the snuff-dipping Mexican.

Women are told over and over again: "O, if you could only see what the stuff is made of you wouldn't think of putting it in your mouth."

And if cigarette-smokers could only see what these little paper-incased articles are made of they, too, would hesitate somewhat before smoking them. Thus the woman can give tit for tat and come out of the argument with flying colors.

And gum-chewing is not as exclusively confined to the female sex as is smoking to the male, for many men use gum to help still the craving for tobacco, thus jumping from the frying-pan into the fire, perhaps.

True, gay young women are lately becoming somewhat addicted to the use of the weed, claiming that if men have the right to put their feet on the mantel and make a room blue with smoke why should they be denied the privilege, since it has such a soothing effect on the temper? And if women can find any thing that has a salutary effect upon their tempers what folly to deprive them of it!

Why do women chew gum? You do not know and even the chewers themselves do not seem to.

"O, I chew because I can, I guess," said one pert young miss upon being questioned by a Chicago Tribune reporter.

"And I because my mother tells me not to," said another with a mischievous laugh.

"I chew because I like the taste and because every body else chews," said a third, indifferently, and likewise answered they all; the truth is, they really did not know why they chewed and had never thought to ask themselves the question.

The history of chewing gum is like the growth of all animal and vegetable life—one of evolution.

Children began to chew the exudations from different trees, from the peach, plum, pine, spruce and sweet gum, thus putting it into somebody's mind to make an artificial gum.

It was first made of beeswax, gutta-percha and other rubbery and sticky substances, which were perfectly pure and harmless, and costly in preparation. But three years ago some inventive genius discovered that by boiling some of the baser elements of petroleum and mixing to a small amount of beeswax a gum similar to the more expensive could be produced which was quite susceptible to flavors and trifling in cost. By the use of scents and large quantities of sugar, which is the principal article used in the composition of any gum, the disagreeable taste and odor of petroleum was entirely obliterated and a salable article was produced. About the same time a gum called "Balsam Tolu" was produced, which also found a ready sale, particularly among children, and then "Paraffine," in all of its flavors and mixtures, had its day.

One variety of white gum was for some time quite extensively manufactured in China. That country has a tree peculiar to itself which possesses an attraction for an insect with a queer Chinese name, which one will neither attempt to write or pronounce. Numbers of them collect upon the twigs, and when they have departed to pastures new branches are found to be literally covered with a waxy deposit. By boiling the branches the wax is separated from them, and when the water and twigs are drawn off the white deposit remains.

This is purified, sweetened, flavored, molded in cakes and a little fancy picture placed on top, and we have the old white gum which so many of us have chewed until our jaws ached. The sale of this variety was enormous, but it has now been supplanted by newer kinds, as the old rubber was.

Physicians differ considerably in their views on the subject. An eminent physician from Ohio declares that gum-chewing seriously affects the eyesight, and that he never fails to detect the use of it by an examination of the eye. Another says that the bones of the jaw and face near the temple are enlarged and hardened and the curve of the lips is destroyed. And, on the other hand, doctors without number advise its use to cleanse the teeth and aid digestion.

It is quite the fad at the present time to chew spruce gum. It at least is pure from all the adulterations which are now so common.

It has been computed by a statistician that the people of the United States spend more than $1,500,000 every year for chewing-gum. There is a manufactory at Louisville, Ky., that alone turns out five hundred thousand boxes of six dozen cakes each yearly, which is distributed all over the world. And when one stops to think of all the other manufactories of gums of different varieties which are in full blast, selling as much or more than the one mentioned above, we are astounded at what man's jaws can do.

Not long ago a girl who had been chewing steadily on a wager, to her surprise and dismay found that her jaws were set, and she was obliged to seek the aid of a physician immediately. Some of the muscles were paralyzed, and it took some trouble to get her mouth open again. It usually takes an equal amount of trouble to get the majority of women to close their mouths, to be sure; but in spite of the above and similar warnings gum-chewing has evidently come to stay.

Lending to the Lord.

The Salt Lake Tribune tells the following story about Brigham Young: A good Latter-day Saint says he remembers very well how Brother Brigham used to send over to the city hall when he was short, to see how much money there was in the treasury, that the same might be loaned to the Lord. The writer told how one day the Bee-Hive House messenger came into the hall with the exclamation: "Well, boys, how much cash is there to-day in the treasury?" "About eight thousand dollars," said the treasurer. "Well, pack it up, the old man wants it," and the eight thousand dollars was "packed up," without any ado, and laid at the feet of Brother Brigham. There was no collateral of any kind put up; the loan was to the Lord our God, and the Lord our God was Brigham. Readers who doubt the above may be convinced by turning to Mrs. Stenhouse's book, and learn how Brother Brigham ordered two hundred and seventy-five dollars' worth of bonnets of her for his wives, and then wrote on the bottom of the bill: "You will be credited this amount on your tithing account."

OLD-FASHIONED SIGNS.

Old Announcements to Be Seen in English Towns and Villages.

Among the oddities of tavern signs in England those that contain the names of the apostles are not uncommon, says the Detroit Free Press. There are several "Luke's" taverns—the district or ward probably bearing the saintly name. Once the writer came across "Peter's Finger," the sign-board bearing a figure with pointed finger, evidently representing the saint in discoursing.

In the line of quaint instances, however, may be named the following: "Honest Lawyer" and "Silent Woman," who are humorously depicted as having attained that state of perfection or discretion when the head is cut off and carried under the arm. "Pig and Whistle," "Cock and Bottle" and "Lamb and Flag" are somewhat strange combinations, but "Horse and Groom," "Fox and Lamb," "Coach and Horses," and such like, call for less comment. In London the "Hole in the Wall" probably contains an aperture through which supper beer is served to customers who come by a side entrance. I remember one hotel which in exterior rhyme gave "good advice," though scarcely appropriate, and may be deemed savoring of cant, commencing:

> "Let moderation be your guide,
> And swerve from its precepts aside.

While another country inn, called "The Wheel," has this bidding:

> "Stop, friend, stop, I make no doubt, > You'll help me turn the wheel about."

There was a tavern in London where if one entered and deposited a farthing on the counter without speaking, a glass of ale would be served, but whether more than once a day, or the origin of the singular custom, I did not learn.

Some hostelries claim in the name of the brewing brewer such a distinction as "Brown's Entire," meaning, I believe, that the liquors are exclusively supplied by him.

In the Isle of Man was to be seen the following effusion on an inn on a hillside:

> "My name is Abraham Low,
> I'm half way up the hill;
> If higher up I am,
> That will be bel or at it;
> Then come and take a swill,
> Take whatever you will,
> The proof ! be yon are low."

In addition to being a tribute of affection, the wife of a certain "Landlord of the Lion" did a little advertising for herself (like the widow of the sculptor who added a sort of postscript to her perpetuation of his memory, viz: "Monuments of this kind, $250"), as follows:

> "Beneath this stone, in hopes of Zion,
> Doth lye the Landlord of the Lion;
> (His wife keeps on the business still,
> Resigned to the Heavenly Will."

There are other businesses or "professions" that have been announced in an odd way. Over the door of an aspiring chimney sweep in Manchester I once read:

> "Joseph Doe, fire extinguisher, he lives here,
> Books for orders far and near;
> With his brush, scraper and machine
> He sweeps chimneys very clean."

A PRINCELY HOST.

The Disinterested Hospitality of Duke Ludwig of Bavaria.

One of the most lovely of Alpine health-resorts is Bad-Kreuth, a hamlet of some half-dozen houses built by the side of a spring of mineral water. The charm of the resort is not, however, due to its loveliness, nor to its healing waters, but to the fact that its landlord is Prince Ludwig of Bavaria, a courteous host, who in his management of the place combines a lucrative business with a most generous charity.

The Prince, the elder son of Duke Maximilian and the brother of the Empress of Austria, surrendered to his younger brother, Karl Theodor, all his rights as the head of the family, because he wished to marry a lady of inferior social position, with whom he had fallen in love.

The marriage proved to be a happy one, and to this day, though more than thirty years have passed since they were united, the Prince's manner to his wife is more that of a lover than of a middle-aged married man. They have no children, and live for the greater part of the year in a simple suite of apartments at Bad-Kreuth, where, according to a writer in the Cornhill Magazine, she diffuses brightness and happiness around her, and he shows how a Prince may earn an honest livelihood, and be the first, not to receive, but to render aid.

The whole of the health-resort belongs to the ducal family. The servants are theirs, and the entire management of the place is under Prince Ludwig's superintendence. He is his own butcher, brewer, dairyman and baker.

During June, July and August, Kreuth is filled with Southern Germans who pay liberally for their rooms and board, and make these months the Prince's harvest-time. During May and September the Prince receives no paying guests, but fills the house with those he calls his "friends." They are those who are too proud to ask for charity, but need a little help—officers depending upon their pay, university students, poor professors, struggling literary men and artists.

Two or three hundred of these "friends" are housed, fed and tended at the hotel, during May and September, as carefully as the wealthiest guests, and that, too, without its costing them one penny. If at the height of the paying season a room is left vacant, some poor invalid is invited to occupy it, and no one can tell from the manner of the host or his servants that the new arrival is not a millionaire.

Prince Ludwig never forgets a face or a name, and has a pleasant word for every one, whether a paying guest or a "friend." His manner is the same to all, the sympathetic greeting of a courteous host and the kindly greeting of a well-bred man.

Honesty is the Best Policy.

Monsignore Galimberti, the able diplomatist who holds the post of Papal Nuncio at the court of Vienna, and who will shortly be created a cardinal, was once editor and director of the semi-official Moniteur de Rome. His subsequent advancement resulted directly from his invariable practice of qualifying extracts he clipped from the columns of his editorial contemporaries.

SHARKY WOULDN'T BITE.

A Naval Officer's Yarn of a Man-Eater's Remarkable Caution.

"I never saw such clear water in my life as there is in the harbor of Port au Prince," said a naval officer to a Washington Star reporter. "When the sea is calm one can see the bottom, fourteen fathoms down. The water that comes into the harbor is all clear, as it flows down over coral beds. While going up the harbor we used to fill a beer-bottle with water to make it heavy, and throw it straight ahead of the ship. When we passed the spot where it struck we could see it still going down, away below us. The only fish in the harbor is the gar fish, a long, slim fellow, like the pike, with a sharp, hard beak that won't take a hook. They used to hang around the ship in schools. The only way to get them is to shoot them with a rifle. As they lay on the surface of the water by the ship's side they offered a very fair mark.

"There was one immense tiger shark that used to come nosing around, and we thought that we'd dose him up. So we loaded a great piece of pork with a bottle of gunpowder, and fastened an electric fuse to it, connecting it with the battery on the ship. The bait was then hung over the stern, and his majesty came waltzing up to it. As soon as he reached it, however, instead of turning half over and causing it to disappear, as was his usual custom, he began to sniff at it. Then he shot away and acted shy, returning now and then to smell of the pork. But he would not bite it. Finally some one suggested experimenting with the pork without the powder bottle, and the shark took it without a moment's hesitation. We afterward exploded the bottle in a piece of pork, and it threw the meat in every direction.

"We have often had a great deal of amusement out of the Jackies whenever they caught a shark. When we entered a harbor where sharks were plenty there would always be a hook hanging over the stern, and it was not long before a great big fellow was hauled up to the rail. Then the old Jackies, who had been there before, all crowded close around the carcass with their knives, ready to cut it up, thus keeping the greenhorns back out of sight. They would have their blouses stuffed with all sorts of things, and as soon as the body was ripped open they hauled the stuff out of their clothes, and, after dipping it in the shark's blood, passed it up to the greenies. You can imagine their astonishment when they saw a bloody pair of shoes, or a piece of cloth, or a stained cap-ribbon bearing the name of some other ship, come up, apparently from the belly of the shark. Of course they would think at first that some poor fellow had fallen overboard and been gobbled up by the fish. All the time the old Jackies would be cutting away solemnly, without a smile."

OLD-FASHIONED GIRL.

A [illegible] Piece of Reading for Those Who Love Home.

"I've been watching an 'old-fashioned girl' for quite a long while," says a writer in the Fitchburg Sentinel, "and I want to tell you something about her."

Her dresses, etc., were made in modern style; but, bless you! she was so old-fashioned that she arose in the morning when her mother did, helped set the table neatly, and cooked one or two dishes daintily, her "own self."

She had "graduated," yet she did not think because of that fact that the kitchen was not good enough for her, O, no! She was so much behind the times that she actually washed the dishes, made her bed, dusted, and then began preparations for the pudding for dinner. Now, wasn't she absurd, when she (following the accustomed rut) should have been lying on the parlor sofa with the latest novel in her hand and her pug dog beside her! When her little brother came in crying because his kite was broken, instead of calling him a "horrid boy," as is the fashion to do in some homes, she helped with her own hands to mend it. How could she be in such small business!

After dinner had been cleared away she produced a small work basket and proceeded to mend the family stockings. Shocking! After her task was completed she accompanied her mother on a shopping expedition, and, although she met many fine-looking gentlemen, she did not flirt with any of them, for, don't you know, she was so antiquated she would have been shocked at the idea. As if it wasn't elevating to the intellect to be on the watch for some masculine person to fascinate!

The girl of whom I am telling you was pretty looking, with a bright, fresh color in her face, brought on by plenty of exercise in the open air and in the kitchen. But I can't begin to tell you half this queer girl did, for you know she was so old-fashioned that she did whatever good deeds came into her heart to do; and her heart was such an antique affair that only pure, noble thoughts entered it. Her home was made bright and sunny by her presence, and yet she was not so perfect that she "died young." O, no! She lives to-day a girl who has "no secrets" from her mother!

THE PINES.

Far back in days of childhood stood a grove of stately pines,
The Gods spread green around them and their shadowy outlines
Reached up into the sky so far that I believed it true
That angels, on their outstretched arms, passed thro' the Heavenly blue.

And when the night winds murmured in their branches sweet and low,
I listened thro' the dark and said: "Yes, angels' harps, I know:
Good angels, who will give me all I want if I am kind."
For childhood's eyes look far and wide, but childhood's faith is blind.

And as the angel music filled my soul with visions bright,
I lay upon my pillow in a dream of rapt delight,
Where noble knights and maidens moved in an enchanted land
Of palaces and gardens fair, and castles tall and grand.

"Sweet angels, grant me but two gifts, and I'll be good, I pray:
A palace for my home, and let my mother live alway;
My mother dear, so beautiful, that like to you she seems,
Oh, let her live forever!" thus I whispered in my dreams.

No palaces are mine, yet round me woods and mountains stand,
Arrayed in all the splendor of the wonderous fairy-land,
And o'er the grave beneath the pines the birds sing all the day,
And Faith's bright angel tells me that my mother lives alway.

—Zitella Cocke, in N. Y. Graphic.

PARDON'S GOOD LUCK.

How She Proposed For and Secured a Partner.

Philosophers say that there is no such thing as luck. Asa Darwin thought differently.

"My luck, exactly!" said he, despairingly. "I might have known just how it would be."

He sat on the old stone porch, staring out toward the sunset, his chair tipped back on its two hind legs, his hands thrust aimlessly into his trousers pockets.

It was cold enough to justify the fire of beech logs that was blazing on the hearth in the room inside, where Pardon was tacking up the red moreen curtains that she had just sponged and mended neatly; but it was not an easy thing for Mr. Darwin to relinquish the habit of out-door lounging that had clung to him all the summer through.

"What is it, father?" said Pardon, coming briskly to the door with a tack hammer in one hand and a paper of tacks in the other.

"Jones has just gone by," said Mr. Darwin. "He says the old cow has got out on the railroad track again."

Pardon bit her red under lip.

"I told you she would, father," said she, "if you didn't have those bars repaired."

"And she's got run over," dolefully added Darwin. "I'm sure I don't know what we're going to do without a cow. We've always put a lot of dependence on our milk. But I might have expected it. Luck has been sheer against me ever since John James died. A man with a house full of gals can't expect to make no headway in the world."

Pardon colored up.

"You didn't expect your girls to mend the bars, did you, father?" asked she, a little bitterly.

"I was calculatin' to speak to Tim Parsons about gettin' a new pair o' posts put up," sighed the farmer.

"Wouldn't it have been a safer way to put them up yourself, father?"

"I ain't as young as I used to be," said Darwin, evasively. "And the rheumatics is twistin' me powerful these first cool days."

"Then," said Pardon, with a certain touch of daughterly authority in her voice, "you should come into the house and not sit there, getting chilled through, and then find fault with your luck!"

Mr. Darwin slowly rose and shuffled into the bright little keeping room, where Pardon had spread a neatly braided rug before the fire, and placed a broken-spouted pitcher of yellow golden rod on the table.

She looked after him with a sigh, half of impatience, half regret.

"I wish John James had lived!" said Mr. Darwin, feebly.

"So do I," assented Pardon.

"Ain't supper most ready?" said the farmer, looking discontentedly around.

"It will be in a minute," said Pardon. "I had to split the kindling myself for the kitchen fire, and Fanny has run to Mrs. Merritt's for a little meal to make some hot corn bread."

At the same moment Fanny returned—a slight, overgrown girl of fourteen—breathless with the haste she has made.

"Mrs. Merritt is very sorry," said she, "but she hasn't any cornmeal in the house."

"That's enough," said Pardon, growing scarlet to the roots of her hair. "I don't blame her for getting tired of lending things to us!"

"But," added Fanny, "she sends a pail of Graham flour to make gems. Indeed, indeed, Pardon, she's as kind as she can be!"

Pardon laughed hysterically.

"I'm getting as hard and bitter as a sour persimmon," said she. "Yes, I'm very glad of the Graham flour. Father can't make out his supper without something hot for a relish. Perhaps some day we can return Mrs. Merritt's kindnesses. But oh, Fanny, have you heard? The red cow got out of the pasture this afternoon and is killed on the track."

Fanny burst into tears.

"Old Pinky?" she exclaimed. "Is there no end to our bad luck?"

Pardon stamped her pretty, ill-shod foot impatiently on the floor.

"Luck!" she repeated. "Don't use that dreadful word! I believe father would be a better and happier man to-day if it wasn't in the dictionary at all. There isn't any such thing as luck. It's all bad management, shiftlessness—the habit of putting every thing off until the last moment."

And then she cried, too, poor little overburdened Pardon.

She was tall and slender, with large, glittering hazel eyes, red-brown hair and one of those delicate complexions where the sun lays its touch in the shape of here and there a cluster of freckles.

Fanny was dark, with Spanish eyes, fringed with long lashes, and hair as black and lustrous as jet. Whatever else fate had denied the Darwin girls, it had been generous to them in the matter of personal attributes.

They made their frugal supper of Graham gems, a very little butter, the weakest brewing of tea, and no milk at all, and then Pardon built up the fire, got her father the last week's newspaper, which good Mrs. Merritt had sent over with the Graham flour, and then sat down in the back kitchen with Fanny to slice up a few peaches for drying.

"For we have got to look after things very close this winter," she said. "Father seems to have no energy at all since John James died. I am afraid it will end in the farm being sold to clear off the mortgage."

Fanny opened her big, black eyes.

"But we must live somewhere, Pardon," said she.

"You and I can go out to service," said Pardon. "As for father, there is the poor-house."

Fanny uttered a wail of despair.

"No, no, dear; don't look so distressed," said the elder sister, repenting the rashness of her speech. "I don't really mean it. I'm cross, that is all. It's hard doing the work of hired man, servant girl and housekeeper all in one. I shall feel better to-morrow after I've had a night's sleep. I haven't got to get up early and milk poor old Pink any more."

And once again the sisters mingled their tears.

"If father had only mended those bars," said Fanny. "It was so unlucky—"

But Pardon put her hand over her sister's lips.

"Not that word, Fanny," said she. "Remember it's forbidden."

The two girls were washing up the breakfast dishes the next day in the temporary absence of Mr. Darwin, who had strolled off toward the post-office to see if the mail was in, when Squire Etting crossed the threshold.

"Father ain't to hum, eh?" said he. "Well, I reckon I can talk things over just as well with you, Pardon."

"What things?" said Pardon, distrustfully.

"That there skatin' rink, down by the lake," said Mr. Etting, "that John James built. It's goin' to be a good hard winter if there's any truth in signs, and I've a notion to buy the concern, just as it stands, and run the rink myself. The land belonged to your mother's estate, and I s'pose you and the gal here have the right to sell it."

"Yes," said Pardon, her eyes fixed calmly on the Squire's wooden visage. "What will you give for it?"

"Wal, it ain't wuth so dreadful much," said the squire, evasively. "Say a hundred dollars for the building and two acres o' land."

Pardon shook her head.

"I won't sell it for that," said she, decidedly.

"I dunno what you want to keep it for," said the squire, irritably. "Your father he ain't got the 'go' to run a skating rink."

"I know that," said Pardon, firmly, "but I don't intend to be swindled, all the same."

The squire stamped out of the room in a rage.

"Then drive a better bargain with somebody else, if you can," said he, viciously.

"Pardon, Pardon!" whispered Fanny, close to her elbow, "call him back! A hundred dollars is a great—great sum of money!"

"No," said Pardon. "I will not call him back. Let me think!"

"But what will father say?"

"Father need never know, Fanny. It is as Squire Etting says, the land is all that is left of our poor mother's property. It is ours to sell or to keep, as we please. The lumber alone for that poor building cost John James nearly one hundred dollars. The squire thinks he can safely cheat us, because we are only women. But he will find himself mistaken."

She put on her green gingham sun-bonnet that afternoon and went over to the Merritt farm. Joel Merritt was just driving through the big gates with a load of wood.

"I'm so sorry," said Joel, courteously lifting his cap. "Mother has gone over to a quilting-bee at Mrs. Dikes'. Won't you step in and rest?"

Pardon took off her green sun-bonnet and fanned herself with it. Her cheeks were pink; her lovely hazel eyes sparkled.

"But it isn't your mother I came to see, Joel," said she. "I wanted to speak to you!"

Joel jumped off the load, threw the reins on old Sorrel's back, and came up to her, with a countenance of some surprise.

"Me?" he repeated, reddening a little. For of all created beings he thought Pardon Darwin the most beautiful and winning.

"Yes," said Pardon, still deeply absorbed in her own plans and ideas. "How would you like, Joel, to go into partnership with me?"

"With you, Pardon?"

He caught his breath.

"Yes," frankly spoke the girl. "Of all our neighbors I think you are the most honest and reliable. I've known you ever since we were children together, and—"

"Say not another word, Pardon!" joyously cried the young man, taking both her hands in his, while his whole face grew radiant. "Oh, you don't know how proud, how happy you make me! For I've loved you this long time, Pardon, only I never dared to tell you so; and mother will be so glad to call you daughter. Give me a kiss, Pardon—my little shrinking love—just one kiss, so that I may be sure I'm not dreaming!"

But to his dismay Pardon struggled to free herself and began to cry impetuously.

"I—I don't know what you mean!" said she. "Let me go, Joel Merritt!"

"But, Pardon, you said yourself—"

"It was the skating-rink that poor John James built on Deep lake!" faltered Pardon, on the verge of new tears. "I—I wanted you to help me fit it up and manage it this winter. I never dreamed of asking you to—to Oh, Joel, what must you have thought of me!"

"Then you didn't mean it after all?" said Joel, dropping his arms to his sides and standing with a blank face before her. "You don't care for me?"

Pardon stood silent a moment, twisting her apron strings, while the soft glow still burned on her cheeks.

A sudden light flashed into Joel's sunburned face.

"My own love!" he cried out, valiantly, "I'll take the skating-rink, but you've got to be thrown into the bargain, too! Say you'll consent, Pardon!"

And at all events Pardon did not refuse.

"Eh?" said Asa Darwin, when the facts of the case became patent to his rather dense understanding, "young Merritt going to finish up the rink before frost come! And engaged to our Pardon, too! Well, I declare, that is a piece of luck!"

And this time Pardon took no exceptions to the obnoxious word.—Saturday Night.

Married the Wrong Woman.

There is a legend told in a great Yorkshire town to the effect that, after several couples had been simultaneously married at the parish church, one bride found her bridegroom walking away with another lady on his arm. The curate, summoned to her aid, remonstrated with the defaulter and besought him to take his proper partner. "Nay," said he, "aw was married to this 'un, and I loike her t' best." There is no reason why this should not be sober truth.

Rudeness in Speech.

Some pride themselves upon saying rude things. They fancy they have done a smart thing when they have given a ragged, coarse rebuff. We have known some Christian men to be very unchristian in this particular. All such ought to ponder this remark, made by one of the greatest of great men: "Sir, a man has no more right to say an uncivil thing than to act one—no more right to say a rude thing to another than to knock him down."

A PECULIAR DISEASE.

What Elephantiasis Will Do If It Gets Into Your System.

During the past few years there might have been seen at the various dime museums in different parts of the country specimens of a disease known as elephantiasis, when the lower limbs assume gigantic proportions. This disease, though rare in this climate, is quite common along the west coast of Africa, in India, Brazil, Egypt and the West India islands, says the Boston Courier. The term elephantiasis is applied to this disease from the great similarity of the lower limbs to those of the elephant. The disease begins in the lower limbs, like an erysipelas, with the usual constitutional disturbances of that affection. This condition subsides and the limbs assume apparently their normal dimensions. Soon a second like attack comes on, after which a slight swelling of the limbs is quite noticeable. This erysipelas inflammation occurs again and again at different intervals, occupying the space of a few years, and leaving after each attack an additional swelling in the limbs; as a connecting link between them. Thus the limbs assume this abnormal dimension—limbs have been known to measure nearly sixty inches around the thigh and thirty-five inches around the calf. A person thus afflicted finds it difficult to get around, owing to the great weight of the extremities. The disease runs a chronic course for twenty years or more, and, unless the surface changes are well marked, the health of the individual is not much affected.

The cause of the affection is said to be due to the presence in the human system of a parasite—viz., the Filaria Sanguinis Hominis, a thread-like worm, which is indigenous only within the tropics. The manner in which this parasite gets into the system is peculiar. It is said that the disease is propagated by the agency of mosquitos, who take up the Filaria with the blood they suck from a person affected. The Filaria passes through an intermediate developmental stage in the body of the mosquito; thence they pass into the drinking waters of the inhabitants of the vicinity, and thence again into the human body. So it is evident that they enter the blood vessels and tissues of the body from absorption in the intestines.

A CLEVER ARGUMENT.

How a Stuttering Lawyer Won an Almost Hopeless Case.

There used to be in practice in one of the southeastern cities of Massachusetts, says the Listener in the Boston Evening Transcript, a well-known lawyer, who had a considerable degree of success at the bar, in spite of an infirmity of speech that he never could get rid of. His stuttering appeals in behalf of his clients were sometimes fearful and wonderful deliverances oratorically, but his opponents used to say that they really gained in effectiveness from his stuttering, because the jury not only sympathized with him, but had time to take in and digest all his points.

One day he appeared in a Bristol County court-room before Judge Pitman and a jury, to defend a very tough-looking citizen, who had been arrested on a charge of selling liquor without a license. The man had a bad reputation and a bad face; whisky had been found on his premises, and if ever a man was convicted before he was tried it seemed to be this one.

But his stuttering lawyer was equal to the emergency. He cross-questioned the policeman who made the seizure:

"You s-s-say you found l-l-l-quor in this man's house?"

"Yes."

"W-w-what kind of liquor w-w-was it?"

"Whisky."

"Um. How, h-h-how much w-h-h-hisky did you f-f-find?"

"About half a pint, sir."

"H-h-half a pint; yes. Now, g-g-g-gentlemen of the j-j-jury, I want you to take a g-g-good l-l-l-long look at my c-c-c-client."

The jury took a good look at him. He wasn't a very pleasant sight to see; his nose was a sort of purple vermilion and considerably exaggerated in its proportions at that; his brows were low and shaggy, and his eyes bleared.

"Now, g-g-g-g-gentlemen of the j-j-j-ju-u-ry," the lawyer went on, "I want you to t-t-t-tell me if my c-c-c-c-l-lient looks like a man that would s-s-s-sell a half pint of whisky if it was all he had in the house."

The jury acquitted the man without leaving their seats.

LOOKING GLASSES.

Some Interesting Facts Regarding Their Manufacture.

"How is a looking glass made?" was the question asked by a Dispatch reporter of a local Pittsburgh manufacturer engaged in that line of business.

"That is a secret which we keep to ourselves. Even our employes are not informed of all the processes. Each workman has a certain amount of work to do; he learns that and no more. Many of the processes we use are patented, and others are known to but very few persons in this country. But I can tell you something about the business if you wish. Pittsburgh (or rather Allegheny) is the only city between New York and Chicago where plate-glass mirrors are made, and there is but one firm manufacturing them here. Pittsburgh plate glass, which is as good as that made anywhere, is largely used. The glass is taken as it comes from the factory and cut, beveled and silvered in our works. All bevels are cut in the same way, first with sand and water, then on an emery wheel, and afterward put through various processes to bring back the polish. Great improvements have been made in this line of industry in the past few years. Formerly it took three weeks from the time work was begun on a mirror before it could be finished. Now we can get the glass in the morning and make it into a mirror perfectly finished and ready for sale before evening. We make all sizes from the smallest up to glasses 6x12 feet or even larger, and have a capacity of turning out 2,000 feet per day.

"Formerly the backs of mirrors were coated with mercury; now, sheets of pure silver are used instead. The old mirror reflected sixty or sixty-five per cent. of the light that fell upon it; the modern mirror reflects nearly ninety-five per cent. The mercury looking glass was very liable to rub off; heat and cold also affected it; the quicksilver would crack or melt, and the beauty of the glass would be spoiled. None of these dangers threaten the silvered mirrors.

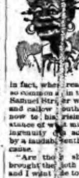
"Besides mirrors we cut a great deal of beveled plate glass for doors and windows. In fine buildings this is largely taking the place of stained glass."

The Marshal Niel Rose.

After his [illegible] in Italy the then General Niel, while returning to France, was given a basket of roses by a peasant. In it was a bud with a root attached to the stem. Niel kept the root and gave it to a noted floriculturist, who obtained from it four of the loveliest lemon-tinted roses the world had ever seen. Niel carried them to the Empress Eugenie, who remarked with vivacity: "I will christen this rose for you—the Marshal Niel," and from that day General Niel was a marshal of France.

SAMMIE'S SHIRT.

A Very Amusing Account of a Heathenish Proceeding.



MR. SAMUEL STRIKER'S mamma was the president of a ladies' aid society, the said society being connected with the missionary department of a certain church, and, as an arising consequence of these facts, the following conversation took place at the breakfast-table of the Strikers some time since, at a time, in fact, when ready-made shirts were not so common as in these later days, and when Samuel Striker was still in a state of green and callow youth, and he tells the story now to his rising generation as an instance of what miracles female energy and ingenuity can accomplish when inspired by a laudable enthusiasm in the missionary cause.

"Are those shirts done, mother? I brought the cloth home three weeks ago, and I want to wear to the Gibbs' party next week."

"Shirts, Sammy! Goodness gracious me, no; when have I had any time to waste in making shirts? There I have the missionary society on my hands and the—the—the—my son, how can you expect impossibilities?"

Sarcastically, "I hope the blessed heathen have plenty of shirts, made in style like mine which I have been wearing for the last six weeks, cuffs fringed, button-holes gaping like contribution boxes, and air-holes all over the bosom—suitable fashion for a hot country."

"I'll tell you, Sammy," coaxingly, "suppose you put the shirts into the society and let the ladies make them. It's really your duty, you know, to help the missionary cause, and they'll do it so cheap."

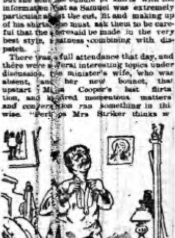
"And take the old shirts in payment, perhaps, for direct transmission to the South Sea Islands, a mutual benefit transaction for two classes of heathen. Eh, mother! Perhaps it would be a pious plan."

"But certainly, Sammy—"

"Seriously, mother, the shirt question is disposed of satisfactorily to all parties, heathen included. Now if you'll pass the sirup."

It came about unhappily that Mrs. Striker was sick when the next meeting occurred, but she sent the bundle of shirts with the information that as Samuel was extremely particular about the cut, fit and making up of his shirts, she must ask them to be careful that the aforesaid be made in the very best style, neatness combining with dispatch.

There was a full attendance that day, and there were several interesting topics under discussion, the minister's wife, who was absent, and her new bonnet, that upstart Miss Cooper's last flirtation, and kindred momentous matters and conversation ran something in this wise. "Perhaps Mrs Striker thinks we never made shirts before." This from Miss Prim, a maiden of uncertain years as well as temper.



"J-E-E-RUSALEM!" HE EXCLAIMED.

"Goodness, Miss Prim, she would have reason to if she was to see you putting that gusset in wrong side up."

"Te, he, he! No wonder Miss Prim doesn't understand shirt-making!" giggled Miss Pert, shaking her ringlets, as she whispered aside to a neighbor. She was a giddy young thing with an engagement ring on her finger, and had a lofty sense of superiority over those who were not so fortunate.

"As I was saying, one looks up to one's minister's wife as an example of—"

"How many plaits shall I put in the bosom, Miss Gibbs?"

"They do say she was out until three o'clock in the morning, and—"

"I always put my seams."

Here the matter became indistinguishable, and the manufacture of Sammy Striker's garment was carried on amidst a perfect babel of tongues.

It, the one specially completed for the Gibbs party, came home from the laundry about fifteen minutes before young Striker commenced the operation of dressing, so there was no time to make a critical examination of the shirt, which had a deceptive appearance of glossy identity, the imperfections, if there were any, being neatly folded in out of sight and ironed down and starched over; like human nature, it had its best foot forward, and Sammy Striker ascended the stairs to his room with it upon his arm, and his heart filled with a sense of security which only a young man who has never employed a ladies' aid society to do his sewing can have.

The washstand was liberally besprinkled with water for Sammy's ablutions were like those of a water spaniel, his sunny, auburn curls were neatly brushed, and he had carefully scrutinized his mustache to see if any fresh hairs had sprouted since his last counting, before he turned his attention to his missionary garment.

"Je-e-e-rusalem!" he exclaimed as he puffed and grew red in the face, trying to button the neck-band. It was a full inch too short.

Next he essayed to button the wristbands, thinking he could manage the neckband by looping a string through the button-hole.

"Jiminy Peter!" He danced around in a state bordering on distraction. The sleeves were four inches short, and one wristband was put on wrong side out.

Sammy's eye-teeth were being cut now and he took off the garment and began making a thorough and impartial examination of it. The bosom buttoned from the wrong side, one sleeve by some mysterious hocus pocus was put on upside down, the whole thing in fact was bewitched, and Sammy laid it down with a groan.

The party was at the house of his best girl and he was anxious to look particularly neat and attractive.

"What's the matter, Samuel?" The mother's quick ear had discovered that the course of events were not running smooth in her son's chamber, and her inquiring voice came floating up the stairway.

"Matter enough," growled the exasperated youth. "Another bonanza for the heathen if they don't object to wearing a shirt that's made bottom side up and wrong side out and too long and too short, too wide and too narrow," and the luckless garment came tearing down the stairs, lighting on Mrs. Striker's head and enveloping her like a halo.

"Why-e-e Samuel, don't it fit?"

"Fit! The man who could wear that shirt would have to have as many sides and sizes as a chameleon has colors. Toss up the shears and the twine ball and the white court plaster, so I can trim the cuffs and tie up the button-holes and patch over the holes in one of the old shirts," and a wailing groan finished the sentence.

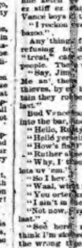
The remainder of Sammy Striker's toilet was performed under high pressure, judging from the language which occasionally escaped from his tightly-closed lips, but after he had arranged his Windsor tie so as to conceal a court-plaster patch, and buttoned his vest well up, he presented a very creditable appearance, but in spite of this pleasing circumstance he slammed down stairs as if something had occurred to disturb him, banging the front door behind him without even bidding his estimable mamma good-bye.

Happily for all parties concerned, Mrs. Striker attended the next society and supervised the shirt-making in person, and the remaining five came home in good order, but Sammy obstinately refused to trust even the hemming of a pocket-handkerchief to the Ladies' Aid Society as a consequence of the experience for all future time.

MRS. P. M. HOWARD.

A FATAL FEUD.

A Sketch of Life Among the "Crackers."



THE buffalo fish is not a "game" one, but it is as good as currency in country towns of the South in winter-time. It is of the "sucker" genus, and as numerous in the lakes and bayous as tadpoles in a stagnant pool.

Rus Gentry stopped his gray mule before the "grocery" door. A ten-mile drive against the cold north wind had frozen his cargo, made icicles on his red whiskers and slightly increased the color of his alcoholic nose.

"Hello, Rus, air you here erreddy?" asked the barkeeper, setting out a bottle and glass.

"Yes, an' I want er mule's ear full uv ole rye, fur I'm same nigh froze. I've got er fine ketch uv buf'lo, an' they're all froze ez stiff ez [illegible]. Hello, air them the Vance boys in the back room?"

"I reckon ever'body knows Bud Vance's bazoo."

Any thing from "running a fence" to refusing to drink or to reciprocate a "treat," can create a feud among such people. There was one here.

"Say, Jim," whispered Rus, "speak low. Me an' them Vances ain't es thick es thieves, by er blame sight. I'm purty certain they robbed my fish-trap week afore last."

Bud Vance came to the door that looked into the bar, and stopped when he saw Rus.

"Hello, Rusty!" he exclaimed.

"Hello yerself!" retorted Rus.

"How's fish?"

"Ruther skerce lately."

"Why, I thought you'd been er-ketchin lots uv 'em."

"So I hev."

"Waal, what makes 'em skeerce?"

"You orter know."

"I ain't in the fish bizness."

"Not now, p'raps, but you wus week afore last."

"See here now, Rus Gentry, ef you think I'm skeered uv you, you're barkin' up the wrong tree. I'm one of the ole blue hen's chickens, what come outen the shell in ther mornin' er crowin', an' whupt his daddy afore sundown. I don't intend ter take any more uv yer insinuations."

"You don' [illegible], Bud."

Bud's brother, Pelter, a big fellow with a stub nose and bulging forehead, came in. Rus got the drop. Jim disappeared under his bar. When the fight was over the Vances were dead. Rus, staggering over a barrel, fell and sat upright against it.

"Jim," he gasped, "whar air they?"

"Dead as last year's bits," answered Jim.

"All right. I'm satisfied. Sell the fish fur me, Jim, an' tell my wife I said fur you to take pay fur my licker bill outen' the proceeds. Ease me down—ter—ther—floor, Jim."

Jim eased him down.

CHARLES S. BLACKBURN.

They Were Boys Once.

"Three fellows in our class at Madison, Wis., were bad citizens," says an ex-Washington journalist, of ability and standing. "I was one of them myself. I remember that one night we went out to the barn of the president of the university, took a young calf and carried it to the belfry. Then we unhitched the bell-rope from the bell and tied the hind legs of the calf to that rope. In the morning when the sexton pulled the string the calf came down and almost killed him. That was fun for us boys. I was on hand and so were Cush and John. They were as bad as I was, but you'd hardly believe it now. John Spooner and Cush Davis to-day are dignified United States Senators. John is from Wisconsin and Cush is from Minnesota. They are good ones, too."

The Reason Why.

As they came from their summer's outing
And trotted from stage to car,
He bitterly groaned at the satchels,
Whose weight was heavier far
Than ever before in their travels.
Unpacking them later, he swore:
"Great skeets! Here's the rock of ages—
The soap I [illegible] out of the door."

Social Amenities.

"Why does my new house resemble your last 'first night' audience?" said Magram to his daughter's caller, young Litepiaye, wishing to be pleasantly facetious.

Then he was surprised to find that his mirth was not contagious when he gave the answer:

"Because both were pronounced so well papered."

Wrought of Desperation.

Miss Richpurse (despondently)—Oh, Edward! if I could only know for certain you loved me and not my money I would be your wife.

Mr. Hardpan (eagerly)—Test me, Eleanor! test my honesty.

Miss Richpurse—But how?

Mr. Hardpan (desperately)—Lend me a dollar until to-morrow.

LOSING ONE'S TEMPER.

Take It All in All, the Human Family Is a Mighty Queer Set.

It takes so little to make a man mad, writes "Amber" in the Chicago Tribune. I saw a dog in the crowd last parade day. Somebody stepped on its tail, and although it could not locate the aggressor it snapped on general principles. It yelped at all creation. Although unable to single out anybody in particular it made it up by including the innocent many with the guilty one, as the teacher does when he keeps an entire virtuous class in after school because Tommy Traddles whispered. That is the way with the average man (and woman). We will patiently endure great stress of physical pain, horrible mental anxiety, bankruptcy, desertion, and even the close brush of death's battle-axe, but fly all to pieces over some little cause of offense, and make everybody miserable because of an affront of less import than the accidental treading on a dog's tail in a crowd. A man will howl and caper like a lunatic over a refractory collar-button, who would face death on a battle-field like a hero. A woman will sit around all day with a brimstone pug dog in her arms, sit through a matinee with a seven-story hat between her and the stage, walk ten miles on a shopping expedition and preserve her amiability, but will whip her child cruelly because it spills her perfumery or loses her spool of cotton.

A man is proud of his muscle and will stand up to be buffeted by a boxer and pummeled into a human poultice by a scientific antagonist and call it sport, but if his baby boy runs against him and trips him up, or if a stranger jostles him in the street, he is mad enough to set Constantinople on fire!

Now, if we lost our temper only under great provocation it wouldn't be so awful. For the Good Book, among other blessed loop-holes of escape, sets the clause, "If it be possible," within the command to "live peaceably with all men." The dear Lord knew when the admonition was given that it would be quite impossible to live always in this world of ours without losing one's temper. Indeed, I think Heaven itself would blush for the man or the woman who was incapable of getting downright mad for special causes. When I saw a man riding by my window a few moments ago lashing a poor, old, broken-down horse with a "blacksnake" whip I was mad enough to stone that man all the way from here to Hyde Park. If I hadn't been there might have been a reasonable doubt in the recording angel's mind as to whether I had a soul worth balancing accounts with. When I overheard a woman at the matinee the other day tell her little two-year-old boy that she should kill him if he didn't stop being afraid of the music, I felt mad enough at that travesty of every thing sacred and sweet in motherhood to see her put in the penitentiary for the rest of her life! And when a father (!) on the train this morning slapped his boy in the face because he cried aloud with ear-ache I think I could have signed the brute's death warrant as readily as I could receipt a bill. Thank God, every one of you, if you have enough of Heaven in your soul to denounce cruelty and impurity and dishonor wherever encountered. Rage is divinely just when brought to bear against great and harmful wrongs. But rage vented on trifling issues is as out of place as artillery in hunting grasshoppers.

That One who, alone out of all who have lived on earth, kept Himself pure and unsullied by earth's defilements, was not always meek and mild. When He thundered forth His denunciation of hypocrisy; when He drove the money-changers from the temple; when He denounced the whining knaves who did their alms in public and rebuked those who, being unclean themselves, yet judged of purity in others, He was neither "meek" nor "lowly." He smote as the bolt smites that leaps from the quivering cloud, and He looked for wrath and indignation from every one of us against all forms of oppression, pretension and tyranny. It is only, I think, when we lose our temper on questions of personal import that we are ignoble. Looking ever at our pattern of the sinless One, we see Him smitten, insulted, reviled, betrayed, forsaken and crucified, with never a whisper but of Divinest patience and tenderest forgiving love. The soul that shall possess itself in patience under the sense of all injuries and insults which affect only its own peace, attains closest unto the Divine similitude.

But, O, dear! how easy it is to lay down rules for keeping oneself calm and superior to the sting of insults and the slur of venomous tongues! The first impulse of the old Adam within us all is to "give as good as is sent."

The old man who tried the plan of counting one hundred before he spoke, when his neighbor called him names over the back fence because he didn't keep his chickens at home, and went into the house afterward and hit his wife on the head with a bootjack, exemplified the merit of all the rules laid down to cultivate self-possession. It is next to impossible to keep back the angry words and keep down the spirit of wrath under provocation. I, for one, am too awfully human to keep still under abuse. It may be Christian to turn the other cheek and hand back a soft word for a bitter one, but the only safety for the unsanctified, if he wishes to keep his temper, is to run. It takes something higher than human strength to pocket an affront sweetly or to keep your lips closed when a son of Belial is flinging hot shot at you. Divine grace will help a man through, but we don't all of us possess it. So the next best thing to do, if you wish to preserve your self-respect, is to quit the scene. For next to a man chasing his hat in high wind, a man bandying angry words over a trifle is the most foolish sight in a world of folly. So if you find yourself involved in circumstances where to stay means to quarrel, go! For I tell you no boy ever lost his marbles more irrevocably out of a ragged pocket than you and I will lose our self-respect and our dignity if we remain to take part in a wordy discussion that ends in a broil.

I don't suppose the dear little [illegible] who wrote to ask my counsel as to keeping one's temper under provocation will find any material aid in what I have written. No soldier can take advice as to a battle which he must fight for himself, and so no human heart can substantially aid another to grapple with and hold that wary and elusive foe, the temper. All we can do for one another in this campaign for which we have been drafted by destiny is to encourage and counsel as we can, and leave the issue to Heaven and our own endurance and grit as faithful soldiers.

Grasses in Sponges.

A very pretty foliage decoration for rooms or conservatories can be made of a white sponge. Fill the sponge full of rye, canary, hemp, grass or other seeds.—Then place it in a shallow fancy dish. The prettier the dish is, of course, the prettier the decoration will be. Pour water in the dish; the sponge will absorb this. Keep enough water to always have the sponge moist. In a short time the seeds will sprout and make the sponge look very pretty. The dish can then be placed on a table, or the sponge can be suspended, without the dish, in some position where it is exposed to the sunlight. It must be well watered, so that the sponge is always moist, and it will then exhibit a mass of delicate green foliage.

AN INSANE SULTAN.

The Sad Fate of Murad V., Who Succeeded Abdul-Aziz in 1876.

A correspondent of the Vienna Neue Freie Presse gives the following account of the sad fate of Sultan Murad V., who for three months in the summer of 1876, occupied the throne of Constantinople: "A marble staircase connects Yildiz Kiosk with another large palace, against whose stone walls of dazzling whiteness dash the waves of the sea. Gloomy silence hangs over this house; it is carefully guarded, and the streets approaching it are closed. This is the residence of the deposed Emperor Murad, whom a fatal hour deprived of his reason. It was on the day on which the insurrection broke out in Constantinople which hurled Abdul-Aziz from his throne. The trembling Prince was suddenly dragged from his quiet seclusion by the rebels, who placed him on their standard. He imagined that the executioners had come; the terror of that moment paralized his understanding. With a shattered brain he mounted the throne. He now occupies the imperial palace of Teheragan. His mother, his wives and his children are with him; he has been allowed to retain his numerous retinue. The Emperor enjoys every possible care. There are hours when his strength and health appear to have returned and his utterances sound so clear and sensible that his faithful attendants preserve them as the oracles of Heaven. But he soon sets again to ruining the magnificent apartments of the palace, or he is lost in wild reveries; his face becomes flushed, his eyes flash, and he quakes with the terror, doubt and agony of that hour in which the demon of insanity took possession of him."

THE GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE.

Governor Green's annual message which was issued too late, we regret to say, for insertion in full in this issue, has received general commendation from the leading political organs of all parties. The Republican Times, of this city, even says: "Some of the suggestions of the message deserve the careful consideration of the Legislature."

The matters of State control and regulation treated of, were clearly and thoroughly set forth in a way that evidenced the writer had nothing else in view than the greatest good to the greatest number of the people of New Jersey.

CABINET MINISTERS.

The Heads of Departments of the National Government at Washington, together denominated the Cabinet, are designed to be not only the immediate and efficient administrators of their respective branches of the public service, but the confidential counselors of the President.

Hence it is essential that they should be, each and every one of them, selected with especial reference to their known official ability, and in like manner, for their individual integrity of character, congeniality among themselves and with the Chief Executive.

It is just and proper that Cabinet Ministers should be in full and free partisan accord with the President.

No person can rightfully object to that.

With here and there an exception, all our Presidents have evinced sound judgment in the selection of official advisers, and exercised the legitimate prerogative of thinking and acting for themselves, upon whom the responsibility of choice rests.

In these days of degenerate politics a new order of procedure is sought to be established. Men are urged, vehemently urged for Cabinet appointments not because of their practical qualifications for the discharge of public duty, not that they are intelligent statesmen, not in view of their honorable repute as citizens, but because they have proven themselves to be unprincipled political workers, or personal contributors and raisers of large sums of money for corrupt electioneering expenditure.

We hope President-elect Harrison, for his own credit and safety, and for the welfare of country, will say to all bad and doubtful aspirants, their aiders and abettors, "stand aside."

DANCING.

Some politico-religious gentlemen out West are working themselves into great excitement and intemperate language because there will be dancing in Washington on the night of the inauguration of President Harrison.

Frightful apparition!

To all such sensitive people we would propound a few questions, namely:

What business have you to meddle with the matter anyway?

How can the President be justly held responsible for the dancing of others?

How do you expect that an Inauguration, or any other kind of ball, can be conducted without dancing?

Is it a more flagrant sin to "trip the light fantastic toe" in the dance, than for scurvy politicians to corruptly [illegible] to the polls squads of floating voters and for high-professing Christians to contribute and collect money and [illegible] handle it for the purpose of wrongfully influencing elections?

Better, [illegible], gentlemen, become sensible, and then seriously ponder the following quoted utterance of such an eminent man as Judge Gresham:

"It is the Pharisees who are doing this. It is men of prominence and respectability who raise these large sums of money knowing the use that they will be put to, men who deal openly in corruption one day and go to church the next."

American citizens of African descent ask as a matter of justice that their race shall be directly represented in the Cabinet of President Harrison. Mr. Fred. Douglass and ex-Senator Bruce are named as being eminently worthy of selection. Why should not the request be granted? They both are intelligent men, and, we believe, neither one of them has ever sullied his hands with bribery and corruption. Can some of their prominent paler-faced Republican competitors for high official position show as clean a record?

The total production of pig iron in the South last year was over a million tons. Of this amount Alabama made [illegible] tons, Tennessee [illegible] tons, and Virginia 217,000 tons. Being an increase of [illegible] tons over 1887, while in the rest of the country the production was about [illegible] tons less than during the former year. We see no other course for the tariff-subsidized Iron Barons of Pennsylvania than to demand an amendment to the Federal Constitution prohibiting internal free trade, and restricting ore development in all the States except their own.

What shall be done with James G. Blaine, the greatest statesman on earth, appears to be an undecided and perplexing question. Republicans of prominence rush to Indianapolis and assure the President-elect, that his party with striking unanimity demand the appointment of Mr. Blaine to the Secretaryship of State, while others of like partisan standing follow hard after and declare such action would ruin the incoming administration, and destroy the peace of mind of its Executive. The dilemma recalls to memory an old-time clergyman who, in criticising the peculiar tenets of another denomination, said they virtually meant—"You shall and you shan't, you will and you won't, you'll be lost if you do and you'll be lost if you don't."

Crashed Through the Roof.

During the gale on Saturday evening, a brick chimney was blown from Mr. Wm. Swain's residence, No. 22 East Seventh street, and the heavy stone capping went crashing through the roof. A considerable portion of the roof was demolished and much of the plastering was knocked from the ceiling in the room below. No one was injured.

The Doctors' Meeting.

The quarterly meeting of the physicians of this city was held in the parlor of the City Hotel, Monday night. Those present were: Doctors Hedges, Penfield, Murray, Endicott, Probasco, Fritts, Tomlinson, Davis, Boone, Jenkins, Simpson, Root and Paul. A paper of general interest to the profession was read by Dr. Endicott and fully discussed.

After a bountiful collation was served, the Society transacted some other business and adjourned.

Board of Health Meeting.

Messrs. Geo. W. Rockfellow, S. A. Ginna, L. W. Serrell, Dr. Chas. Penfield, and O. B. Leonard, constituting the Board of Health, met in the City Clerk's office, Friday night, and considered matters pertaining to the health of the city. Reports were made by the various Committees, and other business transacted. The health inspector reported that at the present time there are only two cases of a malignant nature in the entire city, and they are diphtheria, in a very mild form. This speaks well for the city's health.

As the the term of office of Messrs. Rockfellow and Leonard, have now expired, the Council will probably fill the vacancies, at its meeting on Monday evening.

Smalley—Smith.

It was a Happy New Year's Day at the home of Mr. Peter A. Smith, in Piscataway township, and about forty relatives and friends gathered there early in the afternoon to witness the nuptials of the daughter of the host, Miss Emma J. Smith, and Mr. Jacob S. Smalley of Bound Brook. At two o'clock Miss Alice J. Wood of Plainfield started to play the wedding march and the contracting parties entered the parlor preceded by Miss Lottie Terry of Plainfield, the bridesmaid, and Mr. Daniel D. Clark, Jr., of Bound Brook, the groom's best man. The ceremony was performed by Rev. H. B. MacCauley, pastor of the Bound Brook Presbyterian church, following which refreshments were served. The bride was the recipient of numerous handsome and useful presents.—Chronicle.

FIRE AT WESTFIELD.

About half-past 5 o'clock Monday morning the large frame barn of Mr. John Miller, located about a mile Southeast of the Westfield station, was discovered to be on fire, and an hour later the structure was reduced to smouldering ruins, together with all the Winter grain, hay, straw, wagons, harness, robes, etc. Fortunately all the live stock was safely removed, but all the rest of the contents was totally destroyed. The local fire department turned out and fought the flames, but when the firemen arrived on the spot, the fire had gained such headway, that it was impossible to save the building.

The barn was evidently fired by an incendiary, as the fire broke out in a portion of the building which is seldom used. The barn cost $1,600, and was insured for $700. The loss on the contents will probably not exceed $1,000.

AN AWFUL EVIDENCE.

The Picture and the Story of Peculiar Divine Testimony, That Mr. Frank Morse Sends From Holland to His Young Friends in Plainfield.

One of the most active workers in the successful organization of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the Trinity Reformed church, was Mr. Frank W. Morse, who also, during his long residence here, was one of the most earnest laborers in all the righteous projects for the advancement of Christianity and temperance among the people of the whole city.

He subsequently married a daughter of Mr. Morgan W. Bird, of Park avenue, and went to Holland as resident representative of one of the branches of the Standard Oil Company. But even in that far off country, he is still thinking of his friends here and their welfare. In a recent letter he sends the picture reproduced above, and writes as follows:—which letter was read before the society.

"It was my privilege on the evening of July 3, 1888, to stand by the side of this grave in the old burying ground in Marktstrasse Hannover. The inscription on the lower base granite block is translated: 'this forever bought grave may never be opened,' but it is the only grave in the whole yard that is opened.

"Dieses auf ewig erkaufte
"Begraebniss darf nie
"Geoffnet werden."

"The well-beaten path to it in one corner of the graveyard, the many inscriptions, names, initials, etc., cut upon the tree, all testify how great a witness it has been to the truth of God's word. Not one stone is in its original place the iron bands or clamps are broken, and parts of them are still there.

"I send this to you with accompanying photograph that it may be the instrument in God's hands of still further witness bearing to Him who said: I am the Resurrection and the Life.

"Very truly yours,
"FRANK W. MORSE."
Rotterdam, Holland.

The following story of the disrupted tomb is from an article entitled, "Nature a Medium of Jesus' Voice," by the Rev. Dr. McNulty in the Sunday School Times, Feb. 4, 1888:

"A young German Countess, who lived about one hundred years ago, was a noted unbeliever, and especially opposed to the doctrine of the Resurrection. She died when about thirty years of age, and before her death gave orders that her grave should be covered with a solid slab of granite; that around it should be placed square blocks of stone, and that the corners should be fastened to each other and to the granite slab with heavy iron clamps. Upon the covering she directed this inscription to be engraved: 'This burial-place, purchased to all eternity, must never be opened.' It was done as she desired. All that human power could do to prevent any change in that grave was done. But by and by a little seed upon the grave beneath sprouted, and the tiny shoot found its way between the side stone and the upper slab, and grew there, slowly but steadily forcing its way until the iron clamps were torn asunder, and the massive granite lid was raised up, and rests today against the trunk of a large and flourishing tree.

"Some would call it superstition in the people of Hannover, who see in it a Divine finger, and who never pass it without a feeling of awe. But we do not. They speak in subdued tones to each other, in sight of it, of the wickedness of the Countess, and the evident judgment of God in this peculiar testimony; and we wonder not at it. Can we avoid the conviction that Jesus gave this peculiar witness, under peculiar circumstances, to that great central truth of Christianity, the Resurrection, when infidelity so publicly and brazenly assailed it? At the same time it constitutes an evidence that He can and does introduce nature into His pulpit, if He wishes, and occasion demands."

Sudden Death at Oak Tree.

On New Year's night, Mrs. Henry Davis, a colored woman residing at Oak Tree, died suddenly, soon after she retired at her accustomed time, complaining of feeling ill. She called her husband to her side, and the latter had just reached the bedside and raised his wife's head in his arms, when she expired. Heart disease is given as the cause of death.

Damage by the Storm.

The rain storm which set in early on Saturday morning, and continued throughout the day and Sunday, did considerable damage in this vicinity. Chimneys were blown from the tops of residences, and the telephone system was seriously interfered with. Between this city and Rahway, fully a half dozen telephone poles were grounded.

The storm was the most severe on Saturday evening, when the rain came down in torrents, and the wind blew a perfect gale. The rain fell to such an extent as to raise the water in Green Brook so as to make it resemble a mad and rushing river. All the low lands in this vicinity were inundated, and many cellars in the East section of the city were flooded.

FELL DEAD IN THE ROADWAY.

Mrs. Phoebe Vanderhoven, a widow lady living at Oak Tree, was found lying dead in the roadway, midway between her residence and that of Mr. Benjamin Kelly, on Wednesday of last week. The old lady was 81 years of age, and has enjoyed moderate health up to the time of her death.

On Wednesday afternoon, Mrs. Vanderhoven started from home, evidently in the best of health and spirits, to call on the family of Mr. Kelly, a quarter of a mile or more away. The day was bright and pleasant, and the old lady walked leisurely along, until she had reached a point in the roadway about midway between the two houses, when she fell to the ground dead, where she was found some time afterward by some of the neighbors who were passing. Heart disease is assigned as the cause of death.

The funeral took place from the house on Saturday.

A Trial by Jury.

Fritz Schlitter of New York city, recently brought suit against Mr. Edward Love of this city to recover $200 claimed to be due him for wages on contract. The case was tried before Justice Nash and a jury on Saturday afternoon, and attracted a large number of spectators. The particulars are as follows;

The complainant claims that he was hired by Mr. Love for one year at a salary of $12 weekly, but before the year expired, he was thrown out of employment, and it was on this account that he brought suit to recover the $200 alleged to be due him.

The defence claimed that there was no contract, that the complainant's work was unsatisfactory, but the defendant had given him employment purely for charity sake. Mr. Love admitted that he was obliged to lessen his expenses, in order to compete with other wall-paper establishments.

The case occupied all of the afternoon, and was given to the jury after dark. At ten P. M., the jury was unable to agree, and Justice Nash discharged them. The jury stood 9 to 3 in favor of the defendant.

Assemblyman Ulrich appeared for the plaintiff and Mr. W. R. Codington represented the defendant.

The Death Record.

The death is announced of Sarah Jane, the esteemed wife of Mr. Gerome Pack, which occurred at her home on Park avenue at an early hour Sunday morning. The deceased was sixty-nine years of age. About ten days ago she was stricken down with inflammatory rheumatism, from the effects of which she never recovered. The deceased was a life-long Christian, and was a member of the First Baptist church at the time of her death. Besides the husband, two children, a son and daughter, survive her, the latter the wife of ex-Mayor VanWinkle of North Plainfield.

Mr. L. M. Roesp, an old and highly respected citizen of this city, died at his residence on West Front street, at five o'clock Monday A. M., from paralysis of the kidneys. The deceased was about 65 years of age. On Monday of last week he contracted a cold, which developed into the complaint above named, and resulted in his death. Mr. Roesp was an extensive milk dealer, having built up a large business here. Several children survive him, the wife of Manager Moore of the Electric Light company being a daughter.

Edward C. Mulford, Jr., youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Mulford of East Fifth street, died at his parents' residence Sunday, from pneumonia, aged six years, nine months and two days.

Headstones for the Dead Soldiers.

Capt. William Hand recently received from the Quarter-Master General a consignment of twelve headstones, which he has placed at the head of the graves of the dead soldiers in the various cemeteries in this city and North Plainfield. The stones are delivered and set up free of charge, in accordance with an act of congress. Relatives and friends of the dead soldiers, can secure headstones by making application to Capt. Hand.

Fire in the Seventh Day Baptist Parsonage.

Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis' residence, adjoining the Seventh Day Baptist church on Central avenue, had a narrow escape from total destruction on evening of Jan. 3. Flames from a lamp set fire to some lambrequins in one of the rooms on the lower floor, and they were totally destroyed. Very fortunately Dr. Lewis was conversing with one of the church deacons in his study at the time, and the combined efforts of both of the gentlemen were required to extinguish the fire, which at one time threatened serious consequences. Dr. Lewis had one of his hands terribly burned.

A Letter From Rev. Mr. Koechli.

EDITOR OF DAILY PRESS:—Please allow me space in your paper to make a few remarks about the touching communication from Mr. Morse, which appeared in Friday's paper, concerning the grave in Hannover:

In the first instance the translation of the inscription is not correct. It is as follows: "This forever bought grave dare never be opened."

Now we Germans do not understand it as an offence against God indicating that He shall not dare or that he may not be able to open it, but we simply understand it shall not be opened by the hand of man.

The word "ewig" eternal, was especially in that time a very common or universally used technical term, to indicate that according to the law or civil order, or according to the law of nature a thing shall not be changed or may not be changed, and it will be found in thousands of documents. This phrase was only used to signify that a thing shall last long, in the same sense as we find the word used in many places in the old testament.

Truly yours,
F. KOECHLI.

A Young Organist at Holy Cross.

There was a larger congregation at the Church of the Holy Cross, Sunday morning, than was expected, because of the heavy rainstorm, and those that did attend received profitable instruction from a most eloquent sermon preached by the rector, Rev. T. Logan Murphy, taking as his text the following:

> And when they were come into the house they saw the young child with Mary, His mother, and fell down and worshipped Him; and when they had opened their treasures they presented unto Him gifts; gold, and frankincense, and myrrh. —Matthew 2:11.

The usual afternoon services were held at 4 o'clock, and notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, were well attended.

The vacancy occasioned by the expired term of Mr. Clarence E. Eick, as organist at this church, was supplied temporarily by the voluntary offer of Mr. Willie McClymont, who is a member of the surpliced choir. For a young man of only sixteen years of age his rendering of the various selections on the organ was most creditable. He was warmly congratulated.

There are several applicants for the position, but no positive action has yet been taken.

False-Faced, Also.

The News was beaten, as usual, in its Saturday issue, by another dozen items. It knew nothing of

The Board of Health meeting;
The installation of the S. of T., officers;
The robbery of Mrs. Stiles;
The serious illnesses of Mrs. Pack and Mr. Roesp;
The big entertainment of Anchor Lodge;
The meetings of the Oxford League;
The McKay-Halahan wedding;
The funeral of Mrs. Stillman;
The fire in the Seventh Day Baptist parsonage;
The temperance revival meeting in Hope chapel;
The organization of the grocers;
The Knights of Honor officers installed, and
The accident to the driver of the Hook and Ladder truck.

But the News of that day had not only the dishonesty to steal from the columns of THE PRESS the list of newly chosen officers of the Gesang and Turn Verein, but also the deceitfulness to date their election a day ahead so as to secure credit for having an item within twenty-four hours of its happening.

THE CITY COUNCIL.

AN ORGANIZATION FOR 1889 PERFECTED.

The Council for 1889 convened at eight o'clock, Monday, City Clerk, Oliver B. Leonard calling the body to order, according to the city charter. The roll call showed the following members present: Messrs Jenkins, Gallup, Dumont, Dunham, Erickson, Myers, Marsh, Moffett, Squires, and Newhall—10. Mr. Watson was absent.

At the instigation of Mr. Marsh, the Council proceeded to elect a President, and Mr. J. B. Dumont was nominated. Ten ballots were cast resulting as follows: Dumont, 8; Marsh, 1; Blank, 1. The election of Mr. Dumont was subsequently declared unanimous.

Mr. Dumont upon taking the chair, thanked the Council for the flattering vote of the members in electing him to the honored position of President. He said he had been a member of five Councils in this city, and all would agree with him, that the Councilmen met together for the transaction of city affairs. He said the election of a City Clerk was next necessary, and Mr. Squires nominated the present incumbent, Mr. O. B. Leonard. He was declared elected without a dissenting vote.

HOW THE COUNCILMEN WILL SIT.

President—John B. Dumont.
Clerk—O. B. Leonard.
Squires. Newhall.
Dunham. Myers.
Marsh. Gallup.
Erickson. Moffett.
Jenkins. Watson.
Janitor—W. V. Mundy.
Press. Times.

The rules of order governing the last Council, were adopted by the present Council, with a slight amendment by Mr. Squires, changing the titles of some of the Committees.

Councilman Marsh nominated Mr. W. V. Mundy for janitor, and the nomination was confirmed.

Upon motion of Mr. Marsh the clerk was instructed to have roll calls and committee cards printed, when the Committees were appointed.

The W. C. T. U. petitioned the Council for permission to run a coffee cart to fires and on election day, and the petition was granted.

Messrs C. P. Sebring and J. F. MacIntyre asked permission to remove frame buildings from the North side of North avenue, so as to make room for brick structures. The petitions were referred and subsequently granted.

President Dumont then announced the following committees:

Alms—Messrs Jenkins, Squires, Dunham.
Auditing — Messrs Watson, Gallup, Newhall.
Finance — Messrs Myers, Newhall, Marsh.
Fire and Buildings—Messrs Erickson, Myers, Moffett.
Laws and Ordinances—Messrs Gallup, Moffett, Squires.
Public Lights—Messrs Squires, Erickson, Watson.
Licenses — Messrs Moffett, Jenkins, Myers.
Police, Salaries and Elections—Messrs Dunham, Marsh, Gallup.
Streets — Messrs Marsh, Dunham, Jenkins.
Water, Printing and Stationery—Messrs Newhall, Watson, Erickson.

Claims were presented and referred as follows:

Poor—Elizabeth Schorb, $27.20; M. A. Cooper, $24; K. Eringer, $4; L. A. Connett, $3; Jas. Cahill, $3; Jas. Hanahen, $10.

Miscellaneous—O. B. Leonard, $50; A. Titsworth, $91; Jas. Clark, $105; J. H. Doane, $18; J. T. Vail, $40; Job Male, $9; Electric Light Co., $578.11; L. M. Stover, $12.

Fire Department—Jos. Cooney, $16.03; A. M. Griffen, $5.50.

Sundry poor claims, presented at the last meeting, were taken from the table and referred to the Alms Committee.

The yearly report of the City Treasurer was read and ordered printed. Later it was referred to the Finance Committee, in whose hands it was held.

The Treasurer also submitted his bond for $15,000, with the names of J. G. Cadmus, J. S. Cutter, A. Vanderbeek, John Chandler and James F. Buckle, as sureties. It was returned for correction. He further petitioned the Council for a new book and a safe. The former request was granted. He stated that $1,500 was due the general fund from the poor fund, which amount the Treasurer was authorized to transfer. The Treasurer called attention to a note and certain bonds now about to mature, and asked for information as to whether or not he had the power to pay library drafts, when the bills do not come regularly before the Council. The report was received and filed.

Mayor Male presented his annual message, which was published in full in THE PRESS of Tuesday.

The various Committees returned with approval the claims presented during the evening, and they were transferred to the Auditing Committee.

Mr. Erickson offered a resolution, which prevailed, providing for the payment of Mr. A. M. Griffen's claim of $550 for a heating apparatus, whereby the claimant is required to sign a written stipulation for the faithful performance of the work.

THE CIRCUS BEGINS.

Mr. Squires introduced an ordinance, amending the general liquor license ordinance. The ordinance was put on its second reading, Messrs. Moffett and Gallup voting "no."

The first section of the ordinance provides that no person who cannot read and write the English language shall be eligible to sign a license application; furthermore no woman shall be granted a license. This section was adopted, Messrs. Moffett and Gallup voting "no."

The second section of the proposed new ordinance provides that only one license shall be granted for every 500 names or fraction thereover registered at the last election. The vote on the adoption of this section was a tie as follows:

Ayes—Messrs. Jenkins, Dunham, Marsh, Squires, Newhall.
Nays—Messrs. Gallup, Dumont, Erickson, Myers and Moffett.

The third section placed the license fee at $1,000. This was also lost by a tie vote as above recorded. The first section of the ordinance was ordered engrossed and advertised, Messrs. Gallup and Moffett voting "no."

Upon motion of Mr. Marsh an appropriation of $3,000 was made for repairs on the streets.

It was also moved and carried that when the Council adjourn, it be to meet again on Monday evening next.

Chief Doane, was upon motion of Mr. Erickson, authorized to obtain bids for 1,500 feet of new hose, and report at the next meeting.

Mr. Moffett asked whether or not the above ordinance would interfere with the license applications presented this year, and the chair answered that until the ordinance was advertised and finally passed, it could not become a law.

Mr. Marsh spoke of Councilman Watson's prolonged absence. He said that if Mr. Watson and his family had left the city, it was really necessary to elect a Councilman from the First Ward. He made a motion, which prevailed, authorizing the Laws and Ordinance Committee to communicate with Mr. Watson and ascertain as to whether or not he still claimed Plainfield as his residence place.

The Auditing Committee reported on the claims, and the Council adjourned.

The Newark M. E. Conference.

The next session of the Newark M. E. Conference will be held in this city in April. The new rule making the limit of term for a pastorate five years instead of three, it is thought, will make very little difference as to the number of removals this year. There are thirty-six men who will have served three years each with the expiration of the present Conference year. It is estimated that more than half the thirty-six will leave the present charges.

Officers Installed.

At a meeting of Wetumpka Lodge, 3,401, Knights of Honor, held on Thursday Jan. 3, the following officers were installed:

Past Dictator—J. G. Betzler.
Dictator—S. C. Baker.
Vice Dictator—J. H. Doane.
Assistant Dictator—G. E. Rank.
Reporter—H. A. Thorne.
Financial Reporter—G. A. Hallock.
Treasurer—W. A. Conger.
Chaplain—C. P. Wheeler.
Guide—H. J. Martin.
Guardian—J. M. Gulick.
Sentinel—P. Dopringer.
Medical Examiner—O. L. Jenkins.
Trustees—H. E. Gayle, T. H. Bartindale; J. C. Pierson, Jr.

A MEAN THIEF.

Many good people of this city have known and assisted for some time, Mrs. Hannah Stiles, an aged woman of seventy years, who is compelled by force of circumstances, at least, if not, injustice, to subsist upon what is given her in charity, or the little she can earn from odd jobs that are to her almost as few and far between as angel's visits.

Her only means of support in years past, was a faithful son, Joseph, but he, however, died long ago of inflammatory rheumatism which it is said he contracted in the war which he had entered in the defence of his country.

The mother thus left a pauper, vainly petitioned the government for the pension provided for such as her. The dead son's papers seemed to be made out correctly, and the copy of his honorable discharge accompanied them, but although thousands of able bodied mechanics and others are today enjoying pensions they do not deserve or need, Mrs. Stiles has been unable to get her claim acted upon.

Just before the holidays, she had scraped together by frugality and self-denial, the sum of three dollars. It sounds to the reader so small, yet to her it meant not only many an extra comfort through the Winter, but something to celebrate Christmas with. But a few days before, while Mrs. Stiles was out in the woods gathering sticks to warm her aged body and cook her sorry meal, some mean thief seized the occasion of her absence, and entering her lonely cabin on the mountain top back of Wetumpka Falls, stole the money from the corner of the shelf where she had hid it.

BOROUGH COUNCIL MEETING.

The regular January meeting of the Borough Council was held in the parlor of Warren Engine house, Friday night, all the members being present excepting Messrs Hegeman, Needham and Biker. Mayor Cooley occupied his accustomed seat, Clerk Arnold read the minutes of the last meetings, regular and special, the latter held on Wednesday of last week for the purpose of considering the payment of certain notes now falling due, and to hear the report of the Committee on Fire Department matters, all of which were approved.

Mayor Cooley sent in a communication submitting for confirmation the name of Mr. H. J. Martin for Chief of the Borough Fire Department, and also nominating Mr. Charles Wann as a member of the Board of Health, for a term of four years. The communication was subsequently acted upon, and both of the nominations were unanimously confirmed.

Mr. Chas. Hyde and others petitioned the Council to accept a certain thoroughfare known as Belmont avenue, beginning at Brook avenue, and extending North to Mountain avenue. Referred.

Petitions for peddlers' license was asked for and granted as follows: Elizabeth Installment Company, Thomas Newman.

The Collector's report was as follows:

Taxes previously acknowledged in Dec.	$1,547.62
Received	4,330.03
Total Collections to date	$5,877.65

The Collector's report showed a balance of $23.94 on hand. Both of the above reports were filed.

Claims were presented and referred as follows: Job Coddington, salary and meals for prisoners, $39.75; T. W. Morrison, printing, or rather botching, borough ordinances, $72.80; M. Powers, laying cross-walks, $47.54; W. L. Force & Bro., advertising, $3; N. Y. and N. J. Globe Gaslight Co., street lighting, $260.48.

Mr. McGee, from the Fire, Water and Lamps Committee, said that the N. Y. and N. J. Globe Gaslight Company was desirous of having the old street lighting contract renewed for another year, and there was no objection.

The Auditing Committee, through Mr. McCutchen, returned as correct all of the above bills, excepting that of Mr. Powers, for cross-walks, and also reported favorably upon the audited bill of Chas. Seibel, $3.80, for repairs to Warren Engine. The report was received, the recommendation of the Committee concurred, in and the bills ordered paid by warrant.

Resolutions were presented and adopted as follows: By Mr. McCutchen, for a sidewalk on the South side of Chatham street, in front of property owned by Messrs Geo. and Will Craig.

By Mr. McGee, for a sidewalk in front of property owned by Sarah C. Lewis on the East side of Steiner place.

By the same Councilman, for a sidewalk in front of the property on the East side of Grove street, owned by Daniel C. Adams; also for a sidewalk along both fronts of the lot owned by Alonzo DeCamp, at the corner of Grove street and Craig place.

Mr. McGee made a motion which prevailed, ratifying the action of the Mayor and Clerk, in drawing a warrant for $87.50 on account of interest on the Fire Department bonds.

A resolution was also adopted, authorizing the Mayor and Clerk to draw warrants for the payment of notes falling due as follows: $800, Jan. 15th, from lighting account. $500, Feb. 1st, from road account.

Mr. McGee offered a resolution to the effect that the Fire, Water and Lamps Committee locate a lamp on Summit avenue, if in the judgment of the Committee it was considered necessary. The resolution was adopted.

Council then adjourned.

I. S.—W. E. Traynor.
O. S.—E. W. Dolan.

During the evening two applications for membership were received. Members from Rahway Division were present, and participated in the exercises. Remarks were made by several of those present.

The Annual Dinner of the Yale Alumni of Plainfield.

January 2 the Yale Graduates and their invited guests sat down to dinner at the residence of J. Evarts Tracy, Esq., on Eighth street. The company numbered sixteen gentlemen, Mr. E. C. Perkins representing his alma mater, Harvard, and Dr. E. W. Hedges presenting the compliments of Princeton College.

The dinner was excellent and elegantly served, and the speeches and songs which followed kept the board in good humor until after midnight. College jokes and stories, tales of hazing and of misadventures with tutors and proctors, alternated with recitals of athletic triumphs and good-natured jibes at Harvard and Princeton—which were repaid amply and in kind. The following is a copy of the menu of both the banquet and the after dinner festivities:

—THACKERAY.

The responses of the guests were especially pointed and contributed essentially to the hilarity of the occasion. Plainfield boys will be interested in Mr. Richards' announcement that the Yale Club intends to offer a valuable prize to the Plainfield boy who shall pass the best examination for entrance to Yale College next Summer. These Yale men were present at the dinner, J. E. Tracy, John M. Whiton, S. St. J. McCutchen, John Leal, Rev. W. R. Richards, W. D. Murray, J. F. Raymond, J. R. Joy, H. C. Tracy, L. K. Hyde, A. A. Tilney, Evarts Tracy, and F. D. Hyde.

The Hypocrite's Latest.

The stale wave is now reproducing stale wisdom each day at the head of its first page. The quotation Friday was:

"Never say anything wrong of anyone if you are not quite sure about it; and if you are ask yourself: 'Why do I say it?'"—Lavater.

A Night School for Girls.

A meeting of the Board of Education was held in the Franklin School building, January 2, with all the members present except Mr. Babcock. The Board reappointed Rev. Dr. J. L. Hurlbut City Superintendent. It was also decided to open a night school for girls. Sessions to be held on Monday and Friday evenings. The first session will probably be held to-morrow evening. This is a commendable act of the Board of Education, and one which is likely to be liberally patronized.

Election of Officers.

The annual meeting for the election of officers to serve the Plainfield Gesang and Turn Verein Society for the ensuing year, took place in the new Hall, on Somerset street, January 3, and resulted as follows:

President—H. Weigmann.
Vice President—H. Haurand.
Cor. Secretary—R. Kersting.
Fin. Secretary—Chas. Drossel.
Treasurer—H. Keller.
Trustees—J. Becker, Jr., C. Nollach, H. Liefke, Fred. Becker, W. C. Krumme.

The meeting adjourned to Wednesday evening, the 9th instant.

Begun the New Year Unfortunately.

When Mr. J. G. Miller, the East Front street pharmacist, went to his New Year's Day dinner, he left his gold watch lying on his desk. When he returned it was gone, and no clue or trace of the thief was obtainable.

However, a list of everybody who came in and went out of the drug store during his absence, has been prepared, and eventually the deed may be brought around to its perpetrator. Chief of Police Carey has the case in charge, and the possessor of the watch would be safer if he'd quietly return it by mail or express.

It Would Ornament a Newspaper Office.

Dr. T. S. Davis, the popular homœopathist, has in the office of his handsome residence at the corner of Park avenue and Sixth street, a substantial ink stand, made of polished steel and wrought iron. The weight is designed to represent a section of the steel rails used by the Pennsylvania and other railroad companies, manufactured by a firm in Delaware, of which the doctor's father is an influential member. The stand is ornamented with the heads of spikes, bolts, clamps, etc., manufactured by the firm, and the whole forms an artistic ornament, suitable for library or office use.

The Continuation of Warm Weather.

There has been some discussion as to whether New Year's Day was warmer than Christmas, which the local weather report below decides in favor of the latter. Christmas Day the thermometer reached 52 degrees above, and the mean temperature was 39.50. The past week's weather was as follows:

Jan.	TEMPERATURE. Maximum.	Minimum.	Mean.	Range.	State of Weather.	Prevailing Winds.	Precipitation.

M. S. SIMPSON, M. D., Observer.
N. J. State Weather Service.

—Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., is about to observe some Sunday in the near future as a day of Thanksgiving. Messrs J. Anderson, G. S. Martin and E. Weaver, were appointed a Committee to make the necessary arrangements for the occasion.

A CHRISTMAS WEDDING.

The Marriage of Estelle Van Zandt and Herbert Lowell Montague.

'Twas a charming Christmas wedding that was consummated in Grace church, January 2, and a large audience that included most of the best people of Plainfield, gathered to witness the impressive ceremonies.

The bride, Miss Estelle Van Zandt, was undeniably the belle of the season, and the groom, Mr. Herbert Lowell Montague, was as handsome as aristocracy of features and refinement of manners can effect. The admiration the couple received, was general and sincere.

Preceded by the choir boys singing the Lohengrin nuptial march, the bridal party passed up the aisle to the altar steps where the groom awaited with his best man, Mr. J. H. Ridenour, of New York. The bride was on the arm of her father, Mr. Thaddeus Avery Van Zandt, followed by the maids of honor—Miss M. Louise Van Zandt, sister of the bride, and Miss Jennie L. Montague, of Holyoke, Mass., sister of the groom.

The bride's dress was of rich white, corded silk, trimmed with duchesse lace that was caught up with diamond pins. She carried a loose bunch of long stemmed Bride roses. The maids wore white tulle over white silk and carried white ostrich-feather fans. The ushers were the bride's brothers, Messrs Edward and Ernest Van Zandt, Mr. M. E. Dailey of New York, Mr. J. Parker Ford of Brooklyn, Mr. Frank Smith of Bergen Point and Mr. Albert Wright, Jr., of this city.

The ceremony was performed by Archdeacon Rodman. The church decoration was especially extensive and elaborate. Besides the massive hangings of Christmas tide, additional trimming had been added in the way of growing lilies and pots of exotics. The singing of the choir boys evidenced continued improvement, and was particularly pleasing and effective. Their vestments were kindly loaned for the occasion, by the Church of the Holy Cross. On entering they sang the Barnby Processional, and accompanied the departing couple with Messiter's "Rejoice ye pure in heart." Mrs. Freeman's organ selections were; Macfarren's Offertoire, Randegger's Wedding Hymn, Bohm's Huntsman's Greeting, and Smith's May Pole Dance.

No formal reception was held, but a few of the closer relatives gathered at the home of the bride's parents, on Crescent avenue, and said their farewells. Mr. and Mrs. Montague left for New York early in the evening. After a short trip, they will live permanently in N. Y. City, where the groom is in business as one of the firm of Dailey & Montague.

Among the invited friends and relatives were: the Rev. and Mrs. T. DeWitt Talmage, of Brooklyn; Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Montague, and Mr. and Mrs. George Montague, of Holyoke, Mass.; Mr. and Mrs. N. H. Brewster, the Misses Baldwell, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Brooks, Mrs. M. Bliss, Mrs. E. Hendrickson, Mr. and Miss Hyer, Mrs. Samuel Kennedy, Mr. and Mrs. Mayer, Mr. and Mrs. O'Flinn, Mrs. S. Vandervoort, Mr. and Mrs. John Englis, Miss Jessie Ridley, and Messrs Rapelye Boerum, G. A. Powers, Jr., Thomas Powers, and Col. J. Browne, of Brooklyn; Mr. and Mrs. Bedlow, Mr. and Mrs. Dudley B. Horton, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Tyler, Dr. and Mrs. George VanZandt, Dr. and Mrs. Bogert, Mr. and Mrs. Charles VanZandt, Mrs. L. P. Hartt, Col. G. L. Montague and Mr. Herbert Deane, of New York.

Those invited of this city, included, His Honor, Mayor Male, Corporation Counsel C. A. Marsh and Mrs. Marsh, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Ames, Mr. and Mrs. J. Anderson, the Misses Bass, the Misses Bowers, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Brooks, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Clark, Miss Cortis, Mr. and Mrs. Craft, Mr. and Miss Cook, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Davis, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Dumont, Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Du Flon, Mr. and Mrs. J. Halleck Drake, Mr. and Mrs. E. N. Erickson, Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Finch, Dr. and Mrs. J. T. Fritts, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Fleming, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Gavett, Mrs. Harberger, and Miss Harberger, Mrs. Holmes, Mr. and Mrs. F. O. Herring, Mrs. Harriott and the Misses Harriott, Mr. and Mrs. D. C. Ivins, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Lowe, Mr. and Mrs. O. B. Leonard, Dr. and Mrs. W. H. Murray, Mr. and Mrs. D. H. Mulford, Miss Martin, the Misses Martine, the Misses Morgan, Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Millet, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Opdyke, Miss Opdyke, Miss Potter, the Rev. and Mrs. A. H. Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. J. Ridley, Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Runyon, Mr. and Mrs. Roome, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Sandford, Mr. and Mrs. Herman Simmonds, Mr. and Mrs. John Stimpson, Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Stover, the Misses Tweedy, Mrs. Tiffany, Miss Titsworth, Dr. and Mrs. T. H. Tomlinson, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Vanderbeek, Mr. and Mrs. O. T. Waring, Mr. and Mrs. L. G. Timpson, Miss Wilkinson, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Wright, Miss Yates, General and Mrs. W. H. Sterling, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Haines, Col. and Mrs. M. W. Tyler, Mr. and Mrs. W. M. McGee, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Yerkes, Mr. and Mrs. Otto Arens, Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Baldwin, Mr. and Mrs. F. F. Beals, and Dr. C. M. Field, Dr. E. W. Hedges, and Messrs F. Kirchoff, F. L. C. Martin, P. B. Matthews, D. O. Tiffany and F. VanBuren.

Bank Election.

Following is a list of the newly-elected officers and directors of the City National Bank:

President—Chas. Hyde.
Vice President—E. R. Pope.
Cashier—F. H. Gardner.
Directors—Chas. Hyde, E. R. Pope, F. H. Gardner, J. T. Closson, L. Myers, J. F. Hubbard, J. B. Coward, J. K. Myers, R. MacDonald.

INSTALLATION SERVICES.

Public installation services under the joint auspices of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., and its auxiliary, the Woman's Relief Corps, No. 10, of this city, took place in the Post room, on East Front street, Tuesday. In the centre of the room there was an improvised camp-fire, around which the members of the Post and invited guests assembled, including a delegation from Marcus L. Ward Post of Newark.

Previous to the installation services the Post held a business meeting, at which matters of a routine nature were transacted.

The following officers were installed by Senior Vice Commander Smith of Post No. 88 of Newark:

Commander—Isaac Brokaw.
Senior Vice Commander—Chas. Stevens.
Junior Vice Commander—W. B. Moore.
Officer of the Day—Wm. Addis.
Officer of the Guard—I. McVoy.
Chaplain—John Goodwin.
Adjutant—J. E. Stewart.
Quartermaster—S. C. Terry.

The exercises which followed included addresses by Commander Brokaw, installing officer Smith and Major Roberts, the latter in charge of the Soldiers' Home at Newark. Mme. Alberti also gave some pleasing recitations, among them being "Sheridan's Ride," which brought forth hearty applause. The members of the Crescent Glee Club were also present and contributed some vocal selections, and Prof. Guttman's orchestra furnished the music, while a collation was served by the ladies of the Relief Corps.

Following the installation of the Post officers, Mrs. Ingraham of Woodbridge, installed into their respective offices the newly-elected officers of the Woman's Relief Corps, No. 10, as follows:

President—Elizabeth S. Addis.
S. V. President—Mary Lynman.
J. V. President—Lydia A. Walker.
Treasurer—Jennie B. Arwood.
Chaplain—Jennie D. Smith.
Conductor—Gertrude Bittenbender.
Guard—Matilda W. Terry.
Secretary—Sarah A. Mattox.
Asst. Conductor—Julia C. Brake.
Asst. Guard—Henrietta Moore.

Contributions Coming In.

A few days ago THE PRESS told of the misfortunes that had overtaken the family of Mr. and Mrs. Victor Mercier of Union Village, in the loss of their four children, and the dangerous illness of the parents themselves. January 2, Mrs. P. Duryea of West Seventh street, called at this office and left a five dollar bill for the Mercier family, which was forwarded at once.

Another Woman Stopped on the Street.

A married woman who resides on East Sixth street, was on her way to Mrs. Moore's fancy goods store, at the corner of Fifth and Richmond streets, a few evenings since, and had nearly reached the store, when a strange and large proportioned man came up behind her, and grabbing her by the arm, remarked: "Come along with me." The woman raised an alarm and the fellow decamped. The lady kept the matter a secret until a day or two ago, when she related her experience to a special policeman, who in turn told a PRESS reporter. The woman declared that if she had seen the fellow approaching her she would have held on to him and cried for assistance, but he came upon her so unexpectedly that she could not collect her thoughts.

Concerning Our Popular Townsman.

The Tribune of yesterday says: "Percy C. Ohl, of Plainfield, N. J., is the President of the New Jersey Game and Fish Protective Association over there, but no one need suppose from that fact that fish and game are safe when Mr. Ohl is around. He is a zealous fly-fisher and Nimrod, and everything appertaining to shooting and fishing interests him. When he was at the Astor House the other day, at the gun-club convention, Mr. Ohl spoke of a new scheme in vogue near Plainfield, which must commend itself to all enthusiastic sportsmen, especially in the East, and which certainly deserves imitation.

A number of farmers whose places are adjoining own between them a fine tract of woodland, altogether about 1,500 acres. There are about a dozen owners, and they held a meeting recently, at which they all agreed to protect their own portion of that tract from poachers.

The association, which is informal, also intends to stock the place with game. In this way the members to the agreement, without extra cost, have, practically, all the use during the proper seasons of a slendid preserve, the protection of which is guaranteed the whole year.

Concerning the Late Henry Borst.

Messrs Drake and Carney, constituting the delegation appointed by Perseverance Lodge, No. 74, K. of P., of this city to go to Wellsboro, Pa., and meet the remains of the late Henry W. Borst, who was killed in a railroad accident in the far West, about three weeks ago, returned on 31st ult. after fulfilling their mission. The body of the unfortunate young man arrived at Wellsboro on Saturday Dec. 29, and was interred on Sunday at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, with Pythian honors, a delegation from a Knights of Pythias Lodge driving thirty-five miles in a carriage to attend the funeral.

A letter addressed to "Miss Anna L. Borst, No. 15 East Third street," was received by a sister of the deceased in this city, a few days ago, from Mrs. S. E. Allen, of No. 601 East B. street, Pueblo, Col., where the young man boarded. The letter was evidently written by a Christian woman who condoled the grief stricken family. It stated that the deceased went to brake on the South End of the Denver and Rio Grande Railroad, much against his will. At the time of the accident the train was running rapidly on a down grade, when young Borst and the conductor attempted to set the brake. The brake staff broke, throwing both from the train, instantly killing the former, and fracturing the skull of the latter so that he died soon afterward, leaving a widow and four children. Mrs. Allen says in the letter that she was instrumental in securing from the Coroner the key to the young man's trunk, which resulted in establishing his identity.

Among the dead man's effects the following note was found, showing that the writer had evidently anticipated an accident or death:

PUEBLO, Col., Nov. 1, 1888—My home is in Plainfield, New Jersey, No. 15 East Third street. In case of accident direct to Anna L. Borst. She is my sister."

SOLEMN CEREMONIES AND SWEET STRAINS.

Anchor Lodge, 149, Free and Accepted Masons, of this city, held its regular communication No. 195, Tuesday, and its members paid their wives and other friends of both sexes, the high compliment of soliciting their presence at a public installation of its officers for the ensuing year. The solemn and impressive rites were followed by a musicale in which were displayed some of the gifts and talents of several members of the Lodge.

The programme opened with an organ voluntary improvised by Mr. Clark Wright Evans. The installation ceremonies followed, conducted by Most Worshipful Grand Master, Robert M. Moore, assisted by Worshipful Grand Marshal, Charles Russ. Past Master Cristopher M. Goddard, was installed Worshipful Master, and the other officers-elect, as follows, by Past Grand Master, Hamilton Wallis, under whose reign Anchor Lodge had been incorporated:

C. A. Marsh, Senior Warden.
R. C. Johnson, Junior Warden.
J. E. Turrill, Treasurer.
T. A. Rogers, Secretary.
Rev. E. M. Rodman, Chaplain.
E. H. Bogardus, Senior Deacon.
J. M. Crane, Junior Deacon.
J. F. MacDonald, Senior Master of Ceremonies.
R. J. Shaw, Junior Master of Ceremonies.
F. G. Langhorne, Senior Steward.
J. A. Smith, Junior Steward.
E. Woltmann, Organist.
F. O. Herring, P. M., Marshal.
Kasper Boisserll, No. 54, Tyler.

In the absence of Bro's J. E. Turrill and E. Woltmann, Bro's W. L. Gavett and C. W. Evans acted respectively as their proxies. The other officers of the Lodge for 1889, are:

Trustees, R. W., W. A. Freeman, F. C. Herring, P. M., O. T. Waring.

Committee on Finance C. G. Crawford, J. H. Cooley, G. M. Griffen.

Committee on History, Library and Literary Exercises, W. B. Cock, P. M., B. O. Bowers, J. E. Turrill.

After the proclamation by Marshal Russ, and a prayer by the Chaplain, Archdeacon Rodman, addresses were made by Past Master Wallis and M. W. Grand Master Moore, both of whom were introduced by Worshipful Master Goddard. They both spoke principally of the influence for righteous good exerted by the craft of free masonry.

The musical programme that followed, included an organ solo by Mr. Evans; Strebelski's "Dreams" by Mr. E. E. Runyon, who also rendered Mr. Evans' charming song "Daisies" as an encore; Schumann's andante and variations, arranged for two pianos, by Messrs A. Venino and C. W. Evans; "Evening Bells," by a quartette composed of Messrs E. E. Runyon, W. B. Cock, C. A. Marsh and F. W. Runyon; and an instrumental solo, Chopin's "Ballade in A flat," played as only Mr. Venino can play that composer's music.

Every number was encored, and it was after eleven o'clock before the lodge members served to the company the refreshments that had been provided by Caterer Stevenson of this city. The Lodge room was beautifully decorated by Miss Lincoln with roses, lilies, smilax and potted plants. The entire affair was a great success, and the gathering were universally impressed with the solemnity of the ceremonies, and the godly and virtuous tendencies of the secret order of Free Masonry.

Traffic on Park Avenue.

Residents of this city, and pedestrians in general, perhaps, have no idea of the vast amount of traffic on Park avenue alone, during a single day. It was therefore in the interest of our readers that a PRESS reporter stationed himself at a certain point on Park avenue, near Second street, a few afternoons since, and for an hour watched and counted the number of vehicles which passed the given point. The time allotted the scribe was from 3:20 to 4:20 o'clock in the afternoon, and, while this is the dull part of the day, 186 vehicles of various descriptions passed within the time named.

Count that day lost whose low-descending sun
Brings neither information, cash, nor fun.

With a proper use of time there should be no such days. Each day, rightly spent, is bound to bring its share of information and wealth, while as for fun, modern life is full of it, especially during a political campaign.

But what has this to do with the selection of a New Suit or possibly an Overcoat? At first sight, nothing, and yet it has. Whoever wants real, solid, genuine information about clothing has only to keep his eye on the statements we make from time to time to get it. You will not be told that we are selling at a sixteenth part of the price you pay elsewhere. You will not find us advertising "Genuine All-Wool Suits, Satin Lined," for $3. But there is one advantage which our advertising has over some very attractive baits offered elsewhere, and that is, we have what we advertise, every time. The fact is we don't have to make unreliable statements to sell our goods. All we have to do is to attract you to our store and the goods tell their own story. If you are a judge of values in clothing we extend a cordial welcome to you to compare our offerings with others. If you are not a judge, this is a safe place to buy, as the price is the same to all.

CONTENTMENT.

A Little Story Illustrating the Truth of an Old Proverb.

[From the French.]

ONCE upon a time there lived on the same landing in Paris two men. One was a shoemaker with a right merry whistle, who lived on the ground floor with his wife and their small family of twelve children. He whistled and sang and hammered all through the day, making enough for their daily bread and [illegible] for Sunday. He slept soundly at night, and in the morning rose, and with his family about him [illegible] returned thanks to the Heavenly Father for His kindness to them.

Sometimes his wife, a good woman but for a temper that was somewhat sharp, would wish for a little more money for a nice little [illegible] like Mme. le Duc[illegible], or even a dress for the pretty Margot, the eldest daughter, and complain that they had nothing to be thankful for, upon which the merry little man would reply: "Ah, Margot, have we not the sunshine, and [illegible] the sunshine [illegible] we not a good roof, [illegible] two of them, with Mons. Pouchon's floor, to keep off the rain? What more would you?" And then he would return to his work whistling so loudly that the good woman would retreat to her room with hands over her ears.

The other occupant of the house, Mons. Pouchon, was a miser who lived on the second floor. A thin, lean figure was he, with a starved expression on his hideous face, and small, greedy, green eyes restlessly shifting beneath shaggy brows.

The good Margot would lie awake nights and [illegible] would awaken her Pierre (the shoemaker) and solemnly declare that the [illegible] was [illegible] he never slept nights.

"It takes a rogue to catch a rogue!" he would sleepily reply and [illegible] his slumbers.

The miser's nights were spent in guarding his treasure, and he took his sleep at the [illegible] hour when there was no danger [illegible] for it was through fear of [illegible] that he kept his candle burning, which he would otherwise have [illegible].

One day when the little shoemaker was whistling at his work as usual, a shadow fell on the floor beside him, and he looked up, expecting to see a customer, and was [illegible] surprised at finding the [illegible] figure of the miser beside him instead that he left off whistling and dropped his awl, even forgetting to say good morning in his usual cheerful manner.

"Why are you so happy—what have you to be happy about?" demanded the miser, thrusting his hooked nose close to the shoemaker's face. "What are you always whistling and singing for?" he growled.

"Ah, Mons. Pouchon—every thing—every thing! Have I not a nice little family, have I not work—a house to live [illegible], and am I not a Frenchman and a Parisian at that? What more would you?"

The miser gazed at him strangely for a moment. "But would you not like to have money?" he asked.

"I have money, Monsieur, about as much as I wish," replied the little shoemaker.

"Pooh! a few sous a day. But you have [illegible]," said the miser. "Do you not think you would like more? I will give you two bags if you wish [illegible] let you see how much happier you would be. I pay a [illegible] who is content with [illegible] little." But the shoemaker shook his head, and the miser, with a shrug of his shoulders, disappeared.

The shoemaker took up his awl and whistle again, but try as he might the whistle would die away as his thoughts returned to the miser's astonishing offer. By and by he made up his mind to accept the gold if the Monsieur was still kindly disposed, so he toiled up the steep stairway, festooned with cobwebs and black with the dirt of successive seasons of undisturbed repose, to the miser's apartment, and knocked on the door, which was immediately opened.

"Ha, ha," chuckled the miser, "I knew you would come; see, here it is, all this beautiful money awaiting you. Take it!" and throwing the bags into the shoemaker's hands, he closed the door abruptly in his astonished face.

That night the shoemaker and his wife sat up to count the money. The next day the shoemaker did not whistle as much as usual. The following night they sat up to plan about investing their money. They finally disagreed as to the kind of lace curtains they should hang the windows of the house they proposed to buy with, and Margot boxed her lord and master's ears, whereupon Pierre retaliated by taking a [illegible] out of her [illegible]. Then began such a scene as had never before been witnessed beneath that roof since the little shoemaker and his wife took up their abode beneath it. They fought until the good wife was tripped by her husband's foot and fell with a thud to the floor. Aroused by the sound of their mother's cries the children came rushing in and joined their wailing to the confusion, at which their father fled from the room tearing his curly locks.

The next day, although the sun shone gayly and trade was good, not a note, not a whistle escaped the shoemaker's lips. He sat in grim silence, tapping away, [illegible] away, with a frown on his face, until at last he threw down his hammer and called his wife. "Margot, bring me that money—curses on it!" he said, in a stern voice. "To the devil with the work, say I," and he disappeared up the stairway.

Opening the miser's door he thrust the bags unceremoniously into the room, and said:

"I return your money. No peace have we known while it was in our hands, and [illegible] happier [illegible] when I work hard for our daily bread and have the love of my family for reward, than had I gold beyond measure and the wranglings and discontent that seem to attend it."

With light steps and lighter heart he descended to his abode and every day his whistle was heard ringing through the house as of old, and his wife and children caught the spirit of content from the [illegible] and [illegible] cheerful and loving toward one another.

The Kangaroo in Central Park—An Interesting Animal That Can Both Jump and Fight—[illegible]

[Special New York Correspondence.]

As [illegible] I very frequently visit Central Park in the interest of science to study the nature and habits of the wild animals. I usually go on the [illegible] [illegible]

I always come away [illegible] when my pocket was picked [illegible].

There are a great many wonderful animals in Central Park. Among other attractions are two hippopotami.

N.B. [illegible] hippopotamus.

[illegible] it has a [illegible] that is still larger. [illegible]

[illegible] of the [illegible].

The [illegible] [illegible] like a New York alderman [illegible] window [illegible] full of [illegible] international [illegible] in the delegate from Australia. I [illegible] to the kangaroo.

The upper part of his body seems to have been borrowed from a Texas [illegible]. The kangaroo [illegible] his tail. The tail is said to be as strong and flexible as the arm of a [illegible] affections out riding in a buggy.

As an article of food the kangaroo is not popular. He is said to taste like a mixture of [illegible] rubber [illegible] and the bitterness of despair. In Australia he is used for sporting purposes. He does not, like the lion or the tiger, climb on board of the hunter and make himself [illegible] at home. When the kangaroo is [illegible] he [illegible] to escape. This is the kind of [illegible] people like to hunt. Like the American [illegible] boy, he can jump an astonishing distance, but, unlike him, he never jumps his board. When the kangaroo jumps he always turns his head, like a [illegible] car-driver making change; hence it frequently happens that the kangaroo [illegible] himself [illegible] coming in contact with the trunks of trees. In the case of the car-driver, it is always somebody else who gets killed.

The old kangaroo is not entirely reconciled to being hunted with dogs which are trained for that purpose. He frequently teaches the dogs to regret that they were not represented by proxy. On the hind feet of the kangaroo are large claws, which seem to have been made for the purpose of enabling the kangaroo to show to the world how a dog looks inside. Placing his back to a tree, the old kangaroo will press the dog's head to his bosom while he is using his terminal facilities to destroy the dog's future usefulness as a [illegible].

The kangaroo is also dangerous to man in some isolated cases. The kangaroo in Central Park almost killed a man during the recent campaign in an indirect manner, however.

A young New Yorker, who knows all about kangaroos, was standing in front of the animal's cage, when another man who belongs to the humbler walks of life came up. He was shabbily dressed, and in one of his boots was a large semi-circular crack that smiled a sarcastic smile, and which would have looked better if it had been covered by a heavy drooping mustache. He also puffed at a cigar that seemed to have [illegible] of the [illegible].

This laboring man didn't know much about kangaroos, but the dude said that they belonged to the marsupial family.

"And who the devil be they?" asked the laboring man, who had been overestimating himself.

"They belong to the same family as the opossum of the South."

"The O'Whats?" asked the inebriate, removing his coat.

The young dude, who was looking at the marsupial, replied that both animals belonged to the Marsupidae family that carry their young in a pouch.

"Mar what?" howled the laboring man, gritting his teeth.

"What's the matter with you?" queried the startled youth.

"So the Mac's and the O's are related to the bastes. Take that, ye bloody know-nothing," and had it not been for a policeman that young man would not have voted at the Presidential election.

In imparting this information about the kangaroo the dude should not have, in the first place, selected a time when the foreign element in New York was in a ferment, caused by Mayor Hewitt's [illegible]. Secondly, he should not have selected an Irishman as the [illegible] for his kangaroo lore about the Marsupidae and the O'possums; or if he did he should have picked out an Hibernian who was laid up with the rheumatism, and told him all about it through the telephone.

However, this goes to show that the kangaroo is not as harmless as he looks.

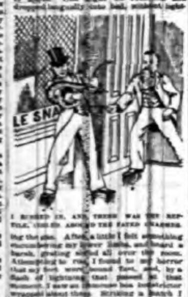
STORIES BY A SHOWMAN.

Colonel Matt Ryan's Tales of Some Queer Adventures with Varmints—[illegible] by Anacondas—A Rattler Chews an [illegible]—Chasing a Coon—A Sweet-Scented "Gator"—The "Jay" and the Snake.

Colonel Matt E. Ryan, manager of the People's Theatre, was the pioneer showman of St. Louis, says the Globe-Democrat. He is a jovial soul, now in middle life, and has acquired a portly stoutness that would, perhaps, be incompatible with the handling of wild beasts, but it can be said that Colonel Ryan is still vigorous and active, has a remarkable fund of anecdotes, and his eyes twinkle with merriment as he relates them. To a reporter of the Globe-Democrat he imparted an entertaining [illegible] the other evening, as follows:

I was manager of Prescott & Varnell's Museum, at Fourth and Pine streets, years ago. We had seventy-seven serpents on exhibition, and some were enormous specimens—eighteen to twenty-five feet long. These were confined in a glass-covered cage, the top of which, having been broken, was temporarily held in place by a stick. Major Varnell and myself had sleeping apartments at the head of a stairway, directly above. One night we returned and dropped languidly into bed, without lighting the gas. After a little I felt something encumbering my lower limbs, and heard a harsh, grating sound all over the room. Attempting to rise I found to my horror that my feet were bound fast, and, by a flash of lightning that passed at that moment, I saw an immense boa constrictor wrapped about them. Striking a match I awoke Varnell, and we found ourselves [illegible] together by the serpents.



I RUSHED IN, AND THERE WAS THE REPTILE, COILED AROUND THE FATED CHARMER.

One huge anaconda was also coiled on the Major's breast. To make matters worse, the [illegible] match-light in the glass had attracted a host of reptiles, and adders, rattlers, garters, black snakes, vipers, [illegible] and copperheads soon began to congregate, hiss, scrape their [illegible], crawl [illegible] over the floor, poke their [illegible] heads about our [illegible], [illegible] over our faces, and breathe their [illegible] breath upon our flesh. Great drops of perspiration stood out on our faces as we [illegible] each other to keep still and silent. To speak would have been but to [illegible] the attention of the reptiles to ourselves.

The snakes in a short time began a fierce battle between themselves, and the suspense grew awful, as helpless we lay, not daring to move if we could, and obliged to [illegible] the writhing, struggling forms and fangs of the horrid [illegible] their hateful venom upon each other. But soon [illegible], to our delight, took a hand in the [illegible] and [illegible] their [illegible] from our [illegible]. Once free, it was but a few moments' work to light the gas, get brooms, and by the [illegible] of the [illegible] drive them into a [illegible] that was convenient. We found that they had traveled [illegible] through the [illegible] of the glass [illegible] up into our room for warmth.

At another time we had a "happy family" [illegible]. One morning I found part of the [illegible] of them left—all the [illegible] had been swallowed. What did it?

That night I missed a big rattler from his cage. Where was he?

Three days after my messenger boy told me that a 'coon was on the roof. When we tried to catch the beast he [illegible] until the boy almost had him, then he slipped down the chimney. We went down to my office and, after half an hour's debate, agreed to watch him until he came down the fence away, then slip up and cover the chimney. Just as our plans were matured I looked up and beheld Mr. 'Coon' sitting complacently in the stove-pipe hole, and looking down, with a half smile that seemed to say: "We three are having an elegant time." We finally caught him, but only when he got hungry.

We had one snake that I was afraid of. It was a tough old fellow with nineteen rattles. To speak truly, I was afraid of it, and it was the only one I ever saw that I entertained a wholesome respect for. It was vicious and treacherous. One day it slipped out of the box through the window, which I sprang and closed just in time to catch its extreme tip. Taking umbrage at that, he let go and dropped right into the crowd. Ye gods! How they did scatter. It was mad—red hot. After holding a parade it chartered a lumber-yard just where the Globe-Democrat building now stands.

After running out every employe it retired to the bottom of a lumber pile, where it was found three weeks after. I slept him into a box of warm sawdust, and told an assistant named Murlich to watch him. The box had a wire cover, and that night the rattler, in striking at Murlich, struck the wire with his fangs, and a few drops of venom fell on the keeper's hand. Wilson, a snake-charmer, came along in a little while and said he would attend to the snake. Shortly after Murlich came into the office and told me that Wilson had that snake out. I rushed in, and there the reptile was, coiled about the fated charmer. I told him to be careful, but he laughed scornfully. Just as he did, it drew swiftly back, and then darted its poisonous fangs into the back of his left hand. Wilson coolly grasped him by the neck, and as I opened the cage, threw him in. Going quickly to the "Empire" saloon, he emptied a large bottle of whisky.

The poison and the liquor began coursing through his veins in a moment, and, coupled with the excitement, overcame him, and he fell in a torpor. The arm swelled rapidly, and was soon a horrid sight. Meantime Murlich had heated a poker to a white heat, and, taking advantage of our absence, shoved it through the wire top. The rattler struck at it eagerly, and before he knew it had swallowed ten or twelve inches. He thrashed about terribly for a few minutes, and then fell dead, literally roasted. The inflammation left Wilson's arm in a few months, when it began to dwindle, until eventually it withered. The blight followed into his body shortly, which shrank in a frightful manner until, one morning, he was found dead.

Where the Galt House used to stand, opposite where the Union Market now is, we had a small museum of collection scarcely worthy that name, which comprised, among other attractions, an alligator. One day it died.

But we kept right on showing it for two months. Then it didn't begin to smell well, and the Board of Health compelled us to bury it. When visitors would be getting so close as to give fear of a discovery the keeper would shout: "Look out, there, sir; that thing's playing 'possum; it will spring and eat you, sir." It was amusing to see how the people had some eleven or twelve feet of respect for that dead reptile. When it got to permeating the air with such a bad odor that every passing mule would pause, and smell, passers-by would attribute it to the odors peculiar to a museum, and would stop and pay a quarter to see what kind of a new muskrat was raising the offensive smell.

Garter snakes have a habit of swallowing their young, which, if a good brood, will frequently be as many as one hundred and up as high as three times that number. One day a countryman hitched his team in the back-yard, and told the door-keeper he had a big snake he would trade for admission for himself and family—nine altogether. I got the snake and put it in a box. It was a big one—some nine feet long, and mighty heavy.

That night we came back from supper and found the place chock full of young garters. The largest was no more in size than a lead pencil. The place was full of them. You couldn't sit down in a chair but what they would climb up all six limbs. They were in our hats, chairs, desks, cages, on the floors, everywhere. Where in the world did they come from? was the great question. By chance some one struck the gong, and in a minute the mystery was solved. The hordes of little varmints began scampering to their mother. She quietly opened her mouth and in they ran. Country snakes were put into tight boxes after that till such a time as we became well acquainted and knew whether it was one serpent or a serpent's skin full of sprouted snake-seed.

An anaconda's bite is perfectly harmless if a man has the presence of mind to keep still, and punch the biter right back of the ear. Then it will open its jaws and release its hold. It is not venomous. But jerk the bitten member away and its knife-like teeth, which are set on such an angle that the points recede, will tear the flesh out. While in Georgetown, Md., with an old-fashioned wagon show, we let the snakes out for a lark. The moment they got free the old nature returned, and they ran to the grass. One of the curious countrymen, who were lounging about, parted the weeds with his hands and peeked in. As he did so, the biggest of the snakes caught him by the nose. [illegible] (the snake), he jerked back, with the result of scraping all the skin off. Immediately there was a howl from his friends that he was poisoned, and about a quart of whisky was poured into him. Soon stupefied, he fell on his back in the hot sand, and the perspiration, dirt and blood made his face a repulsive sight.

The cry went forth to kill the biter, which we had caught by that time, but had to smuggle away. They howled loud and long for the snake's dead carcass, and threatened to knock the show higher than Gilderoy's kite if the reptile that bit the "jay's" proboscis was not given up. By this time a gang of hoodlums had gathered who were only too glad to lend a hand in the work of destroying the show. In fact, they became so worked up that they seized one of the boys connected with the show whom they held as hostage. In the meantime the whisky had done its work, enabling the countryman to get on his [illegible] once more, which had the effect of quieting the hoodlums; but if the rustic had succumbed to the poison there is no doubt they would have lynched the hostage. One thing you can rely on—they didn't get that snake.

In a Predicament.

"There's a nice old lady lives here," said the tramp to a companion, as he gave a tap on the back door.

"There ain't nobody to home," said the companion, after waiting five minutes. "What are you going to do?"

"She'd never forgive me if she knew I came near here and didn't stop, and—well, by thunder!—I hain't got any of my calling cards left, neither."—Judge.

"He's All Right."

Ann Arbor, Mich., claims the honor of originating the "He's all right" yell. It has been known for many years among college men, though before last spring it had failed to attract a wider share of attention. When the delegates from the University of the Michigan branch of the Michigan Club went down to the Republican banquet at Detroit they [illegible] the gathering by the question: "What's the matter with the U. of M.?" which elicited the equally thunderous response: "She's all right!" The cry was taken to the National convention at Chicago by the Michigan delegation, who applied it to General Alger, and since that time it has [illegible].

SCANDINAVIAN DISHES.

The Food Offered to Tourists in the Mountain Districts of Norway.

A correspondent of the San Francisco Chronicle, writing from Norway, gives the following in reference to the food offered to tourists in the mountain districts of the country: "In general we have found it more palatable than that of similar inns and small hotels in Austria and Germany, or in our own country. It has been invariably neat and clean, and in good variety. The coffee is always excellent, though usually charged for separately, even for breakfast; tea not so good. Bread is well made, not too hard, as usually it is in Europe—the rye bread apt to be sour. What is called 'flat bread' is somewhat like the Scotch oat-cakes—made as thin as a wafer, and rather dried than baked. Fish, as might be expected, very abundant—served at every meal; delicious salmon, salmon-trout and various white-fish—but the cooks will boil the trout. The usual meat is reindeer-venison. This might be very good if roasted, but the cutlets were not very palatable, and we never desire to see another. The deer are kept, half tamed, in the mountains, and killed for food, though in one place we had the meat from a wild one shot by an English sportsman rather too long ago. Their only idea of dessert is some kind of omelet, eaten with sugar and preserves—when it is regular 'pancakes' it is very good. The chief 'compote' is made of red whortleberries, so called by the English, and not very nice.

"But the chief peculiarities of the Norwegian breakfast and supper are their salt relishes and the prodigious amount of cheese they consume. The relishes are raw—raw ham, sausage, pickled fish, etc.—but not very appetizing. The cheese is put on in round loaves, some sweetened, of a brown color like chocolate, some strong and some stronger. The latter kind is, fortunately, handed round under a glass cover; and Heaven forbid that your neighbor should take any! Indeed, our chief object in selecting seats at table was to be as far away from the cheese as possible. Apparently the natives know that their taste is peculiar, and good Dutch cheese is always added to the list when travelers are present. Of fruit we have had little, but the delicious small strawberries are just ripening; said to be very abundant in Sweden. There are peculiar Norwegian dishes of which we have heard but which have not been offered us—fish soups, fish-puddings and the like. Some very nice croquettes of fish, in a white sauce, were given us once; and one day we asked for their barley-meal porridge, a very common food among the peasants, but we have not repeated the request. The bracing air of the mountains, I ought to say, almost always adds the sauce of hunger to whatever is brought forward."

POWDER EXPLOSIONS.

A Maine Man Relates a Most Thrilling Experience.

Whoever will invent a way to work powder with less danger to those so employed will confer one of the greatest of boons on humanity, observes the Louisville (Me.) Journal. The thing may appear to be impossible now, but a way has been found over apparently insurmountable difficulties in other fields of labor. The story of the Gambo powder mills is one of the most terrible in Maine's history. Only one person now lives who can to the full appreciate its horrors, and that is Mr. Clinton B. Hooper, who enjoys the unique distinction of having passed through a powder-mill explosion at Gambo alive. He is an old man now and totally blind. He knows the suffering caused by the loss of friends in this way, too, as his son was killed in the same mill a few years after his own dreadful experience. He gives the following account of an explosion, as seen from the inside: "The first thing I saw was a small blinding flash, which instantly grew brighter, and I jumped to get out of the way. I had the presence of mind to fall flat on the floor of the mill. Then the horrible, deafening report came, and pieces of machinery, stones and sticks of timber passed over my head. Luckily I was not struck by the missiles, but I was terribly burned by the powder, and the concussion shook me up inside. I lay on my bed for months and you can see how I am now." One other man came out of a wreck apparently unhurt. The blow knocked the shoes from his feet, but he walked up the road and told some men he met about the accident. He was laughing and congratulating himself on his escape, when it was discovered that the skin on the bottom of his feet had gone with his shoes, and a few minutes later he fell dead from the effects of the concussion.

The story of accidents averted is an interesting one. One workman, having accidentally ignited some powder, clapped his hand over it in a second. His hands were burned to a crisp, but the mills and their occupants were saved. At another time a workman stepped up to the superintendent, who had just come in, and remarked: "If you will step outside I'll tell you something that will make your hair turn gray." The superintendent stepped outside and then the man began: "Did you know you had a lighted cigar in your—" Before he could finish the sentence down went the cigar to the ground. If that workman had reminded him of the fact in the mill the cigar would have been dashed on the floor where powder was strewn.

EXCESSIVELY MORBID.

How an Old Lady Clouded the Happiness of Her Life.

The folly of trying to cross bridges before they are reached, says the Youth's Companion, is illustrated in the case of an old lady, the happiness of whose life had been clouded by her habit of dwelling on evils to come, few of which ever came to pass. She became so morbid at one time that her friends induced her to go on a visit to her sister who lived in a distant State. Their hope that the change might benefit her was disappointed.

"Didn't you enjoy the ride, Mary?" asked her sister, on the arrival of the visitor.

"No, I didn't, Sarah," was the doleful reply. "From the time I left home until I got here I didn't think of a thing but the danger there was of the cars running off the track and mangling me all up."

"Why, how foolish you were!" said the sister, laughingly. "You see the cars didn't run off the track."

"Oh, but they might, Sarah; they might! I kept thinking of that until it seemed to me I'd jump out of the car window. I kept thinking all the time how dreadful it would be to be sent home dead and maybe all cut to pieces. Just think of it!"

"Why should you think of any thing so dreadful?"

"Well, there's no telling what might happen," was the reply.

"Did you sleep well?" asked her younger sister the next morning.

"Sleep well! I hardly closed my eyes all night. I just lay there thinking and thinking how I'd feel if I got a telegram saying the house was burned up and every thing in it; or what if one of the children should be taken sick and die with me away off here! Just think how awful it would be!"

The Royal Name for Ear-Ache.

"Otitis" is the latest disease of royalty which the civilized world is called upon to consider. When you have it yourself it is plain, common ear-ache.

Deaths from Lightning.

The majority of deaths from lightning occur in the level, open country—trees, villages and thickly built-up towns and cities, by their projections in the air, serving as conductors and thereby protecting the inhabitants from direct stroke. The loss of life annually throughout the world is very great. In European Russia, from 1870 to 1877, no less than 2,270 persons were killed by this cause. In Austria, during the same time, 1,700 persons were likewise killed. In Prussia it is reported that seventy persons are annually killed. Ten thousand persons are reported as having been struck during a period of twenty years, with 2,252 deaths in France, while in the United States during 1870 alone, 202 deaths from lightning were recorded.

A Young Woman with Gall.

The daughters of Henry W. Longfellow tell the story of a remarkable request once sent to their father. Mr. Longfellow, as is well known, was a very kind-hearted, generous man, and when he received a letter from a young woman in a distant part of the country, who said she wanted a piano, and felt sure that Mr. Longfellow would be glad to encourage youthful talent and send her one, the family were really afraid that he would respond; but he decided not to do so, on the ground that a girl who was so lacking in delicacy and self-respect could not appreciate music.

High Enough Already.

"George, dear, what a beautiful diamond butterfly! It looks ready to fly." "I don't see why it wants to fly," growled George. "Heaven knows it's high enough now. The rolled-plate counter is at the other end of the store. Come on."

A Fortune for a Friendly Nod.

A retired Government clerk died in Vienna a few days ago, and bequeathed a considerable sum of money in these terms: "Up the second flight of stairs there lives at door No. 68 a widow who has two daughters. I leave the sum of 50,000 florins to the one who always nodded in such a friendly way when she met me." The two sisters fell out as to which of them the old gentleman had left the money. Legal proceedings are pending, but the lawyers are said to be inclined for a compromise by dividing the money.

A Problem Solved.

THE FREEHOLDERS' PROCEEDINGS

[OFFICIAL.]

ELIZABETH, N. J., Dec. 6, 1888.

Regular meeting of the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union, held on Thursday, December 6, 1888, at 2.30 o'clock p. m.

Present—Director Hubbard, and Freeholders Bryant, Doty, Donahue, Howard, Houston, Jones, Kyte, Kleinhans, Pierson, Roll, Thompson, Vanderbeck, Van Sauu, Wright, Whaley, West—17.

Absent—None.

The minutes of last meeting (omitting list of bills ordered paid) were read and on motion approved.

RESOLUTIONS

By Freeholder West:

Whereas, It appearing that the "Jury Commissioners" at the last stated term of the Union County Circuit Court were compelled, in order to get the panel of the grand and petit jurors ready at the first day of said term, to employ certain clerical assistance, and it appearing that the law is settled that all necessary expenses must be borne by the corporation, for whose benefit a law is passed, although an act may not provide for the same.

Therefore, be it resolved, That the bills presented by the clerks of said commissioners be paid by this Board with the understanding, however, that this is not to be considered as establishing any precedent, and that the said Jury Commission will hereafter provide for their own clerical help, without remuneration from the county.

Freeholder Thompson moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted by the following vote:

Ayes—Director Hubbard and Freeholders Bryant, Doty, Donahue, Howard, Houston, Jones, Kyte, Kleinhans, Roll, Thompson, Van Saun, Wright, West, Whaley—15.

Not voting—Freeholders Pierson and Vanderbeck—2.

By Freeholder Donahue:

Resolved, That the bill of Joseph Dury, amounting to $90, as per contract for [illegible] canal boat in Elizabeth river, be paid when properly audited by the committee.

INSECT GENERALSHIP.

Curious Stories of Battles Between Wasps and Their Enemies.

"A story which appeared a few days ago concerning a fight between a wasp and a spider reminded me of a similar battle which I witnessed a short time ago. I was walking across a field, when I saw a spider's web on the grass and noticed that a wasp had just been caught in its meshes. The spider was on the watch, and showed unmistakable signs of delight as its victim buzzed and struggled in the vain endeavor to set itself free. The ugly creature sat at the bottom of the web, holding the ropes that were to bind its prey. When the wasp ceased to struggle the spider approached. But the winged insect had not given up. As it saw its captor it showed fight and exerted itself to the utmost to get near enough to use its sting. The spider retreated a little, but apparently only for the purpose of tightening the strings that held the prisoner.

"A moment later the wasp was turned over and bound more firmly than ever. It seemed as if the spider took advantage of each movement of its adversary to wind another rope about its legs and tie them yet more firmly. The skill displayed was a revelation to me—I had no idea insects knew so much. Finally, when the wasp was so bound that it could neither kick nor sting, the spider jumped upon it, killed it almost instantly by biting, and then proceeded to feast upon the carcass.

"At another time I witnessed a fierce struggle between a large hornet and a colony of wasps which had built a nest in the window of an old shop. The hornet crawled up the glass toward the nest, and when the wasps saw him they formed in battle array to defend their home. The intruder moved onward, when a wasp darted from the ranks to sting him. But the courageous little fellow hardly seemed to touch his enemy before falling dead upon the window sill. At this the wasps retreated in a body, to the other side of the nest to lay plans for battle, sending out a spy now and then to reconnoiter. As the hornet came closer all suddenly rushed toward him in a body. A large wasp stepped out of the ranks, flew over the hornet and alighted beyond him. The invader halted, and the little army also stood still, watching him. The unequal forces eyed each other for some time, when suddenly it appeared as if the large wasp gave a signal and his companions rushed forward, making quick work of the enemy. Several wasps fell dead before the hornet was conquered, and the survivors did not venture to approach their prostrated foe until he had been dead for several minutes."

Bees and Their Product.

There are in North America about 300,000 persons keeping bees. The annual honey product is about 100,000,000 pounds and its value is nearly $20,000,000. The annual wax product is about [illegible] pounds and its value more than $[illegible].

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

AN ORDINANCE

Concerning the storage of Petroleum or Kerosene Oil within the City of Plainfield.

The Inhabitants of the City of Plainfield, by their Common Council, do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. That no person or persons shall store, or keep, or have on hand, or permit to be stored, kept or had on hand at one time, within the city of Plainfield, petroleum or kerosene oil in quantity exceeding two hundred and twenty-five barrels.

SEC. 2. That no person or persons shall store, or keep, or have on hand, or permit to be stored, or kept, or had on hand at one time within the city of Plainfield, petroleum or kerosene oil in quantity exceeding five barrels, unless the same shall be contained within a building of one story only above the ground, the outside walls and roof of which building are of brick, stone, iron, slate or other incombustible substance, and unless further there shall be constructed, on the premises adjacent to said building, a substantial wall of masonry, iron or other incombustible substance, which wall shall be of such dimensions and shall be so placed as to make it impossible, in case the maximum quantity of petroleum or kerosene oil named in section 1 of this ordinance should escape from such building, for any of such petroleum or kerosene oil to flow beyond the said wall.

SEC. 3. That any person or persons, convicted under section 1 or 2 of this ordinance, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding sixty days, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 4. That no petroleum or kerosene oil, whether in barrels, casks, tanks, or other vessels, shall be stored or kept upon any sidewalk or roadway of said city, nor shall barrels, casks, tanks or other vessels that have been used to contain petroleum or kerosene oil be stored or kept upon any sidewalk or roadway of said city, and any persons who shall violate any of the provisions of this section, shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine not exceeding fifty dollars for each and every offense.

SEC. 5. That upon conviction of any person or persons under any section of this ordinance, it shall be lawful for the chief engineer of the Plainfield fire department to serve a notice, written or printed, or partly printed and partly written, upon the person or persons so convicted, requiring all petroleum or kerosene oil and all barrels, casks, tanks or other vessels that have been used to contain the same to be removed from the premises, described in the complaint on which said conviction was obtained, within five days from date of service of such notice, and for every failure to comply with such notice, within said five days from date of service, the person or persons so failing to comply with such notice shall be deemed guilty of an offense under this section, and upon conviction be punishable by a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or imprisonment not exceeding sixty days, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

MARTHY'S KISS.

When I was a-courtin' Marthy
I was poor as poor could be,
But that didn't set her agin me,
For she had faith in me;
She knew I had grit an' courage,
An' wasn't the kind to shirk,
An' she was ready to w'ork,
To do her share of work.

I remember our weddin' mornin',
An' how she said to me:
"You're poor an' I'm poor, Robert,
That's easy enough to see;
That is, as some folks reckon;
But our hearts are rich in love,
An' we two'll pull together,
An' trust in the Lord above."

Then she reached up an' kissed me,
An' said, as she did this:
"There's always more where that come from An' there's help sometimes in a kiss."
I tell you what it made me,
I felt as strong as sin,
After that kiss she gave to me,
An' I just laid out to win.

An' I did it. We've money a plenty
An' the comforts it can give;
We've a home, an' we've got each other
An' a few more years to live.
Whenever my hands got weary
I'd think of the woman at home,
An' somehow 'twould make work easy
An' light, till night time 'd come.

I tell you that kiss of Marthy's
Was better than bags o' gold.
There's riches some folks can't reckon,
An' things that don't grow old.
I shouldn't ha' been, without it,
The man that I've got to be,
An' Marthy shall have the credit
For the help she's been to me.
—Eben E. Rexford, in Yankee Blade.

A LIVELY COMBAT.

Attacked by More Than a Score of Sword-Fish.

They Nearly Sink Our Little Craft by Their Fierce Thrusts—Tremendous Power of Which They Are Capable—Two Captured.

We were a jolly party on board the little cutter yacht Kermadec one breezy afternoon in February, beating up from Wellington to round Cape Egmont, in the expectation of making New Plymouth harbor by the next morning. February is a summer month with us in New Zealand, and our snug little craft of about thirty tons burden, the property of a citizen of Auckland, by whose courtesy the present writer was a passenger, was now out eleven days from Auckland on a cruise around New Ulster. There were half a dozen of us young men, besides the Scotch skipper, Sandy McGrath, and two sailors also from the "old country."

Gulls, plaintively noisy that day, were wheeling in our wake; a faint tinge of hazy weather showed on the land board, and after a time old Sandy, who sat on the tiller quietly studying the weather signs, remarked that there were whales in sight away to windward. Three or four marine glasses were immediately leveled in the direction indicated, for on the New Zealand coast whales are not so plenty as not to be objects of interest.

"A matter of six miles off, Sandy?" observed Hugh Peyster, the crack shot of our Auckland rifle team, who loves nothing better than a sniff of sea air for a few days.

"Aye, aboot that," said the skipper.

"They are a lively party, and no mistake about it," remarked Harry Leafest, our champion chess-player. "D'ye mind what breaches they're making—just then, d'ye see that? Clean out of sea! and there again! What spouting, too! Whales are not always quite as demonstrative as that, eh, skipper?"

"Noo," replied old Sandy, laconically. "A frolic or a fought, mabbe. Right whales, too."

The sportive leviathans were on our course up the coast, and after a few minutes we perceived that they were making down the wind to meet us. From their frequent breaching and spouting, it was at first thought that there was a school of them, but after ten or fifteen minutes' observation, Sandy said: "There's but twa of 'em; they're foightin', or somethin's gallin' them."

Just then, too, one of the sailors who was standing forward called out: "Sail-fish!"

"Wheer away?" cried the skipper, turning about suddenly, as if some new idea had as suddenly dawned on his mind.

"Port quarter, aft; big one, sir."

About a cable's length distant, and moving rapidly up from astern to pass us on the lee board, a singular object was scudding along, not altogether unlike the dirty, gray sail of some little native canoe, only in this case there was no canoe, merely the sail—two or three feet out of water, skimming along at a great pace, and passing us even while we sat staring at it.

"Well, well, there's the sail, but where's the boat?" laughed our jovial Dr. Wall, on this occasion a member of the party.

"Making good time right into the wind's eye, too, eh," said Leafest. "Is that a shark, skipper? and where think he's bound for, in such a hurry?"

"Noo, noo, 'tis nae shark; nae shark ever histed sicean back-fin as that. 'Tis a sword-fish, my laddie, and he's makin' for the whales. There's an auld grudge atween 'em. Queer thing, how these salt creeters will smell one anither oot, miles on miles away."

"Another sail-fish, sir," called out the man forward, and within the next half-hour, no less than six of these marine curiosities had come up and passed us, all in apparently the same tremendous haste and bound on the same course. Meantime we were nearing the ocean leviathans. There were but two of them, as old Sandy had thought, two large right whales evidently in trouble, for they were constantly breaching and diving, and appeared to be cutting viciously right and left with their flukes.

"The swoorders are teckin' their ribs for 'em," chuckled the skipper. "But I'm thinkin' we wad do as weel to sheer aff. 'Tis no quarrel of oors, and they be heavy laddies to run athwart a sma' craft."

He set the helm aport, accordingly, while as yet we were three or four cables' lengths away, with the intention of passing on the land side of the combatants. But the marine giants were by no means at rest, or confined to one place in their wild flounderings, and before we had time to pass, one of the fierce rushes of the struggle carried the battle directly across our bows.

McGrath put the helm hard up, and shouted to the sailors to stand by to go on the other tack. All the rest of us sprang forward, to get a better view of the fight. Immediately one of the whales rose close under our bowsprit, and, with a deep sough of its titanic lungs, "blew" a great white jet of water high into the air—so near that the spray of it fell in our very faces.

The monster struck its tail to right and left as it rolled and plunged downward again, and hurled a deluge of water aboard, drenching us to the skin in an instant, and fairly bowling the doctor over upon the raised roof of the little cabin.

"Jupiter!" Leafest exclaimed, laying hold of the doctor to set him on his feet, while we all snapped for breath, and dashed the brine from our eyes. "How's that for a passing salute! Bloody water, too! Only look here!"

The deck under foot was streaked with blood; so was our clothing. The other whale blew off the starboard quarter even while we were speaking, and rolling high, emitted a deep grunt or bellow of singular Neptunian cadence. I caught a glimpse of the "sail" fins of three sword-fish rolling up into view for a moment with the whale. We were in some danger, and realized the fact, for if one of the persecuted whales should chance to breach close under the hull of a boat of the Kermadec's size, the results of a collision might be disastrous.

We held our breaths for a moment, knowing that the leviathan was somewhere in the depths beneath our keel, and that its huge up-coming head might at any instant butt us out of the water like a cork. But the danger came from another source. For fully a dozen of the "sail" fins were now espied, cutting the water about the hull of the little yacht, and a moment later we felt a shock; as if it had struck or grated upon a rock! So severe was the concussion that several of the party were thrown off their feet. The cutter careened to port. There came a sensation as if a dozen men were tugging to haul her astern with a monkey-wrench on the crown of a screw-propeller!

"My goodness!" muttered the doctor. "The whale's afoul of us!"

Then came a final wrench, accompanied by a crackling noise and the gurgle of water.

"Here, mon. Lay haud o' the tiller!" old Sandy shouted, and Peyster hastening to do so, the skipper dashed down into the little cabin. The others were now far behind him, when it was discovered that the cutter was leaking dangerously. Water was gushing in at a place where the wainscoting seemed to be split to pieces.

"Fetch the axe!" old Sandy called out, and when it was handed to him he knocked away the inner sheathing of finish work. Three or four blows disclosed a hole through the cutter's side planking through which the water was spurting with great force, a stream as large as the axe-handle. We were soon able to calk it with the sleeve of an old oilskin jacket, but had hardly begun to do so when there came a second blow against the side, accompanied by a rasping noise immediately behind where we stood, seemingly back of the three or four steps which led down into the cabin. Again the little craft careened and shook like a leaf, and Peyster, appearing in the gangway above us, called out that there were more than fifty of the "sail-fish" round the yacht, and that they were coming at her full drive. No water had come through from the last blow, but, on clearing away the steps and inside finish, about a foot of a horny, serrated, poker-like shaft, as large as a man's forearm, was discovered protruding through the planking, and, from the tremor which was communicated to the boat, it was evident that the fish was hard and fast there.

Two more blows forward at once distracted our attention, and one of these started a leak of such size that several hogsheads of water must have come in before we could get to it and plug up the hole. Meanwhile Leafest and Peyster had taken their double-barreled fowling-pieces and opened fire on our assailants. Yet so far from being deterred by this noisy fusillade, the enraged sword-fish continued to charge at the cutter. Before the leak forward could be calked three fresh shocks further astern were felt, and a little forward of the stern post on the weather side still another horny gray-green "sword" was discovered, thrust a foot through the sheathing.

A singular scraping sound could be heard directly under the keel, which was probably made by the long dorsal fin as the excited fish darted beneath us. Thus for half an hour or more this alarming contest went on, and I should estimate that not less than twenty thrusts into the sides of the yacht were delivered by these marine swordsmen. Not all of them penetrated the thick sheathings, and only two of the fish actually remained stuck in the holes which they had made in the cutter's sides. We could feel them struggling to get free, but took no steps to liberate them for the time being.

Upon going on deck, after the attack had slackened somewhat, we found our two companions still shooting wherever a "sail" fin showed in sight within a hundred yards of the yacht. They confidently asserted that they had beaten off the sword-fish, having wounded with shot and bullets not less than sixty of them.

The two whales had disappeared, and we came to the conclusion that in the heat of the contest with them, the excited and angry sword-fish had mistaken the hull of the Kermadec for the bodies of the cetaceans. They in turn now gradually drew off from us and disappeared, though several of them followed us for some hours, as if loth to give up the controversy.

The two whose excess of warlike energy had led them to attach themselves to us beyond their power of retraction, struggled at times during the evening, and acted as a grievous drag on our progress. But so deep were they beneath the side of the yacht that there was no practicable way of getting rid of them.

We towed them into New Plymouth harbor, where we arrived early the following forenoon. The cutter was then careened, and the fish, along with their swords, withdrawn from their sheathing. By this time they had become quite docile, and were nearly lifeless. Both belonged to that species of sword-fish which are commonly called sail-fish in the South Pacific, for the reason already mentioned. These two specimens were each about fifteen feet in length, including the "swords," which measured three feet four and three feet seven inches respectively. These weapons we have preserved as mementoes of the voyage.—C. H. Meredith, in Youth's Companion.

Foods and Their Effects.

Some of the foods which have a tendency to constipate are condensed milk, tea, hard-boiled eggs, barley and rice water, thickened milk, toast, mutton broth, rice, cornstarch, potatoes and other starch foods, and white bread. Some of those whose tendency is to stimulate the alimentary canal to action are: coffee, oat-meal, Indian meal, soups, beef tea, sweet potatoes, fruits fresh and stewed, green vegetables, molasses, beans; graham, corn and Boston brown bread; graham and oat-meal crackers, and molasses cake. Some of these, such as beans, molasses, Indian meal, and even oat-meal, if given in large quantity or frequently, to the exclusion of a varied diet, will be likely not to readily digest, and to give rise to diarrhœa, the formation of gas, and consequent discomfort and pain.

One of the Richest Sovereigns.

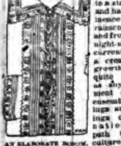
The little Princess of the Netherlands, when she becomes Queen of Holland, will be one of the richest sovereigns, if not the richest sovereign, in Europe. The civil list of Holland, which is secured on the revenues of Borneo, is very large—£3,000,000 per annum, it is said. The Duchy of Luxembourg passes to the Grand Duke of Nassau, and then becomes a portion of the German empire, but the kingdom of Holland, not coming under the operation of the Salic law, descends to the King's little daughter. She is a bright, intelligent, clever child, with a good deal of character and determination. The marriage of the King and Queen, despite the disparity of age, has been a very happy one.

FASHIONS IN NIGHT-SHIRTS.

New and Fantastic Designs in This Highly Popular Garment—The Manufacturers Are Devoting Their Brains to Making This Article of Men's Apparel More Attractive—Over One Hundred and Fifty Designs Already on the Market.

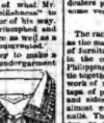
The song of the night-shirt has not yet been sung, because the night-shirt is a comparatively young institution. Ten years ago it was nowhere. One American citizen in fifty didn't wear it, if any credence can be given to such meager statistics as are extant upon the subject. For generations back there were old-fashioned night-gowns that fitted a man somewhat after the fashion of Widow Bedott's famous wedding dress, but the highly educated and self-adjusting sleeping robe of the present time was not even dreamed of. It existed only in the vaguest sort of potentiality.

Time has done wonders for the night-shirt, says a writer in the New York World. It has raised it up from a place of obscurity, or rather from a position of nihility, to a station of proud and haughty pre-eminence among the raiment of a great and free people. The night-shirts of the current epoch is not a creation; it is a growth. It reflects quite as strongly as any other garment of the state ensemble the strivings and outreachings of a mighty nation along the path to a higher culture and a broader and nobler civilization. Not so long ago the average man slept in the same underwear that he wore chopping wood or swarming bees (as the case might be) during the day. He knew of no sanitary law militating against such a practice. It took time and a good deal of what Mr. Blaine terms "enlightened selfishness" to educate him out of the error of his way. Anyway the night-shirt has triumphed and it now enjoys a fixity of tenure as well as a popularity that can not be circumvented.



AN ELABORATE BOSOM.

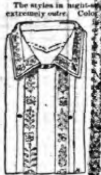
It may seem a simple matter to make a night-shirt, but it isn't. No undergarment requires more skill or admits of more ornamentation. To fit well it should be cut on the same lines practically as a full-dress shirt, with sloping shoulders, curved back, rolling collar and the thousand and one other trifles consequent upon a growing fastidiousness in men's dress. Indeed, it is doubtful if many men are as punctilious about their trousers or waistcoat as about the fit and swing of their night-gown. Fashion, too, has entered the arena and delivered itself of certain dicta and regulations that no sane shirt-maker would dare to ignore. For example, if the leaders of style declare that the night-shirts of a given season are to be worn fifty inches in length instead of fifty-two, the average length, or that the left sleeve in lieu of the bosom shall contain a kerchief pocket, these fads must be attended to with meek and unquestioning compliance.



FULL EMBROIDERED.

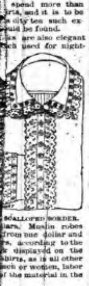
Do fashions in night-shirts frequently change? Not any oftener than fashions in neckties and hats, for instance, which are remodeled about four times a year. Swell dressers who are at all conscientious about the chronological appropriateness of their raiment would no more think of wearing a last season's sleeping-robe than they would venture to walk down Broadway bedecked with a stovepipe hat six days out of date. Either offense would be equally unpardonable. To be sure the rank and file of men are not amenable to the dictates of fashion in this respect any more than they are subject to its caprices in other directions; but then the masses are of absolutely no account in the determination of extreme changes in dress, a circumstance which is shown by the fact that they are never consulted. Fashions which win their way to popular approval are quickly dropped by your "gamey" dressers. What other men admire is the abomination of advanced dudes.

The styles in night-shirts this winter are extremely outre. Color without stint is put into the bosoms and collars, and the finest as well as the most shoddy materials are pressed under contribution. Probably the most fashionable and expensive garments are made of white China silk, hand-embroidered in the same color, with the autograph of the wearer embroidered on the pocket tab. The bosom embroidery should be plentiful and as artistic as possible. If the wearer is not particular about the item of cost he can have solid gold or silver buttons with his initials molded on them. A silk night-shirt, without gold or silver buttons, will come as high as $15 or $20, but with such fasteners the price will be almost doubled. Let us say that a man pays $25 apiece for his night-shirts. If he is a high dresser he will hardly be satisfied with less than ten sleeping-robes a year, which would bring his annual outlay for this item of wear alone up to $250. There are not many men in New York who spend more than $100 a year for night-shirts, and it is to be doubted if outside of this city ten such extravagant individuals could be found.



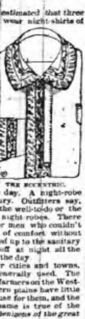
THE VINE.

Pongee and surah silks are also elegant materials, and are much used for night-robes. The latter especially is very swell. A peculiarly stylish design has a pink stripe running up and down the vestment at intervals of about an inch apart. Linen is the proper material for quiet men to wear who aim merely to dress in accordance with the dictates of common sense and good taste, without running up their expense account too high. An all-linen gown, with a lace or embroidered bosom, may be had for about six dollars. Muslin robes with linen bosoms cost from one dollar and fifty cents to four dollars, according to the amount of fancy work displayed on the trimmings. In night-shirts, as in all other garments for either men or women, labor about equals the cost of the material in the selling price.



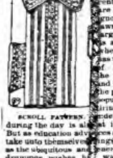
SCALLOPED BORDER.

In New York it is estimated that three men out of every five wear night-shirts of some sort. Not a few still adhere to the home-made article, and they are not all old fogies, either. Lots of young wives whose mammas taught them long ago to construct canton flannel night-gowns now delight their husbands with specimens of their own handiwork. In the great tenement-house districts the bulk of the men sleep in the same jumpers or flannel shirts that they have sweated in through the day. A night-robe is an unheard-of luxury. Outfitters say, however, that it is not the well-to-do or the wealthy alone who use night-robes. There are plenty of very poor men who couldn't sleep with any degree of comfort without them. They are educated up to the sanitary advantages of laying off at night all the garments worn during the day.



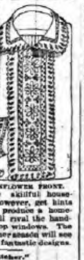
THE ECCENTRIC.

Except in the larger cities and towns, night-robes are not generally used. The farmers on the Western plains have little use for them, and the same is true of the denizens of the great laboring and mining centers, where men are too often apt to ignore all health laws. There are large districts in Texas and New Mexico where a night-shirt has never been heard of. Even in many of the larger Western and Southern towns the proportion of the population who on retiring take off the undergarments worn during the day is almost incredibly small. But as education advances and liberal ideas take unto themselves wings, and especially as the ubiquitous and energetic New York drummer pushes his way through the limitless wastes of the far-off and benighted States, portraying with eloquent tongue the sanitary and æsthetic virtues of the night-shirts he wants to sell, a wholesome and widespread revolution is being wrought out.



SCROLL PATTERN.

There are winter weights and summer weights in night-robes as well as in clothing. This winter, owing to the prevalent craze for natural wool underwear, the furnishing dealers report an unusually heavy demand for woolen and camel's hair night-robes. Stylish dressers affect them as a welcome change from silk or linen materials. The fashionable woolen night-shirt is longer than the silk garment, and is cut to conform to the graceful outlines of the human form divine. A first-class all-wool sleeping-robe costs about $10. The skillful housewife may very easily, however, get hints from these styles and produce a home-made night-shirt that will rival the handsome designs in the shop windows. The dealers predict that another season will see some very elaborate and fantastic designs.



SUNFLOWER FRONT.

The "Thief-Catcher."

The rattan which is used in this country as the material for chairs and other articles of furniture is put to a great variety of uses in the country where it grows. In the Philippine Islands the natives use rattan to tie together the poles that form the framework of their houses, to fasten on the attaps of palm leaves which cover the roof and sides, in making their boats, and in almost every place where we would use nails. They also use it to hang clothes on to dry, to tie up bundles and to suspend articles from the roof.

For all these purposes the stems are slit into slender strands, which are, nevertheless, very strong. Stems an inch in diameter are so strong that they are used in dragging logs out of the woods.

I once saw four buffaloes hitched, one ahead of another, and all pulling by means of two of these vines. They would drag the log a few yards, and then stop to rest till the shouting of their drivers started them again.

But the most curious office of the rattan is that of thief-catcher. The main stems, which run along for several yards a little above the ground, are many of them quite smooth, but they send out slender tendrils that are closely beset with short and stout, but very sharp, thorns arranged in whorls, and pointing back toward the base.

These tendrils, or feelers, catch hold of any thing soft that comes in contact with them, and the only way for a man to get loose when caught is to stop and pull the tendril forward.

The "thief-catcher" is made by binding a lot of these tendrils to the tines of a forked stick, the thorns all pointing back toward the crotch. The handle is five or six feet long.

An officer armed with one of these instruments goes to arrest a desperate man, whom he might not dare to approach without it. If he can thrust it on the man, there is no chance of escape, for the more he wriggles and twists to get away, the more firmly he is caught.

Mr. S.—Bet me $50 this afternoon that I couldn't hit a barn-door with a revolver at five paces. Taunted me into betting him, got me to put up the money, measured off the five paces in the presence of a lot of witnesses, gave me a revolver loaded, and then set the door up edgewise!—Life.

THE AMERICAN MOVEMENT.

A New Political Crusade Differing Essentially from the Old Know-Nothing Agitation—Its Aims and Principles, and How Its Leaders Hope to Be Successful—The Immigration Question.

[Special Chicago Correspondence.]

Next to the tariff question, no other topic has been discussed so earnestly and persistently of late years as that of immigration. The unrestricted admission of aliens from all portions of Europe has long been condemned by patriotic citizens, but it was not until a very recent period that the large influx of degraded Huns, Poles and Italians reminded public conscience that for the sake of the country a stop should be put to an evil which, if not controlled in time, might jeopardize the very life of the Republic.

Up to the year 1875 the class of people landing in American ports consisted principally of mechanics, farm laborers and ordinary working-men, most of them coming from Great Britain, Ireland, Germany, France, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Holland and the British provinces. They were, as a class, industrious persons, who came to this country with the determination of becoming good citizens. They improved millions of acres of wild Western lands and built the great railroads of the Northwest.

To use an old saying, "they grew up with the country," and their children became an integral part of the American people. No reasonable objection could be urged to their coming, and the most intelligent portion of the American public defended them against the prejudice of the thoughtless masses.

Now the immigration question has assumed a different aspect, however. The welcome extended by this Government to the oppressed of all nations has been abused, and thousands, yes, hundreds of thousands of the lowest classes of pauper laborers have during the past ten years sought employment in the United States. Italian lazzaroni, half-starved Hungarian miners, ignorant Greeks and homeless Anarchists from Central Europe poured into our cities and mining districts, assisted by greedy monopolists who, actuated by selfish motives, drove from their humble homes American working-men and intelligent naturalized citizens.

Protests against the wholesale admission of this class of immigrants became louder, and when the influx jumped from 177,826 in 1879 to 457,257 in 1880, patriotic people began to wonder where the evil might end; and their wonder and fear increased with every year, each of which brought a larger number of aliens to our shores, as the following table covering the record for the years 1870-88 will show:

ALIENS LANDED.	Number.	ALIENS LANDED.	Number.
1870	387,203	1881	669,431
1871	321,350	1882	788,992
1872	404,806	1883	603,322
1873	459,803	1884	518,592
1874	313,339	1885	395,346
1875	227,498	1886	334,203
1876	169,986	1887	490,109
1877	141,857	1888 (estimated)	500,000
1878	138,469
1879	177,826	Total	7,[illegible]
1880	457,257

The conviction that something should be done to restrict or regulate the landing of immigrants at American ports grew stronger day by day, and eventually led to the formation of the so-called American party, which, however, was never successful, owing to its pronounced Know-nothing proclivities. What the intelligent portion of the public demanded was not a party of extremists and inquisitors, but an organization which, while protecting the rights of naturalized citizens, would have the moral and intellectual strength to deal with the immigration question in an impartial manner, and the courage to maintain its views in the face of that large and growing city element best described as the bell-wethers of the "Irish vote," the "German vote," the "Scandinavian vote" and all other kinds of "votes."

This desire, a short time ago, gave birth to what might be called the new "American movement," whose advocates demand the restriction of immigration to persons of good character who are willing to obey our laws and our institutions; declare in favor of the protection of the American free school system; favor the permanent separation of Church and State, and demand protection for industrious American citizens from the curse of obnoxious foreignism in whatever shape it presents itself.

The fundamental principle of the movement is that it should be sufficient for a citizen of the United States, whether native born or naturalized, to be an American, and that he should recognize no other political ties save those by which every good man is bound to his Government.

In the large cities of the country, naturalized citizens have of recent years forgotten that they owe their first duty to the Nation which has adopted them, and have banded together in cliques and factions to control municipal affairs and offices. Professional politicians of all parties have openly recognized professional foreigners, and thus many important offices have fallen into incompetent hands and their patronage is used, not for the benefit and service of the people, but for the personal aggrandizement of designing men of native and foreign origin. This evil the American movement will attempt to correct without doing injustice to the foreign-born part of the population, by nominating for public positions men of character and ability, irrespective of birth.

A GROUP OF IMMIGRANTS.

That is, if a German or Irish-born citizen possesses the qualifications necessary to the fulfillment of the duties of a certain office, his nationality would not stand in the way of his nomination, but as soon as he would demand the office on the strength of his German or Irish birth he would become ineligible according to American ideas.

Immigration the authors of the new movement would restrict to persons of ordinary intelligence, to industrious mechanics and laborers, and others of irreproachable antecedents. The methods by which this is to be accomplished have not yet been agreed upon, but the most popular idea seems to be a system of certificates issued to emigrants by the American Consuls stationed near their places of residence. The Consuls might be held responsible to a certain extent for the character of the people to whom certificates are issued and should be compelled to investigate the past life and standing of every applicant for emigration papers. Under such a system, conscientiously carried out, immigration would prove a benefit, as it would keep out lawless characters and disturbers of the peace and bring to our shores only men of ability possessed of some means enabling them to procure a start in their new home.

Whether or not the American movement will ever grow strong enough to become an important political party is more than questionable, but if properly conducted it can exercise considerable influence over the leading political parties, and compel them to pass laws amending our present immigration acts in a manner satisfactory to every body. The working-men of America must have some relief from the hardships occasioned by the wholesale importation of degraded foreign labor, and the peace of the country demands the exclusion of persons tainted with Anarchistic doctrine.

As already mentioned, some of the brightest minds of the country have promised to support the very liberal and patriotic ideas of the American movement; but to Mr. Hobart C. Taylor, of Chicago, the projector of America, a weekly journal of considerable literary merit, belongs the honor of having popularized the crusade. Mr. Taylor is a young man, about twenty-six years of age, and the son of the late Henry Hobart Taylor, a prominent and highly respected citizen of Chicago. Both his maternal and paternal ancestors were of old Puritan stock; and the vigorous American ideas advanced by Mr. Taylor in his finished literary productions were, as a Chicago paper said a short time ago, "imported by the patriots of Plymouth in the Mayflower."

He is a graduate of Cornell University, where he distinguished himself as a student, was active in all college affairs and won favor by his bright contributions to college papers. During his college career and subsequent travels Mr. Taylor wrote entertaining articles for some of the more prominent newspapers of the country. The journal America was the outcome of a desire which he had long cherished, to establish a paper that should be patriotic and independent in politics, and although he disposed of his proprietary interests in the journal some time ago, the majority of the editorial comments that appear in its columns are from his pen.

In giving this brief outline of the aims of the American movement the writer was actuated by a desire to make the people at large acquainted with what it really is, and has been careful not to indulge in comments or criticism. Whatever may be its outcome, as long as its advocates are not carried away by prejudice and acting as they insist merely on reformation and not on persecution, the agitation of the evils of unrestricted immigration must prove of considerable benefit to the working-men and producers of the country, all of whom have at various times officially recognized the need of legislation on the subject.

MENS' FASHION NOTES.

The broad puff scarf continues the most fashionable thing in neckwear.

English gloves made of Angora cloth are quite the thing for the skating season.

A pretty silver match-safe is shaped to resemble a bird's feather. It is inset with precious stones.

The latest winter styles in collars are cut high. One of the most fashionable makes has rolling points with wide spacing.

A blackthorn stick with a crooked root partially covered by gold or silver plate is looked upon with high favor by swells.

Both the white silk dress scarf and the turn-around cravat are having a hard struggle for existence in New York. They haven't yet caught on.

The double-breasted vest, so long only a recollection, is slowly but surely coming to the front again. One can occasionally be seen on the avenues nowadays.

A new thing in the way of a bosom protector to be worn with dress suits is a quilted satin or silk pad, shaped on the lines of a shirt front and opening like the shirt bosom.

Fifth avenue club men are said to be arrayed against the heavily embroidered shirt front in a war of extermination. Chaste and neat embroidery is permissible, however.

Parisian dudes have grown tired of the blazing diamond stud in full dress shirt, and have substituted for it a green solitaire. The fad has not yet reached New York, but it is coming.

As a special holiday fancy, big puff scarfs made of silk in pearl, gold, lilac or buff grounds, with bright or black figures, such as crescents, shields or flowers, are prized by seekers after novel effects.

It is regarded as effeminate to wear pulse-warmers, but this fact does not dissuade many dudes from doing so. Some bright hues are displayed for the holiday season, a notable pattern being in Gobelin grounds with gaudy stripes.

Novelties without end appear in umbrella handles. Carved ivory knobs partly covered by deposits of silver or gold are shown by Broadway dealers as the proper caper for presents. Petrified wood bulbs, with or without silver adornment, are also elegant. The very latest fad is an umbrella with a watch inserted in the stick a few inches below the handle. The watches are also used in canes.

One of the newest London fads is a dining-suit, an outfit intended to be worn at informal dinners where the ladies are arrayed in tea gowns and where billiards follow the banquet. The materials for the dining costume are soft, either of silk, satin, velvet or fine wool. No vest is worn. The trousers are loose and are fastened at the hips by means of a cord or tassel. The coat resembles the conventional smoking-gown, but is longer and fuller and slightly different in cut. It is lined with rich, quilted satin or silk, and is fastened by means of silken loops athwart the breast.—N. Y. World.

Something of a Joke.

Citizen—What'll you charge me, Uncle Rastus, to cart away that pile of stone?

Uncle Rastus—'Bout two dollars, sah.

Citizen—Isn't that very high?

New Building Material.

A patent has been granted for a process of manufacturing boards, slabs or plates, chiefly applicable to the usual building purposes of wall and ceiling linings or coverings, and also as a lining for ice-chests, flues and the like. Each board or plate is composed of the following materials: A large number of small tubes, either specially made of paper or other suitable material or formed of vegetable stalks. These tubes are uniformly distributed, so as to form a number of cores for the semi-liquid mass which is subsequently cast in. A plastic mass consisting of plastic mineral matter, such as burnt gypsum, cement or lime, and finely divided solid, particles of organic origin, such as small coke, wool, hair or feathers, with or without the addition of a liquid binding substance, such as glue water or a mixture of water with alum, green vitriol and soluble glass in the following relative quantities; Gypsum, cement or lime, fifty parts; small coke, ten parts; wool, hair or feathers, one part; binding substance, consisting of alum, vitriol and soluble glass, one part.

Wrought of Desperation.

Miss Richpurse (despondently)—Oh, Edward! if I could only know for certain you loved me and not my money I would be your wife.

Mr. Hardpan (eagerly)—Test me, Eleanor! test my honesty.

Miss Richpurse—But how?

Mr. Hardpan (desperately)—Lend me a dollar until to-morrow.

HONOR, DISGRACE AND DUTY.

It is an honor to be a citizen of the Republic of Washington, to wield the sceptre of popular sovereignty on behalf of the vitality and perpetuity of free representative government, and to possess and enjoy those priceless principles of justice, equality and human rights which the American Constitution ordains.

It is a high honor and privilege to exercise aright the ballot, the legal prerogative of citizenship, that potent missile—

"A weapon that comes down as still
As snowflakes fall upon the sod,
But executes a freeman's will
As lightning does the will of God."

So much for honor.

What of its opposite?

It is a disgrace, a scandalous disgrace, for men clothed with the authority of citizenship, to sell themselves like cattle in the market-place, basely bartering their votes for money or other sordid considerations, exchanging in fact the nobility of independent manhood for slavish degradation.

It is a disgrace, a criminal disgrace, for candidates and political managers to traffic in electioneering bribery and corruption, brazenly instituting temptation and providing ways and means for carrying it into demoralizing effect.

So much for disgrace.

What of duty?

To rally for the purity of the ballot box, to obtain, through the most stringent enactments, positive prohibition against every kind of interference with the freedom of voting according to the dictates of individual judgment, and to decree adequate punishment for all offenders, be they sellers or buyers of suffrage, is imperative duty.

The duty of all patriotic citizens, regardless of partisan bias, who have at heart the well-being of the country and the preservation of its beneficent civil institutions.

He is the true loyalist to country who discharges at all times and without fear or favor the whole duty of a freeman.

Illinois has now been a State for seventy years, and yet of the fifty-one members of the present State Senate, but nineteen were born in the State. Of 147 House members, but fifty-one claim Illinois as a birthplace.

The Rochester Post-Express (Rep.) predicts that Mr. McMillan of Michigan will make a very unsatisfactory Senator. "Mr. McMillan is a most estimable gentleman," it says, "but there is nothing of the statesman about him. What is needed in the Senate just now is more mind and fewer millions."

"Never before in the history of our politics, since our patriot fathers established the Union and consecrated it to freedom, has money played so important, unblushing and corrupt a part in the election of Government officials."—Republican Speaker Cole's Address before the New York Legislature, Jan. 1, 1889.

The Philadelphia Telegraph (Rep.) discourteously remarks: "The lot of alleged Southern Republicans who want to represent that section of the country in the coming Cabinet gets no better fast. The latest aspirant whose 'pedigree' has turned up at Indianapolis is the notorious Powell Clayton, of Arkansas. Just see! Mahone, Langston, Elliott, Clayton—and where is Flanagan, Pinchback, Mosby, and all the rest of the sweet-scented crowd of the old days?"

The political talk at farmers' gatherings is pretty much all one way. There is an unequal division of profits, and the farmer gets the smallest share every time. The country is getting richer and richer—wealth is piling up. There seems no room for doubt that the aggregate wealth of the country increases in volume every year. Few people doubt this—the great point to be solved is, where does this wealth go? Who gets it? The farmers like to see wealth accumulate and business prosperous, but they want to see a fair division of this wealth and business.—Rural New Yorker.

Gov. Green, of New Jersey, as will be seen by the quotations which we make in another column, joins what can truthfully be called the national chorus in favor of ballot reform. It is interesting to note that he, like all other Democratic authorities who have spoken, does not share the views set forth by Gov. Hill in his message. Gov. Green, who has evidently made a careful study of the bills which have been drawn with the Australian Law as a model, earnestly commends the fundamental principles of that system, and in defining what he means by an isolated ballot says: "The tickets should be printed at public expense, and given to the voter by a public officer just before voting * * * no ticket being valid unless it be one of those furnished at the poll by the public officer." This is directly opposed to Gov. Hill's view, that official and unofficial ballots should be received on equal terms at the ballot boxes, and, coming from so eminent a lawyer, as well as so strong a Democrat, as Gov. Green is, ought to have great influence in convincing Gov. Hill that he is mistaken.—Evening Post.

How the [illegible] Jury Stood.

The jury were out for three days and stood the same from the beginning to the end. The first ballot was seven for conviction, two for acquittal, and two blank. One of the blanks is said to have been juryman [illegible], who was for conviction and voted that way on every subsequent ballot. Eleven ballots were taken and all but the first were nine to three.

Plainfield Railroad Officials.

The following are selected from a number of pen pictures of railroad men, in a New York paper of Tuesday:

"E. A. [illegible], traffic manager of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western road, is a tall man with iron-gray hair and chin whiskers. He is the peer of any of his colleagues on the trunk lines, and has developed remarkable sagacity since the Lackawanna joined the pool."

"Fred [illegible], agent of the New York and New England road, is tall and broad-shouldered and about 50 years of age. He represented the Union and Central Pacific companies for a number of years in this city, and is very well known and much liked."

A MACADAM DRIVE FROM PLAINFIELD TO ELIZABETH.

Continuous Roads Needed All Over the County of Union.

Concerning the proposed county roads, the following views were expressed in a letter written by Chauncey B. Ripley, of Westfield, and read at the meeting of citizens, last Thursday night, in the Court House at Elizabeth:

"The present popular movement towards improving the condition of our public roads, I regard as the most important to the growth and prosperity of central New Jersey, of any move undertaken in the last twenty years. With so many natural advantages as we have in Union county to draw desirable families from the metropolis; with the greatest and best accommodations for local travel on railroads; with so many other inducements to city people to settle in this healthy and convenient locality, we must keep pace with other suburban towns in the construction and care of our public roads. We have roads enough. Many of these roads, entire portions of others, are good. The reform we need in roads is (1) continuity. We need, in this county, a continuous road from Elizabeth to Plainfield; a continuous road from Elizabeth to Rahway; one from Elizabeth to Summit; one from Elizabeth to Springfield. In short, a continuous road from the county-seat of Union county to every other township in the county. The answer perhaps is, we have them. Granted, that we have them; yet they are only continuous in theory. If they are legally laid out, they are not in some cases open. If they are laid out and opened, then in many cases they are not worked. If they are laid out and opened and worked, they are often not worked with any reference to uniformity. There are, for example, between Elizabeth and Plainfield, nine or ten road districts, having jurisdiction over as many portions or sections of North avenue. Elizabeth has jurisdiction over one section; El Mora over another; Roselle over another; West Roselle, Cranford, Oakland, Westfield, Fanwood, Netherwood and Plainfield each jurisdiction over as many other portions or sections. The same is true of South avenue. The portion or section of North avenue within the jurisdiction of the city of Elizabeth is dangerous and almost impassable. It is a worse approach to the county-seat than we ever have had since the formation of Union county. The sections in El Mora and Roselle are bad, very bad. In West Roselle, still worse. In Cranford, partly bad and partly good. In Westfield mostly good, not altogether. So it is from Westfield to Plainfield. The South avenue in Westfield is only partly graded. A portion of it is utterly impassable.

"We need reform (2) in uniformity. That we can never have, in a dozen main roads, with half a dozen overseers on each road.

"After we secure practical continuity, which we already have in theory, and uniformity in management, then we need (3) the making of good roads where they are bad, and (4) the constant care of the roads when once made good. This will cost but little to each citizen, and that little will be returned very rapidly after good roads and good laws are accomplished.

"The county of Union, the whole county, should assume the opening, making and care of these main roads. They are roads benefiting every individual and every piece of property in the entire county. The expense of doing this should be so equalized that the benefits may be commensurate with the cost to each person and to each piece of property. The expense should be distributed through a series of years, too, so that future inhabitants of the county contribute their just proportion to this reform in public roads which past generations have so long neglected, and which is forced now upon the inhabitants of the county. Union county opened up, as contemplated by this movement, will receive an impetus that will soon be apparent from the increased population. We shall have with first-class county roads, our fair share of first-class residences and residents, and all else that such increase necessarily implies."

The Union County Board of Agriculture was represented at the meeting by its Secretary, Dennis C. Crane of Roselle. The officers of the Board are co-operating with citizens and other organizations in the county favoring the proposed roads. Mr. Crane in his last official report to the State Board of Agriculture, gave the township of Westfield and especially Mr. Ripley, credit for the best public roads in the county. Westfield is in favor of continuing these roads to the other towns and villages of the county.

The largest real estate owners in the county, Mr. Warren Ackerman of Fanwood, representing 2,000 acres; Mr. John Taylor Johnston of Plainfield, representing 1,000 acres; the Central New Jersey Land Improvement Company, representing 500 acres; Chauncey B. Ripley of Westfield, representing 400 acres; John Kean of Elizabeth, representing 300 acres, though they have all been improving the public roads for twenty years, and largely at their own expense, are in favor of this move.

While Brooklyn, Harlem, Orange and other suburbs of New York city are opening avenues through their territory, is it strange that Union county should begin to manifest the interest it does? "Without roads," says Governor Beaver of Pennsylvania, "we cannot have civilization, even."

Higher License in Plainfield.

The Council by a vote of six to four—as detailed in the proceedings, elsewhere—has adopted on its second reading and ordered engrossed preparatory to its final passage, an ordinance amending the license ordinance in two important particulars.

Upon its adoption, all places where spirituous and fermented liquors are sold, shall thereafter be closed from eleven o'clock at night, until six o'clock in the morning, and during all day of Sunday.

And all such places whether hotel bars or saloons, shall pay the sum of $700 before receiving any license.

ROYAL ARCANUM OFFICERS.

In the rooms of Plainfield Council, 711, Royal Arcanum, Monday, Supreme District Deputy, Grand Regent, Alex. Kerr, of Elizabeth, installed the following officers—Bro. E. S. Lawrence of Resolute Council, [illegible], of Elizabeth, acting as Grand Guide:

Regent—[illegible] W. Reed.
Vice Regent—[illegible] W. Conklin.
Orator—[illegible] C. Baker.
Past Regent—Rowland M. Rowe.
Secretary—Henry L. Thorne.
Collector—Louis M. [illegible].
Treasurer—John L. VanWinkle.
Chaplain—Rev. [illegible].
Guide—Henry S. [illegible].
Warden—David [illegible].
Sentry—Edward E. [illegible].
Organist—Robert [illegible], Jr.

Regent Kerr carried out the installation ceremonies with great effect, and repeating the ritual entirely from memory was unusually forcible and imposing in his service.

The remarks of Regent Reed, upon taking the chair, were very fine and evidenced at once that he will make an admirable and efficient officer. In addition to those installed above, other officers of Plainfield Council are:

Trustees—Seymour Marsh, [illegible], John E. [illegible].
Representative to Grand Council—Rowland M. Rowe; Alternate, Wm. J. Leonard.

—Bishop Wigger and party leave next month for the Holy Land and will be absent about three months. They will stop on the way and pay their respects to the Pope.

Meyers' Assailant Found.

It has been discovered that the man who shot Louis Meyers on a road near Feltville, while the latter was returning from Summit to his house near Scotch Plains, a few weeks ago, is a butcher in Summit. Jealousy was the cause. The man was arrested, but Meyers refused to prosecute him.

Election of Officers.

At the regular meeting of the Park Avenue Social Club, held in their rooms on Front street, opposite Park avenue, January 9, the following officers were elected for the ensuing term:

President—F. [illegible].
Vice President—G. B. [illegible].
Treasurer—J. C. Martin.
Secretary—J. C. [illegible].
Sergeant-at-arms—G. S. Martin.

The Club also decided to hold another one of their grand balls about February 7th.

A Discrepancy Regarding Lent.

(From the Asbury Park Journal.)

The Asbury Park Tribune gravely informs its readers this week that "Lent begins on Feb. 15, this year, and is shorter than usual."

We have heretofore labored under the hallucination that Lent always continued forty days. The delirious delusion also possessed us that in this glad new year of 1889 Lent begins on the 5th of March. Still we won't argue on mere technicalities.

How an English Literator Appreciates the Work of an Ex-Plainfielder.

The London Review has the following to say of Dr. Charles F. Stillman's recent valuable work which THE PRESS described some time ago:

The Spectator Company of New York has published a most valuable work on medical examinations by Dr. C. F. Stillman, whose varied titles and claims to respect are too numerous to recapitulate. It is dedicated to the President of the Mutual Life of New York, and copies are specially prepared for one of the [illegible] of the Equitable of the U. S. A., and so it has a first-class official endorsement.

We have carefully looked it over, and consider it the best work on the subject ever published, and one which no examining officer of a life assurance company should be without. With that special form of insanity peculiar to publishers, the Spectator Company gives us no information as to price. So we can only recommend it at any price (in reason) put upon it. And we will do what we have never done yet for any previous publication of its kind before, receive orders for the work, and see that subscribers get their copies.

The Fact of the Matter.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—Judging from an article in your issue of Wednesday, 7th inst., headed: "City Laws Cannot Abrogate State Laws," and by remarks dropped by others, there may be a misapprehension as to the action of the Common Council in reference to signatures to applications for saloon licenses, etc.

There is no attempt at "abrogation" of State laws in said action; though at first thought by some it might seem so. I presume such persons may conclude thus on the presumption that the Council is under law to grant license when an application comes before them properly signed. This is an entire mistake. It is optional with the Council in all cases to grant, or not grant any application that may come before them.

They have a right to decide according (in their judgment) as to whether the good of the public in said locality demands a saloon to be licensed therein. If there is not good intelligent men of moral character that can write their names, that will represent said applicant as of good character, and that such saloon is needed, they have a perfect right to make that a rule for not granting an application, and that without infringing or abrogation of any State law. WIND AND GOSSIP.

Fanwood's Cyclonic Experience—Mr. Thys Married—Sweets for the School Children.

When our ancestors founded the village of Scotch Plains they took the precaution of laying their foundation upon a rock, or at least upon some substance of good desirable qualities. Perhaps they were looking forward to high winds and storms, but they never anticipated a cyclone like that which struck the town one day last week. It was a real, old-fashioned tornado, boiled down and compressed into five minutes space. It didn't last longer than that, but in those five minutes it managed to get in a good day's work.

It struck about seven o'clock. The six o'clock train from New York, being late, had just arrived. Mr. Roland Treadwell was one of the passengers. He started to walk home, but had hardly gone as far as Dr. Oliver's before he was obliged to turn back. At the depot he found Mr. Flynn's carriage just starting for the village, and so he stepped in. The wind was blowing at a terrific rate and the air was filled with a shower of rain and hail. The carriage managed to get as far as Dr. Oliver's, just as Mr. Treadwell had done before, and there it stopped. The rain and hail were driving down like a tornado, and Mr. Flynn could not even see the horses in front of him. The wind would almost certainly have overturned the carriage, and so the driver turned the horses around. All this time everyone was enveloped in absolute darkness, as the driving rain made it impossible to see five feet ahead, but somehow Mr. Flynn managed to get the carriage around, and there they stayed until the blow was over.

Mr. Tuso, who came on the same train, met with a worse misfortune. He rode home, and the top of the carriage was completely torn away.

The gale seems to have passed over a very narrow strip of country. It was not felt in the North end of the town, in the neighborhood of Mr. Swan's and Mr. Hall's.

The big tree by the Baptist rectory had one of its lower limbs nearly broken off, and thrown right across the sidewalk.

One of the chimneys of Mr. Ilsley's houses was blown down. Part of the shed was torn away, and if the storm had lasted a few minutes longer, Mr. Ilsley would now be without any shed at all.

A large cherry tree was blown down in Mr. Treadwell's front yard. One of the bushes was torn up by the roots.

At Mr. Brittin's a section of the shed fell in, crushing a wagon which was standing beneath.

Three chimneys upon Mr. Flynn's house were blown to pieces, and the palings were badly damaged.

At the vacant lot formerly occupied by Dr. Clark's house, there used to be a tall and very handsome tree, of a peculiar species. This tree was one of the landmarks of the place; it was the only one of its kind in the county, and had been set out by Dr. Clark himself. The force of the gale must have been terrific at this point, for that immense tree was torn up by the roots.

Two panes of glass were broken in the residence of Mr. Sykes.

In this manner did the cyclone sweep over the village, and when we remember last year's blizzard we realize that there is sometimes excitement and novelty even in a little Jersey village.

Social circles are all agog over the marriage of Mr. Joseph Thys, formerly of Front street, but now living upon the Terrill road. The happy event took place last Monday night. Mr. Thys is the recipient of congratulations on all sides, but he bears his honors gracefully. Is marriage a failure? "Bah!" says Jo Thys.

Mr. John Wright has opened a small store on Union avenue, where he has an assortment of candy, toys, gum, and articles of that kind. It is but a short walk from the school house to Mr. Wright's store, and thereby hangs a tale that recalls the younger days of your

SUBURBAN SAUNTERER.

Time Table Changes.

A slight change of schedule went into effect on the Central Railroad morning January 13.

The changes are: Trains leave Newark for Plainfield at 4:20 and 9:50 P. M. on Sundays, instead of 4:10 and 9:15. The 3:27 A. M., 12:32 and 1:31 P. M. trains make direct connection for Atlantic City.

Entertainments in Their New Hall.

A dramatic entertainment, strictly for members only, will be held in the new Hall of the Gesang and Turn Verein, Monday evening, Feb. 4.

On Monday evening, March 4, however, a masquerade ball will be given in the Hall, which the friends of the members, also, will have an opportunity of enjoying.

Surprised With a Serenade.

Friday was the 58th anniversary of the birth of Mr. Charles Dressel, Financial Secretary and Chairman of the Building Committee of the Gesang and Turn Verein, so the Singing Section of the society took the opportunity of serenading their popular member at his residence on Emily street.

The chorus had hardly finished their first selection, when they were heartily welcomed into the house by Mr. Dressel, and it was midnight before they left again.

ACCIDENTALLY SHOT.

A young son of Mr. Seymour G. Smith, residing on Central avenue, met with a painful accident on Saturday last. The youngster had borrowed a revolver, with which to shoot at a rooster. After inserting the cartridges in the chamber, the latter refused to go in its place, and the youthful Smith thereupon struck the heads of the cartridges with the butt of the revolver. Result, two explosions. The ball from one chamber entered the flesh of the forefinger of the left hand, where it lodged and was subsequently extracted by Dr. Fritz. "Dode" is doing as well as can be expected, but will not want to experiment with revolvers and roosters very soon again.

Death of Mrs. J. H. Huntington.

At her home on West Second street, on January 11, occurred the death of Mrs. James H. Huntington, after a long and terrible illness. The deceased was in the forty-fifth year of her age, and was well-known here. About six months ago she was transferred to Muhlenberg Hospital where an operation was to have been performed, but the surgeons in charge decided that an operation would inevitably prove fatal and it was not attempted. She was returned to her home, where she has since been slowly wasting away.

Mrs. Huntington was Past Worthy Patriarch in Howell Division, No. 97, Sons of Temperance, and a member of the Woman's Relief Corps, No. 10. A husband and one son survive her.

Officers Installed.

At a regular encampment of Major Anderson Post, No. 109, G. A. R., held in the K. of P. rooms on East Front street, on Jan. 10, the following officers were installed for the ensuing year, by Installing Officer, Reuna B. Manning of New Brooklyn:

Commander—Elmore D. Moffett.
Senior Vice-Commander—Chas. Randolph.
Junior Vice-Commander—P. V. Weaver.
Chaplain—T. R. Crosby.
Surgeon—Dr. A. S. Titsworth.
Quarter-Master—N. C. Pennington.
Adjutant—E. J. Gilson.
Sergeant-Major—J. R. Naylor.
Officer of the Day—J. Brady.
Officer of the Guard—J. N. Anderson.

Major Anderson Post is slowly but steadily increasing in membership.

After the installation services, remarks were made by Post Commander, Nelson Runyon, Commander Moffett and others.

The Young Men's Auxiliary.

At the Y. M. C. A. rooms, January 10 a new society for young men and boys was organized, which has for its object—as stated in the constitution—the spiritual, moral and social improvement of boys in general.

It is intended that it shall in some measure fill the place left vacant by the dissolution of the old society, although it was organized under a new name—The Young Men's Auxiliary—and constitution. All young men of good moral character, having attained the age of 14 years, are eligible to membership.

The following officers were elected:

President—Chas. F. Golhaar.
Vice President—S. H. Patterson.
Secretary—J. H. Case.
Treasurer—N. VanWinkle.

AN EXCITING RUNAWAY.

A team of work horses belonging to Mr. L. Heyniger, the flour and feed merchant of Somerset street, North Plainfield, were left in charge of a boy at the freight house, about four o'clock afternoon January 10, while the driver was attending to some business inside the building. Presently some cars were drilled in on the siding near where the horses were standing, and they became frightened and ran away.

The horses were wild with fright, and rushed frantically down the steep incline leading into East Fourth street. Before the horses had run scarcely a hundred feet, their speed was terrific, and when they reached a point in front of Mr. A. Hedden's livery stable, the pole on the wagon struck a telephone pole squarely, throwing both horses, and wrecking the wagon to a considerable extent. To show the great force of the blow, made by the collision, it may be stated that an indentation was made in the telephone pole, fully two inches deep. A glass street lamp was also knocked over and shattered into fragments.

One of the horses escaped injury, but the other had a deep flesh wound inflicted on the right side, large enough and deep enough to admit a hand. Dr. Ferster dressed the wound, which will necessarily require a long time to heal.

While Dr. Ferster was at work sewing up the wound, the animal gave him a stunning kick on the right arm. The doctor was taken to his home in a carriage.

A TIME TABLE OF YE OLDEN TIMES.

THE PRESS is in possession of a time-table which went into effect on the New Jersey Central Railroad, on Monday, November 19, 1866. At that time there were two trains each way daily, on the South Branch Railroad. Greenville station was then known as "Bay Cemetery," Pamrapo was called "Salterville," El Mora was known as "Mulford," Fanwood as "Scotch Plains," Dunellen as "New Market," and Annandale as "Clinton." The first train from New York, at that time, arrived here at 7:45 A. M., and the last at 8:55 P. M., so that a passenger missing the 7:30 o'clock train from New York in the evening was obliged to remain in the city over night or walk home.

The first train over the road, daily, started from Easton at 1:35 A. M., arriving here at 3:44 A. M., and in New York at 5:00 o'clock in the morning. There was but one train each way passed through Plainfield on Sundays.

In 1866, the through trains from New York, made the run of twenty-four miles, with one stop, at Elizabeth, in one hour and six minutes. The run is now made in about forty-five minutes. There were then nine passenger trains from New York, daily, and ten to New York, the latest leaving Plainfield at 9:26 P. M. Following was the schedule of the trains arriving in and departing from this city:

To New York—3:44, 6:25, 7:27, 8:25, 9:02, 9:10 A. M., 1:25, 3:26, 4:04 and 9:26, P. M.

From New York—7:45, 9:20, 10:26, A. M., 1:20, 5:20, 6:20, 6:38, 7:40, 8:55 P. M.

—Testimony in the divorce suit of Ilsley vs. Ilsley, will begin before John H. VanWinkle, Esq., Monday morning next, at 10 o'clock.

Installation of Officers.

The newly elected officers of Jerusalem Lodge, No. 26, F. & A. M. of this city, were installed into their respective offices by P. G. M. Cannon, of Elizabeth, P. M., Wm. H. Sebring, acting as Marshal:

W. M.—H. Woodland.
S. W.—H. S. Mason.
J. W.—J. F. Shepherd.
Treasurer—J. C. Pope.
Secretary—P. M., R. F. Coriell.
Chaplain—Alex. Titsworth.
S. D.—Wm. J. Ford.
J. D.—E. B. Weaver.
Tyler—W. V. Moody.

Mr. C. P. Leggett was appointed organist and the following persons constitute the Finance Committee: A. Titsworth, J. G. Miller and P. M., W. L. Titsworth.

After the installation services P. G. M., Cannon of Elizabeth, who is also P. M. of Jerusalem Lodge, presented to P. M., John Chandler, in behalf of the lodge, an elegant Past Master's jewel and apron.

Remarks were made by Installing Officer Cannon, A. Titsworth and W. M., C. M. Goddard, the latter from Anchor Lodge.

CONCERNING THE LATE HENRY BORST.

THE PRESS recently told of the tragic death of Henry M. Borst in a railroad accident near Pueblo, Col., where he had gone to seek employment, after engaging himself to a young lady in this city. It has since been ascertained that the unfortunate young man had a wife living at Little Falls, N. Y., as the following from the Herkimer county News of May 4, 1888, will attest:

HYMENIAL.

"At Summit, N. J., April, 27, 1888, occurred the marriage of Miss Jennie McHenry, of this village, to Harry M. Borst, of Plainfield, N. J., Rev. Mr. White being the officiating clergyman. Miss McHenry is a popular and highly esteemed young lady, and a favorite among her associates. Mr. Borst is a pleasing, genial young man, and at the present time fills the position of bookkeeper for Franklyn Bros. & Co., importers, Fulton street, New York. To Mr. and Mrs. Borst we extend our most hearty congratulations."

Ascertaining the above facts in the matter, a PRESS reporter set out to obtain additional information. When the accident was recorded in these columns, mention of the wife was omitted, simply because the deceased was supposed to have been a single man. Perseverance Lodge, K. of P. of this city, of which the young man was a member, ordered an investigation so as to find out who was entitled to the funeral benefit, and found the facts as substantially stated above.

A touching letter was received in this city from the young wife, a few days ago, stating, among other things, that she had married her husband, without her parents' knowledge or consent, he purporting to be a man of means and enjoying a lucrative position. In this respect, she says, she was duped, although she was willing to overlook this, and toil herself for the support of herself and husband.

Mrs. Borst says she informed her parents of the marriage, and that both her husband and herself were given a hearty welcome at her home. Soon afterward they came to Plainfield, and took up their residence here, but at the end of two weeks she was told by her husband that she must return home, as he intended to go West and seek employment. He promised to send for her, but she never received word or letter from him until informed of his death by letter from Pueblo.

Mrs. Borst further states that she was prostrated for eleven weeks on account of her husband's prolonged absence, and that she is now obliged to work in a mill to support herself.

Perseverance Lodge will pay the funeral benefit to the widow.

GOOD DEEDS AND GOOD WORDS.

The Annual meeting of the Plainfield Reform Club was held January 10, and its Hall was well filled by the members and others interested in the objects of the organization and the Club's success. President John H. French presided, and in the absence of the Recording Secretary, Mr. H. N. Spencer acted pro tem.

Mr. James McGee opened the meeting with prayer, and Mr. Vanderbeek, with his full choir, led the music. Reports were received and read from the Executive Committee, the Financial Secretary and the Treasurer—the latter, condensed, as follows:

ETHAN LANPHEAR, Treas.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the Reform Club of Plainfield, on this, the installation evening of newly-elected officers, deems this occasion appropriate to reiterate and make public the distinctive objects of its organization, which are:

The maintenance and advancement through prompt, kindly admonition, consistent example and all other laudable endeavors, of the health-giving and prosperity-assuring cause of Temperance, of total abstinence from the use of intoxicating beverages of every name and nature;

The stretching forth, prompted by the Samaritan spirit of charity and love, of helping hands to uplift the fallen, to rescue the perishing, to reclaim victims of the ruinous liquor-drinking habit, and to strengthen and encourage all, irrespective of age, sex, creed, or worldly condition, to abandon error and zealously rally for the triumph of right;

The exercise of all available and honorable means, entirely independent of sectarianism or partisanship, to effectually block the tempter's pathway, and to exterminate the widespread and heartrending evils of intemperance.

On behalf of these salutary purposes, the Reform Club solicits the sympathy and active co-operation of every individual whose allegiance is to God and whose yearnings are for the temporal and eternal welfare of Humanity.

The Club then proceeded to the annual installation of its officers for 1889. Vice President Harper presided, and the officers below were duly installed with the exception of Mr. G. W. F. Randolph, who was not present owing to the death of his wife's brother, the Rev. Mr. Honeyman who was ill, and Mr. W. C. Smith.

President—John H. French.
1st Vice President—Nathan Harper.
2d Vice President—Wm. R. Ostrom.
3d Vice President—J. B. Burnett.
Rec. Sec.—Geo. W. F. Randolph.
Financial Sec.—J. V. A. [illegible].
Treasurer—Geo. F. Opdyke.
1st Marshal—Wm. Reed.
2d Marshal—Wm. C. Smith.
Chaplain—Rev. W. [illegible] Honeyman.
Sergeant-at-Arms—Mark Lees.

Each of those present responded with appropriate remarks of appreciation and acceptance. Mr. George F. Opdyke then presented Miss Alice Smith, in behalf of the Reform Club, with a purse of $50 as a slight indication of their recognition of her faithful service as pianist. The recipient returned acknowledgment of the remembrance.

The Reform Club is in a most sound and healthy condition, and the extent of the good work cannot be estimated. 250 signed the pledge during the past year. Over $300 was paid in for dues, and the plate collections of the evening meetings, reached a total of about $150.

—Children who wanted Santa Claus to bring them ice skates on Christmas, are now silently kicking themselves because they did not "order" something else.

A. TITSWORTH,
City Treasurer.

A Wayward Youth.

Charles McCann, a resident on the boulevard, threshed "Paddy" Day's bartender on January 5, for which he was arrested by Chief Carey and Officer Lynch, after a chase in the rear of French's mill, Friday night. Next morning, when arraigned before Mayor Male, at the station house, he was sullen and obstinate, and declared that the police were running the city to suit themselves.

Installation of Officers.

At a regular meeting of Plainfield Lodge, No. 305, Order of Tonti, held on the 10th instant, Supreme Treasurer, Geo. W. Wright, assisted by Deputy Supreme Marshal, G. E. Stillman installed the following officers:

Past Prest—G. E. Stillman.
President—W. R. Codington.
Vice Prest—Jos. A. Hubbard.
Secretary—Jos. C. Randall.
Treasurer—F. A. Dunham.
Chaplain—Rev. Cornelius Schenck.
Marshal—Lorenzo J. Spicer.
Guard—Chas. E. Vail.
Sentinel—Edwin D. Finch.
Trustees—R. F. Coriell, Lewis A. Hummer, Thos. B. Cardner.

A Rapid-Transit Trip Over the Central, From Communipaw to the Atlantic.

Jan. 10 the Central R. R. opened a new express passenger service between New York and Atlantic City, made up of parlor cars that go through without change. The schedule time is four hours which necessitates some very fast running.

Before risking the lives of the general public over the route, the company tried it on a few newspaper men and other distinguished guests, yesterday. A train consisting of a smoking coach, a hotel and buffet car, and two drawing-room coaches, left Jersey City shortly after nine o'clock A. M., slowed up at Elizabethport to take on genial General Superintendent, J. H. Olhausen, and the editors of the Central Times and THE PRESS, stopped at Winslow Junction to couple up a coach of guests from Philadelphia, and ran into the Atlantic City depot at 12:45—fifteen minutes under the schedule time.

Big Engine 37 pulled the train, and in spite of the fact that it was her first trip since she had been upset at South Easton, she flew over the fine road bed with both great speed and comfort. At times it was variously estimated that the speed reached anywhere from one to three miles a minute according to how the judgment had been warped by the atmosphere of the buffet car.

Conductor "Plain Ike" Munn was in charge of the train, Engineer Bernie Munn handled the throttle, and another Munn fired. It was one of those runs that are only possible over the divisions of the Central, in their rolling stock, and under the control of Superintendents Peddie and Clark. Had there been no stop at Winslow Junction, the latter would have won a box of cigars from Auditor Wolfe on a bet that the run would be made in 3:30.

The Woodruff company had stocked its hotel car with everything that could be desired and the lunch room and the buffet were wide open from morning till night, while the colored servants under the faithful watch of "Robert," kept the wants of all the guests supplied. Upon the arrival at Atlantic City, carriages and stages were in waiting to distribute the party among the best hotels of the place, and nothing that their proprietors offered did they consider too good for those they were entertaining.

Mayor Hoffman of Atlantic City presided over the extensive dinner that was served the select party at the Hotel Dennis. On his left was Police Commissioner Voorhees of New York, and on the right Mr. J. Robinson, of Robinson Wallace & Co., the builders and owners of the perfect system of sewage that has been the saviour of Atlantic City. Others who made speeches with the wine, were Col. Page of the Brooklyn Eagle, Col. Smith of the N. Y. 7th Reg't, the City Solicitor and City Physician of Atlantic City, and Mr. Crowley of the Associated Press. A tour was afterwards made of what the prospectus calls, "The peerless city by the sea." It was under a cloud that did its best to dampen everything, but it could not hide its magnificent sweep of ocean and beach, its streets full of busy stores, its half-a-hundred fine hotels and other handsome buildings, besides the thousand of private and boarding cottages that accommodate those who are the Summer and also, to some extent, the Winter transient population of this all the year round charming watering place.

The running of the through express from Liberty street, leaving New York at 2:30 P. M., and Atlantic City at 9 A. M., daily except Sunday, should in time prove a very popular bit of enterprise. The guests of Mr. H. P. Baldwin, yesterday, heartily congratulated him upon the opening of a route with such unexcelled accomodations in every way—from road bed to parlor car. It is another of those efforts to gratify the traveling public that the Central railroad has been noted for during the extended term of office of its present general passenger agent.

Mr. Wm. H. Brower Breaks Up a "Flower Trust."

Mr. William H. Brower of this city is entitled to the credit for breaking up a well organized "Flower Trust," which was recently arranged among the New York florists. Witness this from the New-York Graphic:

"It is not generally known that a 'flower trust' was recently put into successful operation among the florists of this vicinity, who market their buds in New York, and that it was broken up within a week. Flowers for Christmas Day were so high as to stagger Fifth Avenue millionaires. On New Year's Day prices were reasonable, although the opportunity was presented for another big 'strike' by the 'trust.' The man who blocked their project is William H. Brower. He is a flower dealer at Broadway and Twenty-third street, who has the custom of hotel guests in that vicinity, and looks like a sturdy descendant of the old Dutch settlers of New Amsterdam. He was forced to pay such prices for flowers on Christmas that he was ashamed to demand a proper return from his customers. He 'got his Dutch up,' and determined to break down the combination. By New Year's Day the florists were all begging him to go in with them to hold up prices and 'hold up' the public. Mr. Brower replied that he could not afford to treat his customers in that manner, and what was more he wouldn't do it. So the trust was bursted."

Corporation Notice.

NOTICE is hereby given that the following Ordinance has been introduced before the Common Council, read the second time, and ordered engrossed preparatory to its third reading, and that it is the intention of the Council to adopt the same.

OLIVER B. LEONARD, City Clerk.
Plainfield, N. J., Jan. 14, 1889.

AN ORDINANCE

To amend an Ordinance entitled "An Ordinance to License Inns and Taverns and to Regulate and Prohibit the Sale of Spirituous and Fermented Liquors," adopted February 22, 1875; re-adopted March 8, 1875, notwithstanding the objections of the Mayor; amended by Ordinances approved June 3, 1879; December 7, 1881; December 14, 1882; January 30, 1885; November 16, 1886; December 31, 1887; February 7, 1888.

The Inhabitants of the City of Plainfield, by their Common Council do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. That section 13 of said ordinance, and section 3 of amendment of Dec. 31st, 1887, be and the same hereby are amended by striking out the word "twelve" where it occurs in said sections and substituting in lieu thereof the word "eleven."

SECTION 2. That section 17 of said ordinance be and the same hereby is amended by striking out the words and figures "five hundred dollars ($500)," wherever they occur in said section and substituting in lieu thereof the words and figures "seven hundred dollars ($700)."

IN CHANCERY OF NEW JERSEY.

To Stevens S. Rowland:

By virtue of an order of the Court of Chancery of New Jersey made on the day of the date hereof in a cause wherein William Bartle is complainant and you and others are defendants, you are required to appear, plead, answer or demur to the bill of said complainant on or before the Ninth day of March next, or the said bill will be taken as confessed against you.

The said bill is filed for partition of certain lands in the village of Scotch Plains, in the Township of Fanwood, in the county of Union and State of New Jersey, of which Sarah Bartle died seized, and you are made defendant because you have recovered and now hold a judgment against Isaac — Bartle, one of the tenants in common therein.

Dated January 8, 1889.

MISCELLANEOUS. MISCELLANEOUS.

My Poor Back!

That "poor back" is held responsible for more than its share of the sufferings of mankind. If your dog bites a man who kicks it, do you blame the dog? On the same principle the kidneys utter their protest against nervous use, impure blood, and resulting constipation. These force them to do extraordinary work in ridding the system of the poisons which are the result of effete matter retained in the blood. Then the sufferer says the back aches; the kidneys are diseased. "Not yet;" but they will be unless the nerves are strengthened, the blood purified, and the constipation removed. These are the causes of kidney troubles, and Paine's Celery Compound removes them quickly. With its tonic, purifying, and laxative effect, it also strengthens the weak kidneys, making it almost infallible in curing all diseases of the nerves and kidneys. If your hopes of cure have not been realized, try Paine's Celery Compound; it gives perfect health to all who complain of "their poor backs." Price $1.00.

—Street Commissioner Angleman has done a commendable job by leveling off the uneven surface of the ground in front of Trinity Reformed church, and spreading crushed stone on the same.

—The hose-cart donated to the fire department by the W. C. T. U., has been put into active service, and will now be run regularly to fires. The cart is at present stored in Alert Hose Company's house.

—The sale was consummated, Jan. 16, of the property on West Front street, owned by Mr. Adam Fritz, and occupied by ex-Assemblyman John Vetterlein as a meat market. Mr. Jacob Voehl was the purchaser.

—The fake story in the news last night concerning pleuro-pneumonia among a herd of Jersey cattle belonging to milkman Whitney, is greatly exaggerated, and shows how sensational that paper is in its declining days.

—A dandelion in full bloom was plucked in the roadway under the New street railroad bridge, Sunday afternoon, and brought to THE PRESS office. Here is an evidence of the mild weather we have thus far experienced this Winter.

—Invitations are out for the wedding on Jan. 23 of Miss Nellie Florence Irving, of Westfield, to Frank S. Miller, son of State Senator James L. Miller. It will be a brilliant society event and will take place in the Westfield Presbyterian church. A reception will follow at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Irving, the parents of the bride. The groom is an officer in the Union County Republican League.

Married at the Parsonage.

At the residence of Dr. D. J. Yerkes on West Seventh street, at 7:30 o'clock Tuesday, Mr. John Y. Barrett and Miss Adella Scribner were united in marriage, Dr. Yerkes officiating. A sister of the bride assumed the title of bridesmaid, and Mr. Ernest Barrett, a brother of the groom, acted as best man. After a short wedding trip, Mr. and Mrs. Barrett will take up their residence at No. 250 Somerset street, North Plainfield.

Extending the Third Track.

A force of men are at work at Grant and Clinton avenues, bridging the driveways, for the third track which is to extend from Bound Brook to Elizabeth. When the connections are made at Grant and Clinton avenues, there will be one continuous track between Bound Brook and Elizabeth. At the present time coal trains are side-tracked at Fanwood, and the main line between that city and Elizabeth is given up exclusively to passenger traffic.

Officers Installed.

At a regular meeting of Friendship Rebecca Degree Lodge, of this city, held in Odd Fellows' Hall, on Friday evening last, the following officers were installed by D. D., Charles W. Tallman:

Noble Grand—Mrs. Elizabeth Kinsey.
Vice Grand—Mrs. [illegible] Shepard.
Recording Secretary—[illegible]
Treasurer—Mrs. [illegible] Odam.
Financial Secretary—Amelia E. Kinsey.

The following officers were appointed by the Noble Grand:

Warden—Mrs. [illegible]
Conductor—[illegible]

R. S. V. G.—[illegible]
Inside Guard—[illegible] Kinsey.
Chaplain—E. [illegible]

Declares He Saw a Ghost.

Special Officer Geo. Smith, who is employed at the freight house, is willing to make an affidavit that he saw the ghost of the dead man, who was killed by the cars at Clinton avenue, Tuesday night. Mr. Smith had not heard of the accident on the railroad, and the subsequent bringing of the body to the freight house here. He declares that when he opened the freight house, about seven o'clock next morning, he discovered what he supposed to be a man sitting on a stool in front of the cashier's window. He bounded out of the door, terribly frightened. Mr. Smith says he thought there were burglars in the building, so he cautiously pushed open the door again and was surprised to find that the man had disappeared.

When some of the other men arrived at the freight house Mr. Smith related his experience, and described minutely the man he saw when opening the door. He said the stranger wore dark clothes, was stoutly built and had on a white slouch hat. Mr. Smith was then told of the corpse lying in another part of the building, and to the surprise of all, the description given tallied exactly with the dead man, except that no hat was found with the body. A search was made for the hat, so as to ascertain whether it corresponded with the one described by Mr. Smith, but at this writing it has not been found.

Mr. Smith is a man who can be relied upon. He says that he never before received such a fright. He further states that he keeps good hours, and is a total abstainer. Otherwise he may have been "rattled" [illegible]."

Personals.

An heir was born to Mr. Walter Scott, Friday of last week.

Mrs. Eli Beadle and daughter of Cranford, N. J., are visiting Mrs. George Thatcher of Seventh street.

Samuel McMahon, a resident on West Third street, died Friday morning. He was sixty years of age.

Mr. Winfield Shepherd, who left this city about seven years ago, and who is now located at St. Louis, is visiting his parents on Manning avenue, North Plainfield.

Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Ryder of Central avenue, entertained a few friends at their residence, Monday. The guests were provided with refreshments during the evening.

Mr. Frank K. Harte, of this city, is on his return voyage from a visit to his father, Mr. F. Bret Harte who is still detained by professional engagements in Europe.

Harry Melbourne of this city, a son of Mrs. H. Melbourne of Somerville, was married at Elizabeth, Dec. 30, to Maggie A., daughter of P. H. Apgar, formerly of Somerville.

Mrs. Elizabeth Thistlethwait, better known as "Aunty Thistlethwait," spoke a few words of encouragement at the Friend's meeting house on Peace street, Sunday morning.

Master Cornelius Buckley of Rosendale, N. Y., is visiting his sister Mrs. C. Sutton of West Fourth street. Miss Buckley another sister, has returned to Plainfield, after a week's visit at Stamford, Conn.

Mrs. Chas Sandford, whose illness was so seriously increased by the great shock of her husband's sudden death, is possibly a little better today, although her condition is still the source of some apprehension.

Mr. A. W. Sutphen of Brooklyn, N. Y., who has been confined to his bed for several weeks past, with inflammatory rheumatism, is able to be around again and is visiting relatives in this city and the borough.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Stilwell of Hamilton, Canada, are visiting at the residence of Mrs. Stilwell's father, Prof. Samuel D. Frazee of New street. Mr. Stilwell is the manager of the Edison Electric Light Company at Hamilton.

In the appointment of the standing committees in the New Jersey Assembly, Tuesday, the Hon. John Ulrich of this city was placed on the Committee of Bill Revision, and the Joint Committee on the Industrial School for Girls.

After a long and painful illness, Thomas J. Pell died during Thursday last at the home of his daughter in Great Barrington, Mass. His widow is a daughter of the late John L. Everitt, Esq., of this city, and besides her are left a son and daughter.

The New York firm of Day, Reed & Cooley, dealers in dry goods, the junior member of which is Mr. Martin I. Cooley, of North Plainfield, expired by limitation with the old year, and Mr. Cooley has entered the new partnership of Robinson, Shackleton & Cooley.

At Jersey City, on the 9th instant, occurred the death of Gertrude E. Ryno, youngest daughter of James N., and Emily E. Ryno, aged two years and three months. The cause of death was malignant scarlet fever. Mr. and Mrs. Ryno formerly resided in this city.

The funeral of the late Samuel McMahon, who died on Friday, took place from St. Mary's church at 2:30 o'clock Sunday afternoon and was largely attended, the members of the T. A. B. Society, of which the deceased was a member, attending in a body. Interment was made in St. Mary's cemetery.

The Baltimore Sun says: "We have received by the composer, Mr. Clark W. Evans, a copy of the "Polka Adele," which is dedicated to Mrs. Louise Gross Horwitz, and named after her daughter, Miss Adele Horwitz. The music is very pretty. It is being arranged by Adam Itzel, Jr., so that it may be played at the theatre and germans."

Funeral of Mrs. Wm. H. Williams.

The funeral of the late Mrs. William H. Williams, who died during Friday night last, took place from the late home of the deceased on Madison avenue, Tuesday afternoon, many relatives and friends of the family being present to pay their last respects. Rev. Dr. Yerkes officiated, and Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis made the closing prayer. Interment was made in Evergreen cemetery. Rev. Mr. Stewart made a prayer at the grave.

On, For a Y. M. C. A. Building.

A very pleasant and encouraging conference of the building canvassers of the Y. M. C. A., was held Tuesday at the residence of Mr. A. B. Beers, W. Seventh street. The total amount actually subscribed to date is $23,251. One of the gratifying features of the canvass is the fact that the interest is so general, the above amount representing over 200 subscribers. Many interested, of large means, have thus far withheld the amount of their subscriptions. It is hoped before the next meeting, Jan. 29, that all who have signified their intention of subscribing after the first of the year, and many more, will designate the amount of their subscriptions.

Death of Mrs. Lemuel W. Serrell.

At her home on West Front street, at a quarter before 9 o'clock Tuesday evening, occurred the death of Mrs. Lemuel W. Serrell, the estimable wife of ex-Councilman Serrell. The deceased had been ailing more or less for the past three years during which time she has had several sicknesses. On January 10 her condition became dangerous, and her decline was rapid until the end, death resulting from a complication of diseases.

Mrs. Serrell was a member of the First Baptist church. She was a woman of true Christian resignation, and her life was characterized by the many good deeds she has accomplished. The husband of the deceased was at one time a member of the City Council, and is now a solicitor of patents with offices in the Vanderbilt building, on Nassau street, New York City.

The deceased leaves a family consisting of the husband, four sons and one daughter, one of the sons now being located on a ranch in Colorado.

The funeral will take place from the house on Friday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock.

—The United States Express drivers will hold their first grand sociable in Dunlap's Hall, on Wednesday evening, Jan. 23.

—Mr. John J. Kenney, the North avenue shoe dealer, will on April 1 remove his store to the corner of Park avenue and Front street, in the building now occupied by Mr. B. B. Force.

The Night School.

The attendance at the night school, both for males and females, is rapidly increasing. On Tuesday evening 58 females were present at the evening session, and last night 104 young men attended. The night school promises to exceed the expectations of the Board of Education, and much good will doubtless result from it.

Death of Mrs. William H. Williams.

Sad announcement was made Saturday of the death of Mrs. Wm. H. Williams, the estimable wife of the well-known newsdealer of this city, which occurred at her home on Madison avenue, about half-past one o'clock.

Mrs. Williams contracted a cold three weeks ago today, which developed into rheumatic fever and resulted in her death, after a confinement to the bed for about eighteen days.

The deceased was a daughter of Mr. Wm. Estil, and a sister of Mr. Mulford Estil, the Park avenue stationer. Her marriage relationship extends back for a period of about twenty-seven years. Besides the husband, one son and three daughters survive her.

Funeral of Mrs. James H. Huntington.

The funeral of the late Mrs. James H. Huntington, who died on Friday, took place from the Trinity Reformed church at half-past two o'clock Monday afternoon. Members of Howell Division, No. 97, Sons of Temperance, Woman's Relief Corps, No. 10, and other organizations attending in a body. The floral display was grand. At the request of the deceased, a duett composed of Miss Emma Whitlock and Miss Emma U. King, sang "Sun of My Soul," and "Jesus Lover of My Soul." Rev. Mr. Schenck, the pastor, conducted the service, and spoke in touching terms of the deceased.

The body rested in a casket, and was laid out in the full regalia of the Sons of Temperance. After an opportunity was given for those present to view the remains, the casket was borne to its final resting place.

HURLED TO HIS DEATH.

The West-bound B. & O. emigrant train over the Central Railroad, which passes through this city at about 8:40 P. M., daily, struck and instantly killed an unknown man just East of the Clinton avenue railroad crossing, Tuesday. The body was hurled fully thirty feet, landing between the cars of a passing coal train, finally rolling off on the ground a corpse. The emigrant train backed up and conveyed the remains to Dunellen, and later they were brought to this city and taken in charge by undertaker Casey.

There was nothing in the dead man's pockets that would establish his identity. He was a man in the neighborhood of 30 years of age, of the working class and decently dressed. When picked up the body was as limp as a dish-cloth, indicating that many bones in the body, arms and legs had been broken; the skull was also fractured.

The Quiet Wedding in Which Four Clergymen Took Part.

The pretty little Chapel of the First Presbyterian church on East Front street, was well filled, Tuesday, and even in the galleries but few seats were vacant. The occasion was the marriage of Emma Louise, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Abram L. Cadmus of West Front street, and the Rev. George Newell Karner, son of Mr. A. B. Karner of this city.

The ceremony took place at 5:45 o'clock, the Rev. K. P. Ketcham officiating. The pianist was Miss Josephine Petrie. The bridal party was headed by the best man, the Rev. Charles I. Junkin, of Wilkesbarre, Pa., and the other ushers, the Rev. Ford C. Ottman, of Newark, Mr. E. K. Appleton, a cousin of the bride, of Haverhill, Mass., and Mr. A. L. Bouyon, of this city. The bride was dressed very handsomely in white cloth, and attended by her little cousin, Miss Adele Mills.

The chapel was beautifully decorated by the willing hands of the members of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor. A bank of evergreens was placed behind the pulpit platform, and on the wall above was the appropriate quotation:

BE YE DOERS OF THE WORD AND NOT HEARERS ONLY.

Dr. Ketcham's service was a most impressive one. At its close, Mr. and Mrs. Karner returned to the home of the bride's parents, where an informal reception was held, and supper served, to the relatives and other guests from out-of-town.

After a shower of congratulations, rice, slippers and good wishes, the bride and groom left Plainfield on the 8:19 P. M. train for Philadelphia and a Southern trip. They will arrive at their permanent home in Manchester, N. H., about Feb. 1, where the groom is pastor of the Westminster Presbyterian church.

DIED IN HIS CHAIR.

Mr Charles W. Sandford, one of the best known and universally esteemed residents in Washington Park, North Plainfield, dropped dead in his chair while at dinner, at 1 o'clock Friday afternoon, of paralysis of the heart.

On January 9 Mr Sandford called at THE PRESS office and paid his subscription for six months in advance. Jan. 10 he was about town as usual, evidently enjoying good health. January 11 he complained of slight pains in the chest; but he was up about the house as usual. At one o'clock that afternoon the family sat down to dinner, which Mr. Sandford appeared to relish. When the meal was about half finished he gave a gasp and died instantly—members of the family surrounding him to keep him from falling from the chair. Dr. Probasco was immediately summoned, but when he arrived at the house life was extinct.

The deceased was for many years a resident of Green Brook, and several years since he removed to North Plainfield, occupying at the time of his death a handsome residence on Washington avenue. Of late he has lived a retired life.

Mr. Sandford married Amelia Laing, daughter of Mr. Isaac W. Laing of Short Hills, a former wife of the deceased's brother, William Sandford, being a sister. Besides the widow, four children, Fred, Emily, Laura and Percy, are left to mourn his loss.

The funeral obsequies, following the death of the late Charles Sandford, which occurred on Friday, took place from the late residence of the deceased on Washington avenue, North Plainfield, at half-past 10 o'clock Tuesday morning, Rev. W. R. Richards officiating. The large house was densely filled with the relatives and friends of the afflicted family, many of the former being from out of town. Although it was requested that flowers be omitted, several handsome designs rested on the casket. Rev. Mr. Richards, during his discourse, paid a fitting tribute to the departed dead, and spoke encouraging words to the members of the mourning family.

The wife of the deceased has been dangerously ill for several weeks' past, but since her husband's death she had expressed a desire to accompany the body to Greenwood, where it was taken on the 12:28 P. M. train. In the morning, however, she realized her delicate condition, and at her request she was tenderly carried down stairs, and for the last time she gazed upon the features of her dead husband.

—In the case of Fritz Schlitter against Mr. Edward Love, in which a verdict was awarded plaintiff by a Jury on Monday last, the Hon. John Ulrich was engaged by the plaintiff, and Mr. Craig A. Marsh and Wm. R. Codington represented the defendant, Mr. Love.

Installation of Officers.

The newly-elected officers of Plainfield Lodge, No. 44, I. O. O. F., were installed into office, Monday evening, after which an adjournment was made to Mr. J. H. McVey's restaurant on North avenue for supper.

The following officers were installed by D. D. G. M., McGregory of Elizabethport Lodge, No. 116, assisted by his team:

N. G.—Jacob Kinsey.
V. G.—Sam'l Dodd.
R. S.—W. L. [illegible]
P. S.—D. B. Weaver.
Treas.—J. T. Young.

The following officers were appointed:

Warden—J. T. Odam.
Conductor—E. [illegible]
O. G.—A. Sargent.
I. G.—J. F. Shepard.
R. S. N. G.—Chas. Tallman.
L. S. N. G.—Elias Bird.
R. S. V. G.—S. [illegible]
L. S. V. G.—Wm. Laing.
R. S. S.—Jno. Staats.
L. S. S.—H. [illegible]

A STRANGE VERDICT.

The second trial of the suit of Fritz Schlitter against Mr. Edward Love, for $200, claimed to be balance of wages due on a year's contract, was before Justice Nash and a jury, Monday. The plaintiff swore he was engaged for a year, yet when the prostration of the wall paper business occurred he was thrown out of employment. The defendant claimed he made no contract with Schlitter.

By some unknown process of reasoning, the jury brought in a verdict of $35 and costs against the defendant. The suit was for the $200 wages of the balance of the year. It was either all due or not a cent due in that particular suit.

Mr. Love will appeal the case. He will also probably have Schlitter arrested for perjury in order to protect himself from other suits that other workmen, who have been laid off by dull times, may now be emboldened to institute without the slightest foundation of right and justice.

ANOTHER "NEWS" FALSEHOOD.

THE PRESS has devoted so much space of late to exposing the many falsehoods contained in the Somerset street sheet that we have actually infringed upon the space allotted to local news. About the only articles that are correct in the dilapidated news, are the ones lifted bodily from these columns, without a word of credit. Our readers are well aware of the fact that we do not practice such detestable business.

The antiquated news on Friday said: "News from Trenton states that John M. Jackson, the Plainfield firebug, is seriously ill in the State Prison Hospital. It is said that the physicians and nurses entertain fears that he will not recover."

To show that the above quotation is an utter falsehood evidently written from imagination, read the following letter received by Mrs. Jackson on Saturday from Principal Keeper John H. Patterson, of the State Prison:

"OFFICE OF THE NEW JERSEY STATE PRISON,
"TRENTON, Jan. 12, 1889.

"MRS. ESTELLA M. JACKSON—I hereby inform you that there is no truth in the reports you hear in relation to your husband. He is well and at work in the shop. You can visit him once a month, if you desire to.

"Yours Respectfully,
"JOHN H. PATTERSON,
"Principal Keeper."

Mrs. Jackson herself writes that she found her husband at work but looking very ill. She thinks he is failing, as he complains of poor health and rheumatism all the time.

CITY COUNCIL MEETING.

The City Council met in adjourned session Monday, with President Dumont in the chair. The roll call showed all the other members present, excepting Mr. Watson, whose prolonged absence from the Council Chamber was the cause of considerable comment. The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved, after which the regular order of business was taken up.

Under the heading of "presentation of petitions and communications," Messrs D. Hand, Elias Cole and others, petitioned Council for an electric light at the corner of South and Leland avenues. Referred to the Committee on Public Lights.

An application from Richard Day asking for a hack license, was received, referred and subsequently granted.

Charles Smith petitioned the Council for a saloon license at No. 4 West Front street. The matter was referred to the License Committee.

Two communications relating to an electric street railway, were upon motion of Mr. Marsh, taken from the table and referred to the Street Committee.

Claims were presented and referred as follows: C. Thorp, $25; P. Casey & Son, $8; R. J. Shaw, $7.28; Chas. H. Smith, $3.46.

Bids for furnishing 1,200 feet of new hose for the Fire Department were received from Carney Bros., Eureka Manufacturing Company, Gutta Percha Manufacturing Company, and the D. A. Woodhouse Manufacturing Company, all of which were referred to the Committee on Fire and Buildings.

The Clerk reported that $654,19 had been received from the Board of Education, and transferred to the general fund, being the Board's share of the costs for the assessment and collection of taxes.

The various committees returned as correct the claims presented during the evening, and they were referred to the Auditing Committee.

Mr. Myers from the Finance Committee said that the treasurer's bond, which was referred back for correction at the last meeting, had been handed to the City Treasurer on Tuesday last, with the request that he submit it for approval at the meeting to-night, but the request was not complied with.

NEW BUSINESS.

Under this heading, Mr. Squires introduced an ordinance, amending the general liquor license ordinance, providing for the closing of saloons and hotel bar-rooms at 11 P. M., and also fixing the license fee at $700 for hotels and saloons alike.

Mr. Erickson asked whether the framers of the new ordinance intended to vote for license in case the ordinance was adopted.

Mr. Marsh replied that he considered it nobody's business how he voted. He said the section relating to the early closing was framed at the suggestion of Chief Carey, who declared that it was impossible to clear the streets and restore quietness in less than an hour after the saloon doors were closed.

The ordinance was placed on its second reading and adopted by sections, Messrs Erickson, Gallup and Moffett voting "no." Mr. Dumont was also recorded as voting "no" on the section increasing the fees.

The ordinance was ordered engrossed and advertised, Messrs Dumont, Erickson; Gallup and Moffett voting in the negative. The Police Committee was authorized to have a board walk laid from Park avenue to the station house entrance at a cost not to exceed $18.

Chief Doane of the Fire Department, was upon resolution adopted, authorized to contract with the D. A. Woodhouse Manufacturing company, for the purchase of 1,500 feet of Gibraltar Jacket hose, at 70 cents a foot, provided Council was not asked to pay for it within three months.

The Auditing Committee made a report and the Council adjourned.

—Somerville is to have a new railroad depot. The Central Railroad company has decided to tear down the dilapidated structure which has for many years past been an eye-sore to the residents of Somerville, and erect a handsome building in its stead.

A Successful Start.

The night school for women, as announced in THE PRESS, was organized at the High School, Friday evening.

There were 26 in attendance, making the outlook unexpectedly promising. Regular sessions will be held hereafter on Mondays and Fridays.

Westfield Out-Bowls Fanwood.

On the fine alleys of the Fanwood Club, Tuesday, the Monday Nights of Westfield bowled and won another match with the Fanwoods. The attendance was large and included many ladies from this city. The score was as follows:

WARDEN—Henry M. Wyckoff.
SENTRY—Ludwig Lightfoot.

WHO MURDERED MILLER?

[From THE PRESS of Jan. 16.]

The entire day at Elizabeth Court, yesterday, was occupied with the drawing of a jury and the examining of four witnesses for the prosecution of Fred Baldwin, of Westfield, for the murder of Edward Miller.

A map of the spot where the body was found and the country around, was put in evidence, and the testimony was taken of Messrs Smith and Dallas who discovered the decomposed remains. The trial was continued today with no evidence of importance in addition to that already published in THE PRESS when given before the Coroner's jury.

It is believed by many that the accused will not be convicted, while a few believe him innocent. There is a possibility, however, that a "startling development," or two, is held in reserve, but the Hon. Fred Marsh, who is the prisoner's counsel, is not like a man who is caught unawares.

During one or two days of the early part of last week, Chief Keron's transient presence in Westfield rather agitated the suspicions of the townspeople. As nothing else wicked enough to attract the attention of the detective had transpired in Westfield, it was agreed that the prosecution was on a new lay in the Miller murder case. But the Chief was too sly to let daylight in on his movements, and suddenly left Westfield one night on the 11:53 train, never to return again.

But there were other passengers from that town on the same train, and they got off at Elizabeth, too. Just before the train left Westfield, Detective J. M. Compatible Marsh entered the waiting room with a strange man in his company. It was within a few minutes of midnight and the place was deserted except for the presence of Chief Keron. Neither Marsh nor Keron recognized one another, however. To all appearances they were entire strangers. They looked at one another as if in wonder and suspicion whether an honest man would look so fierce and be out so late. All got on the train at Westfield and off at Elizabeth, and it is rumored that Marsh's companion has since been detained in the County Jail.

The strange part of it all is, not a person is missing from Westfield. The whole town has been trying to guess or imagine who the mysterious prisoner was. The only missing inhabitant for months is Edward Miller, but there are only a very few that believe he is still living.

Knight, Loomis & Co. Suddenly Discover Unexpected Obligations.

Daniel F. Knight of East Ninth street, this city, and Edwin Loomis of Rock View avenue, North Plainfield, comprising the firm of Knight, Loomis & Co., publishers of school books at No. 107 Chambers street, New York, made an assignment Saturday without preferences. The business was established in 1875 by Potter, Ainsworth & Co., who continued to Dec. 31, 1886, when they were succeeded by Potter, Knight, Ainsworth & Co., who claimed a capital of $200,000. The latter firm dissolved Sept. 7, 1888, and the present firm was formed with J. R. VanDeventer of this city, President of the First National Bank, as a special partner, for $30,000, to Sept. 7, 1891. S. A. Potter, of Grove street, North Plainfield, the retiring partner, received $30,000 for his interest, the new firm assuming the obligations of the old firm. Two months after the formation of the firm of Knight, Loomis & Co., two attachments were issued against the firm aggregating $10,500 on notes of the firm of Potter, Knight, Ainsworth & Co. Bonds were given on the attachment, and it was claimed that the notes were given by Mr. Potter for his own benefit.

The firm said Saturday that the assignment was caused by the issue of firm paper by S. A. Potter for his individual benefit, a large amount of which had to be borne by the firm without any benefit to them. The liabilities are about $200,000, confined to a few creditors, and the assets are not definitely known yet, but consist of a large stock of books, plates and accounts.

The amount of notes issued by Mr. Potter which the firm have had to take care of is said to be about $22,000. In the trade the firm are very highly spoken of, and it is thought they will be able to adjust matters satisfactorily and speedily.

Mr. George L. Pease, Vice President of the National Shoe and Leather Bank, which is a creditor, said that the failure was caused solely by Mr. Potter, who used the late firm's notes for his own benefit. When the new firm assumed the old firm's obligations they had no knowledge of these notes, as they did not appear on the books.

The business had paid right along and there would have been no trouble but for these notes of Mr. Potter. The firm's statement made up a short time ago showed assets of $260,000 and liabilities $200,000, and the assets were all in good shape. Mr. Pease spoke very highly of the firm, which he said had the sympathy of everyone. Mr. Potter and family left this city a few months ago to reside in Philadelphia.

The New York Star of this morning gives among the list of creditors, the First National Bank of this city for $10,000. That is not so. The following from the same source, however, has more truth in it: "J. R. VanDeventer of Plainfield, N. J., who was taken in as a special partner at the time of the reorganization, contributed $30,000, and promised to do more, but an examination of the books evidently discouraged him and he declined to throw good money after bad."

—There will be two new moons this month—on the 1st and 31st. There will be no new moon in the short month of February, and so the full-fledged month of March will fall heir to two.

Residence Changes.

Mr. F. A. Church has just purchased the handsome residence property on Craig Place near Somerset street, owned by Mr. Alexander Thorn.

The Berry homestead adjoining is to be moved about fifty feet south of its present location, thus making available a number of fine sites for business purposes. Mr. Thorn will remodel the homestead and make even a more attractive home of it.

—The Lehigh Valley Railroad company is erecting a switch-tower and water tanks, at South Plainfield.

An Invaluable Traveling Companion.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Sold only in cans, full weight.

Just time enough since the Holidays to take breath and settle down to business. We have been looking about a bit to see what others engaged in the same line of business as ourselves are saying and doing.

It's funny, to say the least, to read the announcements. Here's one who thinks he has a monopoly of all the good clothing made in the world; no clothing but his is fit to wear. Here's another who thinks his method of business the only proper one; all others are "dead" wrong. A third says his clothing is 30 per cent. cheaper than any other. All sorts of inducements are offered, on paper, to attract buyers.

What are we doing? Well we find that the old method of giving an honest dollar's worth for a dollar, without bragging, to be more popular than ever, judged by the growth of our business during 1888 We say this and know it to be true: Not a real point of advantage to be obtained anywhere will be forfeited by dealing with us. Our bid for your patronage for 1889 is the same which we have made for a quarter of a century.

Honest statements about our goods; garments perfect in fit; minute attention to all details connected with the manufacture; and prices which, comparing the goods, cannot be beaten. It will pay you to watch our announcements during the present year. It will save you not a little uncertaintw and a good deal of time and money to patronize us when in need of clothes for self or children.

An Interesting Study in Noses—Big Noses and Their Characteristics [illegible]

... The Lone remarked that she was "just dying" to have her say, and the Chair recognized her. "I came out here to talk, but when the Bear is allowed such a range I think it is time a damper was put on the impudent thing, and Mr. Crab is just the one to do it. Now I move we proceed to business."

"I was about to spring the same motion on you, when my friend Loop got ahead of me," shrilly explained the Bed.

"Before this motion is put I demand the previous question. I am no [illegible], and will have you know that I lay over the floor, and in these matters am seldom beaten," excitedly said the Carpet.

This bold defiance was the signal for a general battle, and the noise of the contestants fairly filled the auction-room where the convention was being held. Finally each member had to be "knocked down" before he could be silenced. I am afraid they will never obtain their rights. What do you think?—N. Y. World.

A New Language.

Billee and Bob attend a Shakespearian play in which the leading character, a deep brained foreign tragedian, speaks in his native tongue.

Bob (in surprise)—Can't understand him. Speakin' Dutch, hain't he?

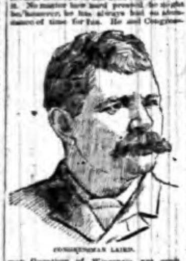
There are freaks without end in umbrella handles. One of the newest fancies is a silver-plated oak handle in which is set a miniature watch. Another novelty is a shepherd's crook formed of stiff silver links.

JOLLY JIM LAIRD.

His Personal Affliction—His Practical Joke on a Street-Car Company.

Congressman Jim Laird, of Nebraska, has turned out to be a confirmed invalid. He is a famous athlete in Washington, having a splendid physique, a buoyant, jovial nature and a ready flow of spirits no matter where he is. He is called the Cowboy Congressman, his district in Western Nebraska embracing a number of large and prosperous ranches. Hard work never made him an invalid, although he has done a good deal of it. No matter how hard pressed he might be, however, he has always had an abundance of time for fun. He and Congressman Guenther, of Wisconsin, are great cronies.



CONGRESSMAN LAIRD.

They room together, dine together, go to the theater together, ride together, play pranks together, [illegible]. It was Laird who perpetrated, two years ago, one of the most colossal jokes Washington has ever seen. The Washington street-cars, like street-cars everywhere, carry above the windows advertising placards. One of these that has stared down at the patrons of the principal line for a year past reads: "Go to Moses." The stranger in town is often puzzled by this, but natives know that Moses is the leading furniture merchant at the capital, and they have no curiosity about the legend, "Go to Moses."

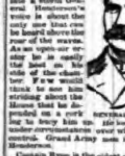
Mr. Laird, however, not knowing that there was such a person as Moses in town had always been a good deal exercised by the sign. At length he determined to have his revenge on Moses. He sent his clerk to the street-car superintendent and asked if the blank space beneath the Moses sign was taken, and if it were not, what the price for it was. He was told the space could be hired and a contract was at once made. The next day a very plain sign, in large black letters, appeared on all the cars beneath the Moses placard, reading thus: "And be d—d." The astonishment of passengers may be imagined when they read the lines:

Go to Moses
And Be D—.

For three days this fearful and wonderful injunction to the traveling public hung in its place. Then the street-car authorities caught on to the thing, and made overtures to Mr. Laird to be released from their contract. Laird is the man who resented on the floor of the House imputations against the character of his brother, who had been a land-office employe in the West. The result of the affair was that Laird knocked down Chairman Cobb, of the Public Lands Committee, and for a time disabled that gentleman.

RYAN AND HENDERSON.

The Two New Candidates for Speaker in the Next House.

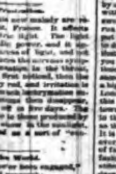


CAPTAIN RYAN.

The Speakership contest at Washington has assumed a new state of excitement owing the announced candidacy of Captain Ryan, of Kansas, and General Henderson, of Iowa. Both of these new candidates are strong men. Both are members of the Committee on Appropriations, and wield a large influence in the business of the House. Ryan is not an orator, but a thorough-going man of business. He understands the rules of the House quite as well as many a more brilliant man.

Henderson is a fine speaker, with a voice that conquers space and that could be heard by a rock. He is a Scotchman, forty-nine years old, thirty-one of them spent in this country while he was growing up on a farm and fighting for his country.

He has been a revenue collector and Assistant United States District-Attorney. He is a member of a large law firm in Dubuque. When the House gets into a storm General Henderson's voice is about the only one that can be heard above the roar of the waves. As an open-air orator he is easily the best on his side of the chamber. Few would think to see him striding about the House that he depended on a cork leg to buoy him up. He lost a leg in 1862 under circumstances over which he had no control. Grand Army men idolize General Henderson.



GENERAL HENDERSON.

Captain Ryan is the oldest of the Kansas delegation. His home is at Topeka, where he is a practicing lawyer. He is compactly built, wears a good, set figure, is not fat, and impresses the observer with his keen, alert sense of what is going on. He was born in New York, is fifty-one years old, served through the war in a Pennsylvania regiment; went to Kansas in 1866; was elected to the Forty-fifth Congress, and re-elected continuously ever since.

HOW AXES ARE MADE.

What a Reporter Saw in a Large Pittsburgh Factory.

How Steel Is Suddenly Transformed Into the Rugged Woodsman's Favorite Tool—The Welding, Tempering and Grinding Processes.

Externally there is nothing in the least attractive about a great axe manufactory, says the Pittsburgh Dispatch. The principal building is a long, low, dingy structure utterly devoid of paint or ornament. Not until the visitor gets inside and begins to take an inventory of his surroundings does he begin to be impressed by the greatness of the works. A glance into the engine-room, whence motive-power is supplied to the various departments, shows that the quantity of machinery must be enormous. The engine is a stately piece of mechanism, majestic in its movements and gigantic in its proportions. The fly-wheel is forty-two inches in the rim and twenty-eight feet in diameter, supplying continually a force equal to four hundred-horse power and [illegible].

As one enters the main workshop a noise equal to that made by a score or more of heavy freight trains falls upon the ear. This place is full of huge machines, glowing furnaces and busy workmen. But the most noticeable thing is the ceaseless clatter, which only subsides in one quarter to break out with renewed force in another. A few minutes of watching, however, shows that the confusion is apparent rather than real. The work progresses steadily, methodically and orderly. At one side of the room a man is thrusting into a furnace several flat pieces of bar iron, which a minute or two later become perfectly shaped axes, entirely complete with the exception of the blade. How is the metal so suddenly transformed? Let us see.

The glowing bars leave the furnace and are taken to a powerful and somewhat complicated machine, which performs upon them four distinct operations—shaping the metal to form the upper and lower parts of the axe, then the eye, and finally doubling the piece over so that the whole can be welded together. A workman stands by, seizing the partially fashioned pieces one after another with a pair of tongs and hammering the lower edges together. Next the iron is put in a powerful natural-gas furnace and heated to a white heat. Taken out, it goes under a tilt hammer and is welded together in a second. This done, one blow from the "drop" and the poll of the axe is completed and firmly welded. Two crews of men are doing this class of work, and each crew can make 1,200 axes per day.

When the axe leaves the drop there is some superfluous metal still adhering to the edges and forming what is technically known as a "fin." To get rid of this the axe is again heated in a furnace and then taken in hand by a sawyer, who trims the ends and edges. This operation is most curious and interesting. The operator has a glass in front of him to protect his eyes from the sparks which fly off by hundreds as the hot metal is pressed against the rapidly revolving saw. The iron part of the axe is now complete.

The steel for the blade, after being heated, is cut by machinery and shaped with a die. It is then ready for the welding department. A groove is cut in the edge of the iron, the steel for the blade inserted, and the whole firmly welded by machine hammers. Next comes the operation of tempering. The steel portion of the axe is heated by being inserted in pots of molten lead, the blade only being immersed. It is then cooled by dipping in water, and goes to the hands of the inspector. An axe is subjected to a good many rigid tests before it is pronounced perfect. The steel must be of the required temper, the weight of all axes of the same size must be uniform; all must be ground alike, and in various other ways conform to an established standard.

Consequently the different inspectors who pass judgment on the axe after each process have a highly important duty to perform. The inspector who tests the quality of the steel does so by hammering the blade and striking the edge to ascertain whether it be too brittle or not. An axe that breaks during the test is thrown aside to be made over.

Before the material of an axe is in the proper shape it has been heated five times, including the tempering process, and the axe when finished has passed through the hands of about forty workmen, each of whom has done something toward perfecting it. The English workmen, I am told, have a very different way of making axes. There one operative begins the work, puts the metal through all the intermediate processes and finishes the tool himself. Division of labor and improved machinery give the American manufacturer great advantages. Axes are exported from this country in large quantities.

The axe, with the iron and steel work finished, goes to the grinding department. Here about fifty huge grindstones, turned by steam-power, are arranged in rows along the two sides of the room. The workman runs a wooden handle through the eye of the axe, holds the tool upon the stone, and how the sparks fly! He grinds the poll on the sides, ends and edges, until each is perfectly smooth, then turns his attention to the blade, upon which he puts a fine, sharp edge. When the grinding is done the axes go to the polishing department and are applied to emery wheels until they shine all over like silver. The side of a bright, new axe would make no mean substitute for a mirror. Next the name of the manufacturer or selling agent is stamped upon the head of the axe by a sort of steel-engraving process.

A steel plate with the inscription upon it is coated with ink and from it an impression is taken on paper. The paper is then applied to the axe and the ink transferred to the latter. Acid is then put on to eat away the metal and leave the inscription in proper shape. The axes are now painted and hung on big drums, several hundred on each drum, to dry. They are next packed in wooden boxes ready for shipment. A trap door is opened in the floor and the cases are run down a slide into a freight-car waiting below to receive them. The finest axes are put up in small paper boxes, only one axe in each box, as carefully as if they were gloves or stationery, instead of simple tools for the use of the rugged woodsman. The paper boxes are then packed in wooden cases like the others.

No Leap Year in 1900.

Although the year 1900 will be divisible by four without a remainder, it will not be leap year. Twelve years must elapse before the interesting event takes place, but it was just the same in 1800 and 1700, but not in 1600, for that was a leap year, and the year 2000 will be a leap year also. Why this should be is a problem. To explain in detail would be a tiresome task, but it rests on the principle that a difference of 11 minutes per day exists between actual time and calendar time. Thus a year is computed at 365¼ days, three years being 365 days long and the fourth year 366 days. In fact the year is 365 days 5 hours and 49 minutes long or 11 minutes short of 365¼ days.

DON'T PAY YOUR TAILOR.

A Fashion That Will Be Favorably Received by the Dude Fraternity.

A Fifth avenue tailor who makes clothes for ultra-fashionables at fancy prices was talking a short time ago about the difficulty he had in collecting from a man about town, says the New York Sun.

"He is worth the money," said he; "his income is large, and he would come right down with the cash if I should sue him; but I don't dare to sue him, you see, and he knows I don't. As it is, the balance is only about $400, and what's that to the yearly profit I've made out of him these last eight years! No, sir, I can much better afford to lose that than to appear as plaintiff in a suit in court.

"Do you know, few people pay me cash. I don't expect it. No matter who orders clothes here, I expect to give six months' credit, and confidently expect to be asked to extend up to two and a half years. This is the price of having a fashionable trade. The high prices I charge don't more than make up the large sums I lose altogether, pay the interest on the capital I have out to my customers, and leave a fair profit on my business.

"Do you know that it is considered the proper thing in awfully swell circles to owe one's tailor? No? Well, I assure you it is so. The precedent was set a few years ago by one of London's howling swells, a nob with fifty thousand a year. He owed all the swell tailors of London. He let the bills run for years in some cases, and rather put himself in the way of duns. He used to drawl the story of how this tailor and that was 'boring me to death, don't you know,' among his club friends. In no time all the swells in town were doing the same thing, till now, I assure you, it takes a big capital to run a swell tailor shop in London. Of course the fashion caught on this side. There are lots of men in this town who spend piles of money a year, live in the most expensive fashion, and pay cash as they go to everybody except their tailor. It is a matter of honor with them to meet every obligation on time. But it is a matter of fashion to owe their tailor. You see the fashionable tailor has a hard course to steer. I get angry when I think that I don't dare to sue some men I know. For instance, you see that man there? Do you know him?"

"Why, isn't that—" began the visitor.

"Don't name him," interrupted the tailor. "He is known from end to end of this country, as intimately in Washington as in New York. He is an astute and successful politician, a patron of the race tracks and the owner of fine horses, the pet of clubs and society, a wealthy man and the son of a wealthy man. That man has just ordered several hundred dollars' worth of clothes from me. I don't dare either to refuse him or to sue him for his existing indebtedness. It may surprise you to know that though he has dealt here for years, he owes me a great deal more than he has paid on account, and it is over a year since he has paid a single cent."

AN ARCTIC OASIS.

Many Square Miles of Redtop, Huckleberries, [illegible] and Reindeer.

J. T. Dowell, of Pennsylvania, who for years past has been mining in Colorado and Alaska, is down from Prince William's Sound, Alaska, where he has been for many months past. He came on the steamer South Coast, and brought seventy-five tons of bituminous lignite coal with him from a mine which he has opened on Cook's Inlet.

Dowell and eight companions have been prospecting about Cook's Inlet ever since they first went north. He said to a reporter for the San Francisco Examiner:

"On the west side of Kenai Peninsula, and on the east side of Cook's Inlet, is a strip of country more than one hundred miles long and fifty miles wide that is a sight to see. For five months in the year it is covered with a luxuriant redtop that adds to the beauty of the frowning mountains beyond.

"It is to all appearances as fine agricultural land as I ever saw, and looks like a great prairie basin. There are thousands of acres of this redtop. I brought some of it down with me, and all who have seen it speak of it with wonder.

"On this peninsula, too, are large areas of hundreds of acres each of huckleberries, cranberries and red and black currants. The berries are finer by far than I ever saw anywhere else. The cranberry marshes of Michigan and the blueberries of the East are nothing either in quality or quantity to these. They are larger, plumper, and sweeter.

"The peninsula would make a lordly cattle range. The stock could live on grass for five months, and on the redtop hay for the rest of the year.

"It is also a good mineral region. We found plenty of gold and silver indications, enough to show us it was a rich country, but we were looking for coal, and consequently paid little attention to other mineral.

"I know the Alaska Commercial Company and the cannery men talking down that country, but I have had some experience in the Leadville carbonate mines, and I must say I think Alaska is the greatest mineral region there is. I think the Alaska company and the cannerymen don't want outsiders to go in. They want to hold the country for themselves."

Story of a Crushed Bustle.

The passengers in a Tenth-street car the other day were convulsed with laughter at the pointed allusion made by a corpulent passenger to the enormous bustle of a lady rider. This passenger, says the Philadelphia [illegible], was a market woman of some three hundred pounds weight, who boarded the car at Columbia avenue. The seats on the side were comfortably filled with men diligently reading their newspapers, and a few cold-faced women, who tried to stare the new-comer out of countenance. The other side of the car was completely filled by five young ladies, conspicuous among them being a slender beauty with a wealth of bustle spread out upon the seat. The market woman sought to crush her with a look of withering scorn, but with indifferent success. Then she adopted a plan of warfare that ended the struggle most effectively in the defeat of the bustle and the consternation of the lady passengers. Suddenly planting her three hundred pounds on the mammoth bustle of the slender beauty the market woman exclaimed, in a fertile brogue: "Move a hump, yez dudine; if you had been born wid [illegible]" The beauty collapsed, the men laughed loud and long, the ladies stopped the car and retreated hugging their bustles, while the victorious market-woman exchanged smiles with the conductor and murmured a few words about the decline in "dudines" and bustle-wearing femininity.

The Supreme Court Bible.

The Supreme Court Bible is a small, black, velvet-covered octavo. It has been used in the administration of every oath since 1800. Every Chief Justice and every Associate Justice of the United States has held this little sacred tome in taking oath of office. Many thousands of lawyers have held it, and to write the names of the men who have touched its covers would be to name the men who have made the bench and bar of the United States illustrious. It was printed in London in 1799, and is to-day but little the worse for wear.

BULL AND PYTHON.

A Remarkable Contest Between a Monster Snake and a Wild Bull.

Last Sunday week, says the South Africa Witness, one of the most remarkable scenes on record is reported as having been witnessed in the vicinity of Table Mountain. A troop of cattle, consisting of twelve cows and a patriarchal old bull, were grazing on one of the plateau-like spurs of the mountain, which is surrounded on three sides by precipitous ravines, and on the fourth side, that nearest the mountain, by dense bush. Some natives higher up the mountain were attracted by the sudden bellowing of the cattle, and saw two enormous pythons coming out of the bush and making for the cattle, which huddled themselves up in a compact group with the bull at its head. As the pythons drew near the animals gradually backed till they stood on a small space that jutted out over a tremendous precipice.

At this stage a sudden rush was made, but only one heifer succeeded in escaping. The other cattle, bellowing most piteously, gradually backed, and one by one fell over the precipice, till finally the bull only was left. He suddenly charged on the big python, transfixing the reptile on his horns, but the second snake seized the bull in its folds, and, having its tail around a huge bowlder, commenced to crush the bull, which, moaning piteously, struggled frantically to escape. The tail of the python lost its hold of the rock, but the larger snake, which had slipped off the horn, lapping its tail around a smaller bowlder opposite the one the other snake had just released, seized the bull and compressed the animal in its scaly folds. The other python succeeded in regaining its former position, and the bull was literally suspended in mid-air by the snakes. The whole scene looked like some ghastly triumphal march. The snakes were evidently getting the best of the poor brute, which was bleeding profusely, when, by a sudden effort his struggles forced both reptiles to lose their hold of the rocks, and the whole three were hurled into the ravine beneath.

The cattle were found on the first ledge of the precipice, all being dead, but the bull and the pythons had bounded from ledge to ledge, and were found four hundred feet below the scene of the fight. The bull was merely a mangled mass, and the snakes were greatly mutilated, the larger one having the vertebrae broken in nine places. The pythons, which were of the rock species, male and female, measured respectively, 30 feet 3 inches and 25 feet 9½ inches.

TRANSPORTING BURDENS.

Different Modes in Which Human Beings Carry Heavy Loads.

At the last meeting of the Anthropological Society, of Washington, says Science, Prof. Mason read a paper in which he described some of the more common ways in which man has made himself a beast of burden. The brief abstract given here presents some of the more salient parts of the paper.

In his prefatory remarks, Prof. Mason explained that this was a subject that had awakened his deepest interest, and that the paper he presented was but an introduction to other researches, by means of which he proposed to fully investigate and demonstrate the growth of commerce as carried on through the agency of the human body. That the aboriginal inhabitants performed great feats in the way of transporting materials is shown by the existence of raw copper on the shores of Lake Superior, and manufactured copper implements in the remains of the mound and cave dwellings in the southern part of the country. The same thing is true of the presence of wrought jade, which is found in China and in the Swiss lake-dwellings. Men and women were the first beasts of burden, and it is undoubtedly true that all aboriginal carrying was done on their heads and backs.

Even the improved state of civilized society has not extinguished all traces of this, for human carriers are still numerous. Hod-carriers have but recently, and indeed but partially, been superseded by elevating machines. The great progress of the times has been such, contended Prof. Mason, that no one walks nowadays unless it is a preferred exercise; horses, steam and electricity lend their aid to whirl people to their destinations. It is considered vulgar to carry a parcel; the humblest servant girl, buying a few cents' worth, may have her purchase taken home in a special delivery-wagon covered with forty coats of lacquer. It has been calculated that two million tons are constantly worn by the human race in the way of dress and ornament.

The paper then enumerated the various methods by which the various beasts of burden perform their carrying-tasks; first of all, the hand—the right hand. In speaking of this, Prof. Mason said that he has examined a great number of savage implements designed to be carried in the hand, and that the proportion of those shaped for use by the left hand was not greater than one to fifty. In no case did he find a left-hand female implement. Then both hands are used, after which the fingers come into play. As an illustration of the use of the fingers in carrying, Prof. Mason mentioned the summer-resort waiter, who bears his tray aloft on three fingers. The baldric is next in order, slung over the shoulder by a strap, and hanging on the hip. In this way hunters carry game, and travelers carry small satchels. Then, still progressing, goods to be carried are hung to a belt. Hanging things on the arm may be called the retail method of carrying, and is used by farm-hands, servants, porters; in fact a large proportion of the people we meet in any place. While a civilized being will twist his form so as to get the load that is hung on his arm supported by his back, a savage will never be found doing so. Next comes the hanging over the shoulder, of which a good example is the universal sack of the negro vagabond, containing unclaimed property and other people's chickens. This method is used by grain-porters and hod-carriers.

The Oriental porters carry almost exclusively on their shoulders. A cooly's average load is a hundred pounds, with which he can make thirty miles a day. It is estimated that there are a million tons of material moved by coolies in China each day. Then both shoulders come into use, the load being placed round the neck; after which an easy progression is to the back, which is the natural carrying-place of the burden. The soldier, carrying his knapsack and rations, is a good example. Then loads are carried on the heads, a process called "toting." The negro is a domestic example, and dairy-maids are reputed to carry their milk-pails on their heads, and there many other illustrations of this mode of transportation. Certain tribes of Indians wear straw rings on their heads to aid in bearing and balancing these great loads. Pockets, remarked Prof. Mason, are scarcely worth mentioning as a civilized means of transportation, although the flowing robes of a Chinaman are capable of concealing at least half a bushel of playing-cards—a capacity that deserves passing notice.

The carrying-power given by these various modes is augmented by means of combinations of men, in illustration of which the vast works in Egypt and other Eastern countries were cited. Men also carry goods by traction; that is, by drawing over the ground. First the arm alone is used, then a line is fastened to the object and to the person. It is held in the hand over the shoulder, or wound over the waist or over a pole. The hunter drawing home his game is a primitive example of this means of carrying. Throwing is sometimes resorted to as a mode of transportation, of which the negro method of handling watermelons by tossing them from hand to hand is a fair example. Dirt and excavated material were at first carried in sacks, which have been superseded by shovels. The great necessities and the differentiating processes of civilization for rapid and safe transportation give rise to the professional carriers, among whom may be mentioned carriers, messengers, mail-men and peddlers.

The Reason Why.

As they came from their summer's outing
And trotted from stage to car,
He bitterly groaned at the sachels,
Whose weight was heavier far
Than ever before in their travels.
Unpacking them later, he swore:
"Great skeets! Here's that rock of ages—
The soap I fired out of the door."

Social Amenities.

"Why does my new house resemble your last 'first night audience?'" said Magnum to his daughter's caller, young Litepiaye, wishing to be pleasantly facetious.

Then he was surprised to find that his mirth was not contagious when he gave the answer:

"Because both were pronounced so well [illegible]."

Corporation Notice.

Notice is hereby given that the following ordinance has been introduced before the Common Council, read the second time, and ordered engrossed preparatory to the third reading, and that it is the intention of the Council to adopt the same.

OLIVER B. LEONARD, City Clerk.
Plainfield, N. J., January 7, 1889.

AN ORDINANCE

To amend an ordinance entitled "An ordinance to license Inns and Taverns and to regulate and prohibit the sale of spirituous and fermented liquors," approved February 21, 1873; readopted March 6, 1873, notwithstanding the objections of the Mayor, amended by ordinances approved June 3, 1879; December 7, 1881; December 10, 1883; January 29, 1883; November 10, 1884; December 21, 1887; February 7, 1888.

The Inhabitants of the City of Plainfield, by their Common Council, do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. That no woman, and no man who from illiteracy is unable to read and write the English language, shall be deemed competent to sign any of the certificates required by the above entitled ordinance, or any part thereof, [illegible] when under said ordinance such owner's signature is made necessary, nor shall any woman be deemed competent to receive a license under said ordinance.

THE LAST STRAW.

I didn't feel so very old
  When nurse came all a-flurry,
An' handed me, to kiss 'n hold,
  A fuzzy, squallin' critter.
The first time one's a daddy, he
  Somehow don't stop to figger;
He feels so awkward's he can be,
  An' stouter, better, bigger—
    But not so very old.

I didn't feel so very old
  When first my teeth went thumpin',
Nor when the dentist took a-hold
  An' never left a stump in.
False ones are clumsy, but they'll pass;
  Just do a little grinnin'
Standin' before the lookin' glass
  And you'll appear quite winnin'—
    An' not so very old.

I didn't feel so very old
  When first I had a symptom
Of rheumatiz each spell o' cold,
  Of course, I knew I'd roped some,
But in these days folks live so fast,
  Twixt gold and pleasure huntin',
Their youthful spryness doesn't last,
  An' lots of folks do gruntin'
    Who're not so very old.

But now I'm feelin' kind o' old—
  Perhaps I hadn't oughter,
But in this letter I am told,
  "Your daughter's got a daughter."]
Oh, my! how swiftly, one by one,
  The years speak round behind us;
We only think how fast they run,
  When Life and Death remind us—
    Yes, yes, I'm gettin' old.

JAPAN'S MIGHTY RULER.

First Disclosure of the Private Life of the Mikado.

His Descent Traced in a Direct Line from the Gods—His Daily Walk and Conversation—Something About the Empress.

Mr. Frank G. Carpenter, who is now sojourning in Japan, has obtained a privilege never before granted to any one, namely, an interview with the Court Chamberlain concerning the home life of the Mikado. "Twenty-five years ago," he says, in a letter to the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, "it would have been death to the Chamberlain and imprisonment to me. At that time it was treason to name aloud the personal name of the Mikado. In writing it, it was against the law to pen it in full, and one of the strokes or letters had to be left out. No one except the wives of the Emperor and his highest ministers ever saw his face. His divine features were never unveiled to the public gaze. Kept in the seclusion of his palace at Kiota, he was revered as a god by the people, and when he went abroad in the city he rode in a closely-curtained car drawn by bullocks. His sacred feet never touched the earth, and when he died it was supposed that he would enter the company of the gods. He was at that time the Emperor of Japan, but he was only a nominal Emperor. The Commander-in-Chief of the Imperial army, under the title of the Shogun, administered his affairs, and these commanders-in-chief, who succeeded one another by hereditary descent, had for generations usurped the real authority of the Government, while they thus kept the Mikado in a sort of glass case and held him up as a spiritual rather than a temporal ruler. They managed his treasury, made the laws, governed the country and ate up the taxes.

This state of things went on for hundreds of years. A feudal system grew up under it. The lords of this system became enervated by luxury, and the chief officers under them, about twenty years ago, organized a revolution to give back to the Mikado his real power. The present Emperor was then upon his throne. He was fifteen years old. The revolution was successful. The Shogun was overthrown and the Emperor was taken by the revolutionists to Tokio and declared Emperor in fact. This was the beginning of the progressive movement in Japan. The young Mikado came out of his curtained seclusion, and before the court he promised that changes should be made in the Empire; that a deliberative assembly should be formed, and that all measures should be decided by public opinion. He promised that impartiality and justice should be adopted as a basis of action, and that intellect and learning should be sought for throughout the world in order to establish the foundation of the empire. Since then many of the old customs have been thrown away. Railroads, telegraphs and schools have been established. Intercourse with other nations has been kept up, and the Mikado rules the new Japan. If I am correctly informed, he is deeply interested in its progress, and he looks forward anxiously toward the opening of the Parliament, which takes place in 1890.

The Mikado has the bluest blood of any ruler on the face of the earth. The present dynasty of Japan runs back to the gods and his Imperial Majesty is the one hundred and twenty-first Emperor of Japan. The Japanese have their history and their mythology, and the present Emperor comes from Jimmu Tenno, who was the first Mikado and ruled Japan six hundred and sixty years before Christ was born. This man was a descendant of the sun goddess and Mutsuhito; the present Emperor traces his descent directly from him. The present Emperor was born at Kiota, November 3, 1852. He was declared heir apparent to the throne when he was eight years old, and he succeeded on the death of his father in 1867. He was crowned in 1868 and was married at the age of seventeen in 1869.

His Imperial Majesty is now thirty-eight years old. Let me tell you how he looks. He is taller than the average Japanese, and his appearance is not half as imposing now as when he wore the rich Japanese costumes and sat cross-legged on his mats of state. He has a dark-brown cafe-au-lait complexion, and his eyes, which look through almond slits, are of a brilliant black. His hair is very thick and he parts it in European style. It is combed well up from a good forehead and his Majesty's eyebrows have the decided arch which is indicative of Japanese beauty. His nose is large and [illegible]ness. It has the wide nostrils of the Japanese, and his Majesty's lips are thick. He is of medium size, but is inclined to stoop, which I imagine may come from the earlier part of his life having been spent in sitting upon the floor. He wears a moustache and chin whiskers, and these, like most of his race, are thin. The Court Chamberlain tells me that for the past sixteen years he has worn nothing but European clothes, and he has to a large extent adopted European ways. His dress is that of a general of the army, and he takes great pride in military matters. He reviews his troops several times a year, and is thoroughly up in the organization of his armies. When he goes out to ride he is always accompanied by his Imperial Guards, and he has lately purchased several new State carriages which are the wonder of Tokio.

The Emperor of Japan is rich. He is allowed $2,500,000 a year for his Household Department, and his private fortune is large and increasing. The Household Department is as much a part of the Japanese Government as is our Navy or War Department a part of the United States Government. It has to do with all matters relating to the Imperial palace and to the Mikado. It was at the royal household department that I held my interview with the Court Chamberlain. We sat for two hours together and chatted of the Emperor's habits. "His Majesty," said he, "is a very studious man. He rises early and breakfasts at seven or eight o'clock. He uses the knife and fork in eating when he takes foreign food, and he adopts the chop-sticks at his Japanese dinners. He eats at a table and sits upon chairs. He varies his meals, sometimes taking foreign food and sometimes Japanese. He is fond of meats, and has a well-trained Japanese cook to serve them for him. After breakfast is over he goes to his study, and here at nine o'clock he receives such Ministers of State as have matters to report to him. His audiences with them often last till twelve o'clock. At this hour he returns to his own room and takes his lunch. This usually consists of fish, meats, bread and wines. He is a good eater and likes good wine.

"After lunch his Majesty spends some time in reading the newspapers and books. All of the leading Japanese newspapers come to his palace and he watches closely the current of public opinion. Many of the newspapers are marked, and in the case of the foreign papers of Japan the most prominent articles are translated for him. Articles in New York, London and Paris papers, which have a bearing upon Japan, are also translated and handed to him to read, and he is especially fond of the illustrated foreign papers. He thus keeps posted on what is going on the world over. After reading he takes his exercise, and his dinner comes in the evening. Sometimes the Empress dines with him, and sometimes the little Prince, who is the heir to the throne, has a seat at the table. Both have, however, their separate establishments. The dinner is served in the table d'hote style, and with all the European accompaniments."

"What are the Emperor's favorite exercises?" I asked.

"He is especially fond of horseback riding," replied the chamberlain. "He has about three hundred horses in the royal mews, and he sits a horse well. He has a big race-track in the grounds of the new palace, and he is much interested in horse-breeding as well as in horse-racing. He attends the races in Tokio and in Yokohama, and he is very fond of watching his nobles play polo. This game is often played inside of the palace grounds, and his Majesty often hunts deer and wild pigs on his royal preserves. He shoots well, but, as a rule, he prefers to watch the others hunt."

"Does he give many receptions?" I asked.

"Not many," was the reply. "He has a big reception on New Year's, at which the diplomats and the Japanese officials are present. Then on the 3d of February there is a reception in commemoration of the foundation of the empire. The 3d of November is the Emperor's birthday, and the imperial garden party is given in the spring and in the fall. At these receptions the guests appear as a rule in European dress and the Emperor is saluted with a bow. The Emperor has his interpreters with him at his receptions. He speaks no language but the Japanese, and he has given up the study of German, which he began some time ago. His duties of state were so great that he had not time for it, and he regrets his lack in this regard when foreign Princes come to Japan."

The Empress is just about as old as her husband. She is a full head shorter than the average American woman, has a slender figure, very straight and very dignified. She appreciates her position and walks like an Empress. It is now more than a year since she adopted foreign clothes, and her jet-black hair is combed in foreign style and a foreign waterfall sits upon her shapely crown. She has a fine complexion, much lighter than the ordinary Japanese, and she has that drooping of the lower lip which is a mark of Japanese beauty. The only pictures that are now procurable of her are those in old court dress, but these give a fair idea of her features, and her face is decidedly aristocratic. "She does not," says the Court Chamberlain, "paint her lower lip nor black her teeth, as was the former custom of Japanese wives, and she wears now a straight bang of hair across her forehead." At present I am told that the Empress buys her clothes, as far as possible, in Japan. She is a thorough little Japanese Queen, and she is anxious to do every thing to advance her own people.

"She is," in the words of the Court Chamberlain, "especially interested in Japanese women, and she tries to promote their advancement in every way. She is very charitable, and she is especially the patron of the Red Cross Society and of the Tokio Charity Hospital. At the eruption of Bandaisan she sent money at once to relieve the sufferers from the volcano, and she is especially interested in the education of Japanese women. There is a female school attended by the girls of the nobles, which is known as the Empress' school. She watches very closely over this, and one of the pictures upon its walls consists of some poetry written by her. The Empress of Japan is a fine Chinese scholar, and she is one of the best poets in the Empire. Many of her poems have been set to music, and have been used as national songs, and quite a number of them have been published in the Japanese newspapers."

"Tell me something of the daily life of the Empress," said I.

"She has," replied the Court Chamberlain, "an establishment of her own, and it is quite a large one. She has her maids of honor, her private secretaries and the ladies of the court to deal with. Her morning is occupied by the reading and writing of letters. She attends to the supervision of her various charities through others chiefly and in the afternoon she devotes herself to social duties. She receives at this time the wives of the Ministers and the Princesses who may call upon her, and if they come at the proper time these sometimes take tea with her. She sometimes invites these ladies to meetings to discuss matters relating to the charity hospital, and she has a grand marshal and a chamberlain. She is, you know, the first Empress of the new order of things, even as the Emperor is the first Emperor. She wears but little jewelry, though she has some diamond rings and bracelets. She is a fine horseback rider, and often takes a turn on one of the horses of the imperial stables. She wears a European riding habit and sits her horse well."

Not Very Complimentary.

A promising young physician of Troy, N. Y., relates a story at his own expense. He is small in stature, but large in attainments, and recognized as one of the rising practitioners of the city. The other night a lady residing near his office who has heart trouble was suddenly taken ill and a servant was dispatched for her regular physician, who lived at some distance. Fearing he might not be in another servant was sent to the young doctor's office, and hastened with him to her mistress. Great was the surprise of the man of medicine, however, when Katy, casting a disdainful glance at him, turned to her mistress and in excited tones remarked: "Yer pardon, mum, but this (pointing to the doctor) was the only thing I could find."

JUDGE EDMUNDS.

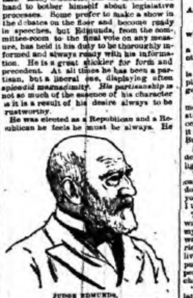
Political Prophets Predicting That He Will Have a Place in Harrison's Cabinet.

[Special Washington Correspondence.]

Wise guessers say that Judge Edmunds is going to be the next Secretary of State. It certainly will be interesting to see this remarkable man in a new field of intellectual labor. He has been the supreme power of the Senate for many years. In the committee-room, on the floor, in the caucus, he has been the dominant mind of his party in that body. On all party questions, upon all issues of the hour, his brain has been the final court of appeal. It has been supposed that he would not desire to leave the Senate for a Cabinet position, but it is now said that his ambition has been fully satisfied, and that he is willing to enter upon a new field of labor.

Edmunds made his fame as a Senator by his conscientious and strict devotion to duty. He has been attentive to every detail of business in the Senate from first to last. Many a Senator has too much else on hand to bother himself about legislative processes. Some prefer to make a show in the debates on the floor and become ready in speeches, but Edmunds, from the committee-room to the final vote on any measure, has held it his duty to be thoroughly informed and always ready with his information. He is a great stickler for form and precedent. At all times he has been a partisan, but a liberal one, displaying often splendid magnanimity. His partisanship is not so much of the essence of his character as it is a result of his desire always to be trustworthy.

He was elected as a Republican and a Republican he feels he must be always. He did not go into the Senate until after the war and made his record as a great Senator during General Grant's two terms of administration; so there is about him none of the glamour of the war period, and his character stands forth plainly as the result of hard work, great ability and spotless honesty. Even the Presidency has not allured him out of his intellectual rut. He has not even constructively turned his hand over to get that honor. He would not make speeches for Mr. Blaine, which may have been a matter of convictions. But all the same, it illustrates the character of the man. He was born on a cobble-stone farm up in New Hampshire and has made his way in life almost single-handed.



JUDGE EDMUNDS.

Without ever having been a judge he possesses more than any other man in public life the judicial quality and temperament. Now and then he is dictatorial, but he is always right, as his colleagues are free to admit. As a Chief Justice of the Supreme Court he would have made a grand figure in history. Socially, he is delightful. Perhaps he is too fond of the convivial anecdote, but at any rate he knows when to stop, and his brain is always clear and strong. To the Southern Senators he is especially charming, for they care more for companionship than philosophy, and in Edmunds they get both. As Secretary of State he would make a strong, safe counsellor in the Cabinet, a thorough-going, exacting head of the department, a wise, long-sighted and fearless diplomat.

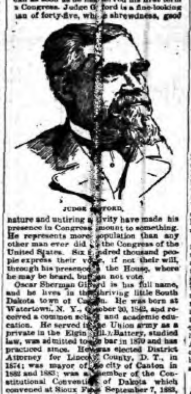
The fisheries question, it is safe to say, would be settled amicably and completely and to our advantage before the expiration of General Harrison's administration.

NOAH.

JUDGE GIFFORD.

Dakota's Able Representative in the National Congress.

Dakota has a better prospect of admission this winter than she has ever had. If credit for this could be given to any one man more than another it is due to Judge Gifford, her delegate in Congress. Gifford is the first man in ten years who could be elected to a second term. It is a peculiarity of Dakota politics that her people scalp a man as soon as he has served his first term in Congress. Judge Gifford is a fine-looking man of forty-five, whose shrewdness, good nature and untiring activity have made his presence in Congress amount to something. He represents more population than any other man ever did in the Congress of the United States. Six hundred thousand people express their voice, if not their will, through his presence in the House, where he may be heard, but can not vote.



JUDGE GIFFORD.

Oscar Sherman Gifford is his full name, and he lives in the thriving little South Dakota town of Canton. He was born at Watertown, N. Y., October 20, 1842, and received a common school and academic education. He served in the Union army as a private in the Elgin (Ill.) Battery, studied law, was admitted to the bar in 1870 and has practiced since. He was elected District Attorney for Lincoln County, D. T., in 1874; was mayor of the city of Canton in 1882 and 1883; was a member of the Constitutional Convention of Dakota which convened at Sioux Falls September 7, 1883, and was elected to the Forty-ninth Congress and re-elected to the Fiftieth. He will not sit in the Fifty-first Congress, but if he so desires will probably be elected to the Senate as one of the two new Senators from the new State.

SENATOR MORRILL.

Interesting Sketch of the Oldest Man Now in Congress—He Is Also Said to Be the Handsomest Man in the Senate.

Promptly at noon every day there emerges from the door of the Senate Committee on Finance a spare, tall, pale old gentleman, usually with a bundle of papers in his hand. Tall as he is, he must have been taller twenty years ago, for he has a very decided stoop in his shoulders. He is always dressed in the neatest and blackest of broadcloth, and there is an air about him of the old school. This is Senator Morrill, of Vermont, the oldest man in Congress—born at Strafford, Vt., April 14, 1810. He is the "Father" of the Senate, as Judge Kelley is the "Father" of the House. And as his famous brother, Lot Morrill, was the father of the war tariff, so will he in all probability, be the father of the tariff measure likely to pass Congress this year.

His curling, silver locks and snowy side-whiskers give him a very decided resemblance to Charles Sumner. His features are clean-cut and classical. Old as he is, Mr. Morrill is undoubtedly the handsomest man in the Senate. He was a prosperous country merchant for many years, but has been in Congress for three decades. Twelve years he sat in the House, and in 1867 he succeeded the late Judge Poland in the Senate. He sits in the front row on the Republican side of the chamber and is a constant and attentive listener to every thing that is going on. His life study has been the tariff, and he always commands the closest attention whenever he speaks upon that topic.

SENATOR MORRILL.

He has made few speeches upon other subjects. When John Sherman left the Senate in 1877 to take the Treasury portfolio in Hayes' Cabinet, Mr. Morrill succeeded him as chairman of the Committee on Finance, a committee corresponding in importance with that on Ways and Means in the House of Representatives.

There is no man in public life to-day who has a more wonderful memory for facts and figures, faces and names than Senator Morrill. Most of his speeches upon finance and the tariff are carefully prepared, and he generally reads them from the manuscript. He lives in Strafford, where he was born.

WHAT A FAKIR IS.

An Old Veteran of the Fraternity Reveals the Secrets of His Trade.

"It is pretty hard to tell sometimes just what a fakir is."

So said an old veteran of the fraternity to a New York Evening World reporter the other day.

"Some people seem to think that a fakir is half a crook, and sometimes he is; his plan of operation being to rob people so ingeniously that they like it.

"But the whole-souled, high-bred gentlemen of our profession are merely a fly lot of street merchants who buy an article for ten cents and sell it for one dollar. Of course, it is a kind of robbery. Nobody denies that. But we are all robbers."

Having delivered himself of this elaborate definition of his associates the old-timer lighted a new cigar and proceeded:

"I remember a funny experience which came under my observation when I was doing the West some years ago. I was young in the business then, but I had a snap I used to work the cities with.

The hotel I was stopping at, in Chicago was filled with fair boarders, and next to my room was a young fellow who used to walk around on crutches. He always carried a sad face with him and made a good living by seating himself in a conspicuous public place with a stock of cheap lead pencils which he sold to sympathetic purchasers.

"One day I returned to the hotel a little later than usual, and, going to my room, heard a fearful racket coming from the next apartment. I thought the house was coming down, but, upon investigation, found the lame fakir doing a song and dance with as much gusto and ease as a professional minstrel man. He explained to me that he was only straightening out his leg.

"Do you know it was once a custom with the candy-butchering department of a road circus to lay up all the three-cent pieces they could get hold of?" said the fakir once more. "Well, it was, my boy, and I'll tell you: whenever a three-cent piece would go for a dime, the butchers always made a seven cold cents out of the deal.

"Farmers who came to the country town to see the circus, and always bought a glass of rosy red lemonade, were the people taken in by this racket. While I don't believe in any such methods as these, I am not averse to giving the people the razzle-dazzle for an enormous profit. Got something now that I sell to merchants. Cost me thirty-eight cents. Get one dollar for it every time. Robbery, ain't it?"

THE CONQUEROR CONQUERED.

In southern archipelagoes he'd fought the bloody cannibal;
He'd skinned and tanned the crocodile and found him very tanable;
Not a word of fear he'd uttered, not a word and not a syllable,
When he killed the Bengal tiger, and he found him very killable.

He claimed his strength was very great, for bears and lions suitable;
He used to boot the grizzly bear, and found him very bootable;
He claimed to kill the monstrous snakes that he was very capable,
No boa-constrictor could escape, for he was unescapable.

In fighting hippopotami, he said he was invincible,
No jaguar could make him wince, because he wasn't winceable,
He made the ramping elephant no longer recognizable,
And pulverized the roaring bull, and found him
  pulverizable.

Just then his wife came in and said: "I'd think it quite commendable
If you'd come and tend the baby; and you'll find him very tendable."
The way she took him by the ear will make this poem readable;
She pulled him out and led him home, and found him very leadable.

A GOOD STORY.

Extraordinary Exploits of a Sailor Faithfully Recounted.

A Man-Fish Who Could Swim at Sea Three Days at a Time with Ease and Whom Sharks Wouldn't Bite.

At one o'clock in the afternoon of June 21, 1859, I was in the crow's nest or lookout on board the New England whaler Yankee Land, and we were bearing up for Valparaiso from the Juan Fernandez Islands when I caught sight of a floating human body on the lee bow, and half a mile away. We had only a light breeze and the sea was scarcely disturbed, and from my perch aloft I could see even the fish as they played about us.

I had scarcely hailed the deck when the floater raised his head, kicked his feet under the surface, and after waving his arm as a signal, he began swimming down to us. The sight of a man out at sea, provided with nothing whatever to float him, was queer enough, but there was something much more queer in store for us. I have seen the natives of almost every country in the water, but I never saw any thing like the speed this floater made as he came down to us. He just skimmed through the water like a yawl with her sail set to a stiff breeze. All the men mustered forward to get sight of him, and as he came alongside he checked his way, took a long survey of our craft, and coolly called out:

"What ship is that?"

"The American whaler, Yankee Land," answered the mate.

"Want any hands?"

"Yes, we'll ship you," replied the captain.

"Very well, sir—I'll come aboard."

They threw him a rope and he soon stood on deck, the only unconcerned person on the ship. He asked for a chew of tobacco, wrung the water out of his clothes and when the cook brought him some grub he did not appear over hungry. He refused dry clothes, saying that he felt better when damp, and when he had finished eating, he explained:

"My name is Tom Finch. I quit the English brig Saxon two days ago. I can steer a boat or fasten to a whale with the best of you. Give me a lay and let me turn to."

"You quit the Saxon two days ago?" queried the Captain.

"Yes, sir."

"Where was she?"

"A matter of fifty miles to the northwest, sir."

"At sea?"

"Yes, sir."

"How did you quit?"

"Said good-bye to my watch and jumped overboard, and have been floating ever since."

There wasn't a man in the ship who believed his story. Indeed, what intelligent man would believe it! And yet it was gospel truth, as we discovered when we reached Valparaiso. The Saxon was there, and half a dozen of her crew had seen him go overboard, as stated.

A man-fish had come aboard of us. There never was a mermaid, but he certainly was a merman. He was next to amphibious. He was with us for sixteen months, and during that time was the wonder of our crew and of every other crew we met. He was a stalwart, good-looking chap of thirty-five, but his interior may have been built on the fish principle. He swam as swiftly as some kinds of fish, and that without seeming to tire him. He could not be drowned, and no shark would bite him. I said he was a queer man. The reader probably agrees with me. I give my word and honor that every statement I shall make is true, and can be proved true.

Our carpenter was laid up with a broken leg, and when Finch announced that he could use tools he became carpenter temporarily. After we left Valparaiso, no longer doubting the story of his two days' float, he gave us a marvelous exhibition of his skill as a swimmer. In running back to the south we struck the fag end of a cyclone and got a terrible sea. Our big ship was pitched about like a pea, and the waves walled-up on us now and then until their crests seemed to tower fifty feet above the rail. Every thing was lashed and double lashed, and the cook could not make us even a cup of coffee for twenty hours. While we were lying to and hanging on for life Finch stripped to his shirt and pants and went overboard for a lark. The best man among us would have been drowned in five minutes. He was in the water two hours, and when he came out he did not puff as heavily as a man who had run across the street. A hundred times in those two hours we thought he was lost, but he had no more fear for himself than as if he was on dry land. In the sixteen months I saw him go overboard as many as fifty times, in all sorts of weather and by day and by night, and yet he never met with an accident.

I stated that no shark would bite him. He proved this fact a thousand times over. Harbor sharks, for reasons best known to themselves, will sometimes pass a swimmer by, but they are small fry compared to the big hammer-heads and white sharks of mid-ocean. The true man-eater is not a shore fish, except in tropical waters. When a whaler is engaged in cutting in and trying out, and is drifting off before the wind, your real man-eater appears. I have seen them twenty-five feet long, barnacled up and moss-grown like ancient whales, and evidently a hundred years old. These are the demons of the deep, who will rush upon a raft and upset it or tear it to pieces, and who seem to feel no pain from the prick of a lance. We got a whale to the southwest of Concepcion, a hundred miles off shore, and Finch gave us his first exhibition. We had an eighty-barrel fish lashed head and tail to our starboard side, and were just hooking on to the first blanket-piece to hoist away, when three or four monster sharks appeared. The one who came up astern was of such size that the men called out in amazement. He lay with his dorsal fin above water, and we could see every inch of him. It was enough to give you a chill to note his wicked eyes and his awful mouth.

When Finch saw this shark he said he would drive him away. The Captain ordered him to go about his business, not wishing to lose a man, but Finch waited until the officers were off the r guard, and then went overboard off the lee bow with a great splash. There was a wild cry from the crew and a rush with ropes, but Tom looked up and laughed and swam around the stern of the ship. The big man-eater had backed off about twenty feet at the splash, but two others, almost as large, had come up on the quarter, and there lay three of the wickedest fish in the Atlantic Ocean. Every body shouted and gestured, and half a dozen ropes' ends were thrown to Tom, but he would not mind us. He suddenly sank below the surface and made a bee line for the big fish, and to my surprise, the old fellow darted aside to escape the collision.

It is truth to the letter that Tom Finch drove every one of those monsters away from the ship, and for an hour he paddled about in the water and was unharmed. In the course of a couple of hours the big shark returned. A piece of blubber was tied up in an old coat and dropped overboard, and he made a dash of a hundred feet and bolted it down like a flash. He then took up his station off our quarter, and not over thirty feet away, and the sailor mounted the rail and made a long leap right at him. The shark went off like a streak, and up saw him no more.

Once when we were in the harbor of Honolulu, Tom gave a public exhibition, and at least 5,000 people saw him swim about among the sharks just outside the surf. Several dogs were thrown to them to be devoured, and gallons of blood were poured on the water to excite them, but never a one came within five feet of the sailor. He had no peculiar odor about him that we could detect, and why the sharks feared him was as much a puzzle to himself as to others.

Among Tom's adventures was his escape from the Greek pirates of the Ægean Sea a couple of years before he joined our ship. I give this because every particular of it is a matter of official record. He was one of the crew of an Italian brig making a voyage to Constantinople, and on the return, while becalmed among the islands at the mouth of the Archipelago, a couple of boats carrying twenty men each, pulled out from one of the islands and attacked them. There were thirteen men on the brig, and though poorly armed, they gave the pirates a hot fight before the vessel was carried by boarding. When Tom saw that all was lost he hid himself away, and was not discovered until the brig had been towed into a cove. The Greeks had cooled off then and instead of cutting his throat they took him ashore to make a slave of him. The island was the rendezvous of a bad gang, and it seems that a portion of them were away on an expedition. For this reason the brig was pulled into the cove, which had very deep water, anchored stem and stern and her overhauling was deferred until the other party should return.

Tom was the sole survivor of the crew, and he was treated like a dog. He had a smattering of the language, and he was told that any effort of his to escape would be rewarded by burning alive. Nevertheless, on the second night of his stay he stole away from his hut to the water, swam off to the brig, boarded her by the fore chains, and finding the two men of the anchor watch fast asleep, he brained them with a capstan bar. The cable at the stern was of hemp and easily cut. The other was of chain, and Tom managed to slip it just as the tide turned. The brig was outside of all the small craft, and, as the night was dark, no one saw her drift away. Drift she did, however, aided by a fortunate breeze, and next morning she was sighted and boarded by a British man-of-war heading up from Crete. The Italian Government made the Greeks pay a good round sum for the outrage, and Tom got money enough out of it to have kept him all his days had he been a landsman.

He quit our ship with more fuss than he had entered it. For sixteen months he seemed perfectly content, and was well up to his work. Then the owners at home got into trouble and had to sell out, and we hauled into Rio Janeiro one day to find a new deal on hand. We were paid off and a new captain put in charge, and such of the men as wished to go were shipped for a new cruise in a clean ship. Most of us signed articles, though none of us liked the new captain. It was curious that he and Tom Finch took a strong dislike to each other at first sight, but the sailor had signed and would not desert. We had only got well outside when the new captain made us a speech. We had made an average cruise up to this date, and the ship was in good condition all the way around, but he would not have come up to the mark had he not insulted and abused us. We had a call aft, and I remember how ugly he looked as he surveyed us for a moment as an overseer looks over his slaves, and then said:

"You infernal lot of sojers and lobscousers, there's a new deal aboard this ship and I want you to understand it on the go off! There's to be no more sojering and picnicking. There's to be no more gamming between cabin and fo'castle. If we have a man aboard whom the sharks won't bite he'd better look out for me! I will bite him if he doesn't walk chalk! There's got to be discipline aboard; and the quicker you come to it the better for you, lazy carcasses! Go forward! D'ye hear me? Go forward and go to work, or I'll be among you!"

Almost every captain gives a crew that sort of talk. The average master looks upon his men as below the brute creation. He thinks it necessary to brag and bluster and threaten to let them know the wide difference between them. He had made a break for Tom, who had entered as a boat-steerer, and every man of us foresaw trouble.

We had been five days out when the row came. Several of the men had been brutally knocked about without excuse, and one day as we were on whaling ground and Tom was placing his boat in order, Captain Locke took occasion to find a deal of fault. It was plain to all of us that he was seeking a fuss, and that he was bent on stirring Tom up. He kept at it until he roused himself to fury and struck the sailor. We knew Tom would never stand that, nor did he. He squared off and felled the captain like an ox, and during the confusion he took refuge in the cabin, and barricaded the door and armed himself. Wasn't the old man howling mad when he came to. He issued all sorts of orders, but took precious good care not to expose himself to Tom's fire.

The sailor held the cabin for three days, allowing the crew to move about as they pleased, but watching to fire upon the captain if he exposed himself. On the third night, when we were a good hundred miles off Cape Frio, he dropped out of one of the stern ports into the open sea, and the first we knew of it we heard him laughing as he swam away. Six months later we had a "gam" with the Scotch whaler Jane, and the men told us that they picked Tom up when he had been afloat three days, and landed him, several weeks later, at Bahia.

THE PECULIAR PEOPLE.

They Establish Their Right to Live and Die Without Medical Advice.

England has a curious sect known as the Peculiar People, and their peculiarity consists in regarding the employment of physicians as a sin. In case of sickness they depend upon the prayer of faith, anointing with oil and probably hygienic measures so far as they understand them. When the death of a child occurs among these people it has been customary for the government to step in and prosecute the parents on the charge of neglect. The Pall Mall Gazette says of these prosecutions: "When juries were first called upon to sit in judgment upon the victims of the prayer and anointing oil mode of treatment, they promptly returned verdicts of manslaughter and the Peculiar People were cast into prison as martyrs for their faith. With them, as with most persons of that temper, imprisonment only stiffened their resolution. The struggle has gone on for years, but recently the Peculiar People triumphed, the enemy hauled down his flag, and capitulated at discretion—or in other words a British jury formally placed on record its conviction that it was useless to censure the Peculiar People any longer. The mother, questioned by the coroner, said: 'We believe in warm water and angels but nothing else.' The child was subject to rickets, had been ill from birth, and died when eleven months old from convulsions. The post-mortem doctor thought he might have done something for the case if he had been called, but the jury vindicated the right of the Peculiar People to their own religious and medical notions. The Pall Mall Gazette comments thus: "When once people are stubborn enough to convince the ordinary man that it is no use torturing them, then the landmarks of liberty are enlarged. Almost all our liberties have been won in this fashion. The scientific frontier between the authority of the State and the rights of the individual is perpetually in dispute, and it is only when the individual defies the State to do its worst, and proves that he is willing to take the consequence, and then do it again and to keep on doing it again until the State gets tired of sending him to prison, that the individual's claim to consideration gains any recognition. Every such victory gained by men who put a conscience to their work is an encouragement to all who care for individual liberty as against ever-encroaching authority, to pluck up courage to push still further forward the boundary line of freedom."

Simpson—What does this represent, Cammerer? I've studied it from every point of view, but vainly.

Cammerer—Why, that's the late great railway accident, in which two trains were telescoped.

Simpson—You don't say! I fancied it might represent the wreck of a photograph which had tried to record the chatter of three young women on a street corner.—Judge.

Mrs. S.—Why, what has he ever done to you?

Mr. S.—Bet me $50 this afternoon that I couldn't hit a barn-door with a revolver at five paces. Taunted me into betting him, got me to put up the money, measured off the five paces in the presence of a lot of witnesses, gave me a revolver loaded, and then set the door up edgewise!—Life.

TRUE PROTECTION.

To increase the opportunities for labor employment, and, at the same time to make justly remunerative invested capital in the various departments of legitimate enterprise and home fabrication, is true protection.

The only kind of protection worthy of the name.

That can neither be reigned for obscured by partisan clap-trap, because its foundation is fact, and its sole intent the welfare of the many, and the protection of practical business interests throughout our own country.

Monopolists and Trust Combines earnestly oppose any tariff or revenue system based upon the principles of equity as above briefly recited.

And well they may, because their purposes are mercenary, the aggrandizement of millionaire wealth at the expense of honest industry.

It is a crafty scheme, deceitfully termed protection, to make the few enormously rich and to keep the toiling masses continually poor and dependent.

To denounce all such projects is journalistic duty. They are at enmity, with the rights and prosperity of the people.

The tariff bill brought forward by the Republican Senators at Washington fosters the designs of Monopolies and Trusts to a dot.

That they endorse as warmly as they antagonize the Democratic tariff passed by the present House of Representatives.

Why?

The reason is obvious.

The Republican Senate aims to protect the privileged few, and the Democratic House to protect the neglected many, and all interests, agricultural, Manufacturing and commercial, with even-handed justice.

Intelligence is fast progressing and finding vent.

Mr. Whitman, a paper manufacturer of Birmingham, Connecticut, makes public his views as follows:

"I will first take Manilla paper, made from jute. I say the duty ought to come off. We use large quantities of jute, and it is not raised in this country. The duty is [illegible] per ton. It takes one and a half tons of jute to make a ton of paper. So you see our paper costs $7.50 per ton more than it would with free jute. We make and ship jute paper to England, and of course could increase our English or foreign trade if jute was free. We make jute paper for paper-box manufacturers in the State of Connecticut, and they make up the paper into boxes and ship the boxes to England. If jute was free, I guess it would increase the box-makers' trade in the foreign market, and if you increase the box-makers' trade, you, of course, will increase the business of the foundry and of the machinists, because the box-maker must have more machinery, also more men to run it, and when you increase the business of the paper manufacturer, he must have more machines and more men to run his works.

Our Prohibition platform, as well as our Democratic platform, calls for a revision of the tariff so as to protect our laboring classes by giving them plenty work and better wages. We say give us free raw material and we will then compete with any country in the world. We say break down the great coal Trusts, the oil Trust, the sugar Trusts, and all great monopolies. We say it is high time to protect the laboring classes instead of protecting monopolies. We say stop importing cheap labor, which is ruining the business of good American labor.

I say, give us free wool and increase the business in the woolen mills, and lower the duty on woolen goods so our laboring classes can afford to wear woolen clothes, no matter what may be the price of wool. The tariff on woolen goods will regulate the price of woolen clothing of all kinds.

We Prohibitionists say protect the many instead of the few, and it can't be done without revising the tariff. The few are rich and need no protection, although they are and have been getting it all. How dearly they do love the laboring people just now!"

So speaks a plain practical workingman, one whose knowledge is positive and to the point, and who utters words of honest truth.

A rate of duty levied on foreign manufactured goods coming into competition with American, amply sufficient to raise Revenue for all necessary public expenses and obligations, not for a corruption fostering surplus, and high enough to honestly protect labor and capital, not to enrich special interests at the cost of others, and to enlarge the bounds of employment and open new channels for industry, trade and commerce, by making raw materials as free as possible, is DEMOCRATIC TARIFF REFORM—TRUE PROTECTION.

Ask the Assessor.

A correspondent asks why it is that according to this year's tax levy, as in former years, the rich element of the city pays the least tax. Our correspondent also asks why it is that property on Crescent avenue is assessed at the same value as property in certain parts of the third and fourth wards; also, why the value on a small dwelling house on Church street was increased [illegible], and why it is that until recently the Seminary building on West Seventh street, has not been taxed at all. To all of the above questions we would respectfully refer our correspondent to the Assessor.

MATTER AND MERIT.

The new terminal facilities of the Central Railroad of New Jersey promises to be the best on the Jersey side. The depot is a marvel of its kind. The train-house resembles the famous Boston and Providence depot in Boston in its architectural design. The road should be proud of it.

H. P. Baldwin, the General Passenger Agent, is a man who has worked up from the foot of the ladder. He has been with the Company for about a quarter of a century. Five years of this time was spent as conductor and then he struck rapid promotion. He is a very genial man, of medium height, with steely gray beard and brown eyes. He is very cool in his business dealings and his conservatism has saved his road many thousands of dollars. Notwithstanding his quiet nature he has made a big circle of friends among railroad men, and the patrons of the road. He is very quick to catch a point that may be of service to him, and promises to rise still higher on the ladder of success.

—As a specimen of consistency, commend us to the business man who complains of people for going out of town to buy their goods, while he gives orders for printing to drummers for "out" printing offices, instead of getting his work at one of the home offices.

Reception at Bodman Seminary.

A reception was tendered to the pupils of Bodman Seminary, on Saturday evening, at which about thirty young people were present. Dancing, games, etc., were the main features of the evening's enjoyment. The Committee of arrangements consisted of the Misses Schoonmaker and Miss Kitty Mitchell.

Lost His Reason.

Thos. VanNest, a tenant on the Wm. B. Stewart farm at New Brooklyn, has lost his reason, and Monday the Middlesex County Board of Chosen Freeholder's had to take action with reference to committing him to an insane asylum. Mr. VanNest escaped from home on Saturday and came to Plainfield for the purpose of boarding a train for Trenton. He was captured at the station and taken home.

A New Male Chorus.

A chorus composed of male voices has been recently organized in this city, by the election of the following officers:

President—B. T. Barnes.
Secretary and Treasurer—[illegible]
Librarian—Jas. C. Randall.

Among the members are such well-known singers as Messrs L. A. Hummer, J. C. Randall, M. C. VanArsdale, H. J. Martin, B. T. Barnes, Fred. Cutter and others. The object of the new chorus is simply for social amusement, and new members will be admitted from time to time.

He Got Possession All the Same.

A lively wrangle occurred between two residents of Westfield, a few days ago, which resulted in a general knock-out match. It appears that two brothers, John and Isaac Collins, both laid claim to a certain dwelling house in Westfield, occupied by the former and his family. The right of title was tried in the Court of Chancery, and Isaac Collins was given an order by the Court, awarding him possession of the premises. A few months ago, it is alleged, Isaac Collins decided to take possession of the premises, in spite of all obstacles. He appeared on the scene, and began to set his brother's household effects out in the street, but the latter remonstrated, and an unpleasant scene followed. The ultimate result of the affair is likely to be an interesting law suit.

C. B. L.

A meeting was held Tuesday at St. Mary's School Hall for the purpose of organizing a Council in this city of the Catholic Benevolent Legion. Rev. P. E. Smyth called the meeting to order in a brief address, in which he spoke very favorably of the Legion and the intention of Father Stafford and himself of joining. He advised his parishioners to do likewise.

Alfred Harding of New Brunswick, State President, gave a pleasing address, in which he fully explained the object of the Society to the satisfaction of all present, and gave some striking examples of its benefits that came under his own observation.

Mr. F. L. Steers of Elizabeth, Deputy State Chancellor, also made a few remarks, after which a temporary organization was formed with the following officers: President—J. J. Kenney; Secretary—Father Stafford; Treasurer—Mr. Campbell. The meeting then adjourned to Tuesday evening, Jan. 29. The new society starts out with a membership of about 20.

The Catholic Benevolent Legion was incorporated under the laws of the State of New York in September, 1881. It is no longer an experiment. It is firmly established, an assured success. On Dec. 1 last, there were 158 councils, with a total membership of 10,000. Since the establishment of the Legion $511,355 have been paid to the beneficiaries of the deceased members.

A TWENTY THOUSAND DOLLAR SUNDAY SCHOOL.

An unusually large attendance gathered in the parlors of the Crescent Avenue church, Monday night, for the annual election of a Board of Trustees and the discussion, as announced in THE PRESS, of plans for the rebuilding of the Sunday school and other rooms recently damaged by fire. The election resulted in the unanimous choice again of the retiring Board—Messrs. I. W. Rushmore, J. W. Murray, J. K. Myers, Ephraim Miller, Charles Place, R. L. James and W. F. Arnold.

Architect Oscar Teale was present and exhibited and explained plans that he had prepared at the request and suggestion of the Trustees, for the rebuilding of the Sunday school rooms and parlors of the church. The matter was thoroughly discussed, and subsequently a motion by Mr. L. N. Lovell was carried to the effect that the Board of Trustees are authorized to proceed with any plans that might meet their approval, at an expense not to exceed $25,000.

Such amount with the indemnity received from the fire insurance companies, will make available about $20,000 for the erection of the building, apart from its furnishing. This will permit of a handsome and extended building, with all the latest improvements and conveniences. The Sunday school rooms will occupy the entire second floor above the parlors, infant class room and library, and will be arranged somewhat after the style of Vincent chapel. The building will be about twice as large as the present one and will extend out 27 feet further than now. This will still leave a carriage way of fifteen feet in breadth.

Mr. Rushmore read a report of the very healthy condition of the church's finances. Among other interesting particulars was that the total of pew rentals amounted to $8,[illegible].

MILLER AND IRVING.

Miss Nellie Florence Irving, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Irving, of Westfield, and Mr. Frank S. Miller, son of State Senator James L. Miller, of Union county, and a member of the well-known house of Frank Miller & Sons, of West Twenty-sixth street, New York, were wedded Monday night, in the Presbyterian church at Westfield.

After a brilliant reception at the home of the bride's parents on Central avenue, Mr. and Mrs. Miller left on the 11:30 train for New York, whence they will leave for a trip to Florida, returning by way of Washington. They will be absent about six weeks.

The ceremony took place at eight o'clock and the church was crowded with an assemblage of the representative families of the county and State. Among the guests from this city were Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Leader, Mr. and Mrs. George F. Brown, Miss Lizzie V. Smalley and the Hon. John Ulrich. The church was decorated and the altar banked with callas and other flowers.

The Rev. Newton W. Cadwell officiated and Prof. Minor C. Baldwin, of New York, was the organist. The ushers were Dr. Fred Kinch, Jr., and Arthur R. Irving, of Westfield; C. Everett Mersler, of Newark; Robert D. Miller, of New York.

The bride was attired in a dress of white satin and lace. She wore a tulle veil and wreath of orange blossoms, and carried a bouquet of white hyacinths. The maid of honor, Miss Bessie A. Miller, sister of the groom, wore a robe of nile green surah, trimmed with silver and green tulle, and lace, and she carried a bouquet of pink roses. The bridesmaid, Miss Ruth Minton, of Brooklyn, wore a dress of pink India silk, trimmed with lace, and carried pink roses. They were followed by Mary Lee Cadwell as a flower girl, in light blue India silk. Dr. Henry Brewster Minton, of Brooklyn, was best man, and Frank C. Miller, of New York, was groomsman.

Among those present at the church was a delegation of fifty employees from the firm's New York house. The presents were numerous, varied and beautiful.

A Score.

A gentleman who recently advertised in the city papers for a boarding place, address "Comfort," states that he received over a dozen answers through THE PRESS and only two from any other paper.

A Horrible Death Averted.

An employee of Mr. C. E. Hobby, the painter, narrowly escaped being fatally burned, Saturday afternoon last.

He was standing near a bonfire watching a pigeon match, and was so intent on the sport that his clothing had caught and was in a light blaze before the danger was discovered. With much difficulty the fire was smothered and his life saved.

Fell From a Tree.

The snow storm on Sunday did considerable damage to the District Messenger company's wires in this city. Mr. Joseph Eder, an employee of the company was at work adjusting the wires about Mr. J. B. Barron's residence in North Plainfield on Monday, when he accidentally fell from a tree to the ground, a distance of about 25 feet, and sustained painful injuries about the head and neck. Mr. Eder considered himself fortunate to escape with his life.

A North Plainfielder Severely Burned.

Mr. William J. Roome, of Willow and Sycamore avenues North Plainfield, met with rather a painful accident at midnight Friday. One of his children had a serious attack of croup the day before, and in order to keep the house at an even temperature during the night, Mr. Roome went personally to attend to the furnace. He accidentally set fire to some linen on the cellar door, and in his efforts to extinguish the flames, which had gained considerable headway, both hands were so severely burned and blistered that he may not have the use of them for several days. Dr. T. S. Davis dressed the wounds.

And Yet the Plainfield Merchants Only Got "20 Cents."

It is said that Mrs. Sarah Lattimer, of this city, the philanthropic woman who has given so many thousands of dollars towards the building of the new First Presbyterian church, is also a loser through the so-called misfortunes of the late firm of S. A. Potter & Co.

Mrs. Lattimer is credited with having loaned Mr. Potter $40,000 on the school book copyrights he owned. That with Mr. VanDeventer's $30,000 and the notes for $22,000 that have just come to light as issued by Mr. Potter against the firm, should well feather a nest in Philadelphia.

Resolutions on the Death of Mrs. L. W. Serrell.

At a special meeting of the Children's Home Association, held on January 17, the following resolutions were unanimously passed:

WHEREAS: It has pleased our Heavenly Father to take into His own rest, after a long and suffering illness our friend and associate, Mrs. L. W. Serrell, therefore

Resolved, That in grateful recognition of her long and faithful services as Treasurer of our Children's Home Association, and her constant interest in, and benefactions to the work since its beginning, we offer to her family in this hour of their deep sorrow, our hearty sympathy and assurance of our lasting regard. Also

Resolved, That our Corresponding Secretary be requested to send a copy of these resolutions to the family, to insert them in our city papers, and to enter them on the records of the Association.

THEIR SILVER ANNIVERSARY.

The Grand Lodge, Knights of Pythias of New Jersey, will meet in the Assembly Room of the Masonic Hall in New Brunswick on Feb. 21 and 22. On the evening of the 21st the Grand Lodge will hold the 25th anniversary of the order in the Opera House, to which the public will be invited.

The Hon. John Ulrich, Supreme Chancellor Ward, Supreme Representative J. Brayton of Rhode Island, and Rev. N. D. Thompson, P. C., of Ashland Lodge of New York will deliver addresses. Miss Opdyke of Somerville and Mr. J. D. Lee of Jersey City will do the singing. At the end of the programme in the Opera House, Friendship Lodge No. 30, of New Brunswick, will tender to the Grand Lodge members a grand reception ball in the Assembly Room, to which all of the secret societies of the city will be invited.

The provision that this 25th anniversary should be celebrated was made at the recent session of the Supreme Lodge of the world in Cincinnati. The 25th milestone will be placed by the order on Feb. 19. The 31,000 subordinate lodges, 47 grand jurisdictions, and the membership of nearly 250,000 attest the wonderful growth of the order in a quarter of a century. On Oct. 1, 1888, there had been paid out to widows and orphans of members over five and a half millions of dollars, and there were 18,107 members in the Endowment Rank. There were over 8,000 members of the Uniform Rank in parade at the Cincinnati session.

Another Delay in the Proceedings for Divorce of Illsley vs. Illsley.

The suit for divorce brought by his wife against Mr. Harry Illsley, the well-known hotel proprietor of Scotch Plains, has come to another temporary halt. As published exclusively in THE PRESS, the taking of testimony in the case began Monday before Special Master in Chancery, ex-Mayor John H. VanWinkle, at his office on West Front street.

John H. Jackson, Esq., was present in the interests of his client, the defendant. Corporation Counsel, C. A. Marsh was there for the plaintiff, Mrs. Illsley, who was also present. Stenographer Knight and the Special Master, completed the audience. At the request of Mrs. Illsley, who said her case had been misrepresented and her feelings exaggerated by a certain paper, reporters were excluded as well as everyone else.

Upon the opening of the case, certain letters claimed to have been written by the co-respondent, "Nettie," to Mr. Illsley, were offered in evidence by the plaintiff's counsel. The letters included those given THE PRESS by Mrs. Illsley and published in these columns of Dec. 7. The Master admitted them, but upon the defendant's counsel objecting, the decision of the question was left to the ruling of the Chancellor, and the case was adjourned until the 29th inst.

Below we give extracts from two more of the letters:

NETTIE IS DOLEFUL, TEARFUL AND HOPEFUL.
SAUGERTIES, N. Y., Dec. 26.

MY DARLING HARRY:
I received your letter with much joy. I ought to have had a pleasant Christmas but I could not. I kept thinking of you, and all I could do was cry. I hope this will soon end and we will be together again and not to separate this time.
NETTIE.

SAUGERTIES, Jan. 2, 1889.

MY DEAR HARRY:
You thought to blind me and make me believe you was true to me, but Harry, if I have been fool enough to love one that does not care a snap of his finger for me, I do not intend to let him make a fool of me.
I remain your true and tried friend, with love, from NETTIE.

HEADQUARTERS FOURTH Y. M. C. A. DISTRICT OF NEW JERSEY.
PLAINFIELD, N. J., January 4, 1889.

Secretary of the Associations of the Fourth District:

Long experience has proven the wisdom in our work of dividing a State into Several Districts and holding in each an Annual Convention.

Our State has been thus divided into Six Districts, and your District Committee have arranged for a Convention at Asbury Park, January 25-27.

Four profitable Conventions have been held in as many Districts this year.

Ours is a great and difficult work. We need all the information and spiritual strength we can get to make it successful. These gatherings afford opportunity to secure both.

Every Association should be well represented. Entertainment will be provided for all who may come; but a great favor will be conferred if you send your names previously to Claude V. Gein, Secretary of the Asbury Park Association, mentioning the time you expect to arrive. Please do not neglect this.

All Evangelical Pastors and Christian young men in places having no Associations are cordially invited as corresponding members. Entertainment will be extended to such as send their names as requested.

We ask that earnest prayer may be offered in all the Associations for God's blessing on this Convention.

W. D. MURRAY,
Chairman of District Com.
D. F. MORE,
State Secretary.

"THEY'VE ALWAYS BEEN HAPPY."

The list of comic opera singers will probably be increased by one before the present season is over. Pretty Celie Ellis, the sister of the wife of Councilman Watson of this city, who retired from the Casino Company a year ago, is the latest aspirant for fame and expects soon to join an opera company. Celie's determination to return to the stage has caused a great deal of gossip.

When she married it was thought that she would give up playing altogether. She spent much of her life last Winter with her sister here, and was a guest at the Park House with Mr. Blake during the early part of the following Summer. But her love for the stage returned, and last Summer she joined a light opera company and played all through the West.

It was said at the time that her husband objected to her acting, and threatened to leave her if she did not give up the stage forever. All sorts of stories were set afloat about the trouble between herself and husband, but the two continued to live together, and are now occupying apartments in the Chelsea, on W. Twenty-third street, New York.

The little actress was seen by a reporter Monday night. She denied that there was any trouble between herself and husband, or ever had been. She said he had objected to her returning to the stage, but he had finally consented, and now was doing all in his power to help her. She could not imagine how the rumor of trouble between them had been noised about. "for," she concluded, "we have always been very happy."

Rogers, Peet & Co.'s Dinner.

Messrs Rogers, Peet & Co., the Broadway clothiers of New York, (whose advertisement appears in our columns each Spring and Fall), gave their Fourth Annual Dinner to their employees, at the Metropolitan Hotel, last evening. It was the anniversary dinner in honor of the co-operative system introduced by the firm in 1886, which gives each employee a percentage in addition to his salary. The custom of this house (since 1886) has been to distribute among their employees a certain portion of the net profits on each years' business in proportion to the salary of each employee.

Accordingly, each employee on this occasion was presented with a check equal to 2½ per cent. upon the amount of salary received during the past year.

Of this well-known firm it may be said, that strikes and discords are unknown, as they have always worked on the plan that the interests of themselves and their employees are identical.

Working under such a plan ought to produce good results in the way of excellent clothing and attentive service to customers, for all of which the house is already justly famous.

By the way, we hear that these enterprising people have leased the building at corner of Warren street and Broadway, opposite City Hall Park, now occupied by Devlin & Co., and will open a Branch House there next Spring.

This will complete the chain of their outfitting establishments, as they already have one at 32d street and Broadway, in addition to the parent house at Prince street and Broadway, and render it all the easier for our citizens to deal with these representatives of the profit sharing principle in business.

THE PRESS' CORRESPONDENT BEWAILS THE CUSTOM HOUSE DUTIES.

Polishing 300 Tons of Rice Daily—An 80 Ton Bell That is Rung Once in 24 Days—Shoes Off in the Temples—Information for the Gods.

GRAND HOTEL, YOKOHOMO,
Dec. 18, 1888.

This time I am going to send you a letter by the yard. This is Japanese writing paper, but they do not use it as I do; they begin at the other end of the line and write down. If you look close you will see it is lined from side to side.

When we get talking now we invariably end up by talking of the Custom House. It is so provoking to see so many pretty things and at what seems a reasonable price, and then have to leave them because there will be a 50 per cent. duty to pay on them before they can be got in. There seems to be a duty on everything, and it varies from about 25 to 70 per cent. so if we do not know the exact duty we call it 50 per cent.

I think Japan offers stronger temptation to buy than any place we have yet been in. It is a great grievance to me that I can only spend half my money here, as I have to save the other half for duties.

In Kobe we met two school-fellows, very prosperous merchants. One is especially well-to-do. He has rice polishing mills that turn out 300 tons of rice in a day; then he has a ship-building yard and dry-dock, connected with which is an iron works. He also owns about half the land in Kobe. The other brother is in the curio business. We spent four or five days buying. We enjoyed it immensely. Anything we wanted was put in with the other things at wholesale prices.

We were up to Kioto, about seventy miles from Kobe. We visited the bronze factories, porcelain factories, a carpet-weaving establishment, fan making establishment and various temples. By one of the latter is a great bell. It weighs 80 tons, and is only rung once in twenty-four days. It has no clapper, but is rung by an arrangement that looked like a battering-ram. One of the temples we visited there had a notice requesting all visitors to take off their shoes. We got sandals to put on over our shoes instead of taking them off. The floors are covered with matting, and although they have been covered with the same matting for years, it looks just like new. The Japs always take off their shoes on entering a house. One of the very noticeable things is the exceeding cleanness of their floors and the freshness of the wood-work. They use no paint on the wood-work, but in some places they use lacquer, instead. They are not much given to making an appearance on the outside of their houses, but they have the most beautiful little gardens at the back, with fountains, rockeries and fancy-grown small trees.

When we went into the great temple one of the priests stood in front of one of the large gods and told him the foreigners had come in to just look around, and when we went out he informed the god that the foreigners had looked around and how were gone.

We made a very pleasant little excursion out from Kioto. We went about twenty miles in jinaricksha to the head of some rapids and there they put the jinaricksha in a large, flat-bottomed boat, and we went down the rapids. It was quite an exciting ride. The trees were bright red and yellow, so the mountains were looking very gorgeous. That is about the only place we have had any view of the sunset of the year. It took us about an hour to come down in the boat, and then we had to go about ten miles back to the hotel. We made quite a procession. Each jinaricksha had two men to pull. These men will run from forty to sixty miles a day, and on short distances they make better time than the average horse.

They have a railroad from Kobe to Kioto, built on the English plan and run entirely by Japs. The official dress here now is foreign, from the Mikado to the car-drivers. The military dress is modeled on the French and German style, and the naval, railroad and some others on the English style.

We came from Kobe here on one of the Japanese mail steamers, and it took about thirty hours. We had a little rough weather and it was cold, so we were glad to stay down stairs. We got here Friday night and Sunday we were up to Tokio, the capital.

Do you know we are eighteen hours earlier here than you? It is now just 12 o'clock, Tuesday noon, and with you it is six o'clock, Monday evening. When we cross the 180th degree of longitude we will have two days the same, either two Saturdays or two Sundays, or whatever it may happen to be, or when we get into San Francisco we would be a day ahead of the people there. I have made a mistake in the time. It is San Francisco that is eighteen hours and New York is fifteen, so it is nine o'clock with you now instead of six.

Sunday night we were out to dinner at Mr. Low's. He is of the firm here that Uncle has been buying his tea from for some years. His wife is a San Francisco girl. They have not been married a year. They are going over to San Francisco this Winter, so we will meet them again on the other side. We are booked to sail on the "Arabic," on the 29th. She is one of the finest boats on the line.

From our windows we can see Fujiyama, said to be one of the youngest mountains in the World. It is of volcanic origin and is 11,500 feet high. It stands quite alone, and with the exception of two months in Summer is covered with snow. It looks now like a great white pyramid whose top had caved in. The Winter is just about commencing, and lasts from six weeks to two months. There is a steamer expected in today from America. We are waiting quite impatiently for it so as to get the papers and see what is going on in the World.

This hotel is heated with steam; a radiator in every room. They are quite different from ours. There is a double row of five pipes, one inch thick, and on each pipe is a circle of thin iron plate, about five inches in diameter. It looks like a lot of buttons. Over the pipes is a fancy iron case coming down close to the floor and fitting tight to the wall so no dust can get under or behind it.

I don't think I have anything more to tell you this time, so will now close.

New Band Officers.

At a meeting of the City Band, held Wednesday Jan. 16, the following officers were elected:

E. Dawe, President and Manager.
George Sacks, Treasurer.
Thomas Harding, Secretary.
Frank Goode, Leader.

MR. McCLURE WINS AGAIN.

The Economic Gas Machine company brought suit through ex-Judge Nelson Runyon, against Mr. F. X. Schoonmaker, of Putnam street, for a claim of $168. The case was tried before Justice Nodyne and a jury, Monday, and the defendant won a very satisfactory victory through the efforts of his counsel, W. K. McClure, Esq.

The claim was for balance on a gas machine, after deducting what the manufacturers were pleased to allow on a machine that had been returned for slight repairs. The net price of the machines is $190, yet after taking the first one back the company sought to collect $168 as balance due on the second.

Mr. Schoonmaker accepted the discomfort and expense of a civil suit as a matter of principle. He would at any time have settled upon the basis of a fair adjustment. The jury awarded the plaintiff $60, which was even less than the defendant would have consented to pay.

Tell Folks What You Have.

Don't advertise unless you have something worth buying. A great many persons suppose advertising alone is sufficient. This is nearly as bad an error as to suppose that having the goods is sufficient alone.

This reminds us of a little story we once heard of a boy who was sent out in the Summer with a bag of green corn to sell. The boy was gone all day, and returned with the bag unopened, which he dumped on the floor, saying: "There is your corn, go and sell it yourself—I can't." "Sold any?" "No," said the boy; "I've been all over the city with it and nobody said anything about green corn. Two or three fellows asked me what I'd got in my bag and I told them it was none of their business." The boy reminds us of some business men we know of who do not recognize the benefits of advertising.

New York to Jacksonville in 31 Hours via Pennsylvania Railroad.

The New York and Florida special of Pullman vestibule drawing room, sleeping, dining, smoking and library cars, which won such wide-spread popularity last Winter, has been placed in tri-weekly service between New York and Jacksonville.

The train will leave New York on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays at 9:30 A. M., Newark 9:55, Trenton 11:00, Philadelphia 12:40 P. M., Baltimore 2:20, and Washington 3:30 P. M., and will arrive in Jacksonville at 3:40 P. M. the next afternoon, thirty hours and ten minutes from New York. The special will be equipped with vestibule drawing-room, sleeping, dining, smoking and library cars of the latest Pullman pattern. It will be heated by steam and lighted by electricity.

The capacity of this train is by force of circumstances, limited, and therefore reservation of space should be made in advance of a contemplated trip. Such application may be addressed to the agents of the Pennsylvania railroad company at any of the cities mentioned.

THE WIDOW OF HENRY BORST.

Perseverance Lodge, K. of P., Saturday sent to Mrs. Jennie Borst, of Little Falls, N. Y., the funeral benefit due her from the Lodge as the widow of Henry Borst, a member who was recently killed by an accident on the Denver & Rio Grande railroad.

The widow sends THE PRESS the following story of her marriage and desertion:

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS—I wish to thank you for your efforts and their success, in securing the justice due a wronged wife and widow.

I first became acquainted with Henry Borst about three and a half years ago at my home in Little Falls, N. Y. He was then employed on the New York, West Shore & Buffalo Railway. I received marked attention from him to the date of my marriage with him. About the 8th of January, 1888, my sister, Mrs. James D. Clark, went with her husband to reside in New York city. On April 15 of the same year I went to New York city to visit my sister, Mrs. Clark. Prior to that time Mr. Borst had left the employ of the West Shore Railroad and then claimed to be keeping books for Frank Bros. & Co., importers, Fulton street, New York city. I corresponded with him for a long time, and on my arrival in New York he renewed his attentions to me and his frequent proffers of marriage. I consented to the marriage and we were accordingly married on April 27, 1888, by the Rev. Mr. White of Summit, N. J. My husband and myself then returned to my home in Little Falls, N. Y.

In about three weeks after that we went to Mr. Borst's mother's house in Plainfield, N. J., and stayed there two and one-half weeks. During that time I was badly used by my husband and came to the conclusion he wanted to rid himself of me. He told me he had a position offered him in Steubenville, Ohio, in a broker's office, and said I had better return to my home, and after he got settled he would send for me. I returned to Little Falls and that was the last I heard or saw of him personally since.

During the time I was married a young woman by the name of —— —— of Plainfield, N. J., wrote my husband quite frequently, registering all her letters. I have reason to believe that my husband kept up intimate relations with her during the time we were married. After I came back to Little Falls I wrote this woman, telling her H. M. Borst was a married man. I deny the statement made by the N. Y. Herald, which said that no one outside of their immediate family knew of our marriage, and that I never was introduced into society in Plainfield. I met quite a number of people. I did not know the family moved in any society; I thought them rather secluded. Thanking you again for your kindness, I remain

Respectfully yours,
MRS. JENNIE BORST.

Little Falls, N. Y., Jan. 16.

BALDWIN'S ACQUITTAL.

In an interview with one of the jury immediately after the close of the case of the State against Frederick Baldwin for the murder of Edward Miller, a PRESS reporter learned that the jury had agreed on their verdict of not guilty on Jan. 17 and even before the defence had been begun.

The thoughts of the jurymen, therefore, as they listened to Counsellor Gilhooley's useless pleading of almost three hours, must have been amusing—let us hope they also pitied the earnest lawyer for the breath he wasted, and the unnecessary labors he put forth.

The constable in charge of the jury also knew how they stood, and he hurried to caution the Court as to the coming verdict and its probable effect on the big crowd assembled. Before Judge Van Syckle could warn the crowd, however, the verdict of "not guilty" was announced by the foreman, and the very building shook for some minutes with the cheers of the hundreds gathered outside the rail.

Baldwin was completely overcome. The sudden release of the strain that had been upon him for months, almost prostrated him, and his Counsel, Hon. Fred C. Marsh, was also visibly affected.

The Judge ordered the release of the accused at once, and shortly after, Baldwin in company with his wife and daughter, started for the Elizabeth station. The crowd that followed them was so large that it was necessary to take the Baldwins into Chief Keron's office from whence they were quietly put on a Roselle train and afterwards on a through train to Westfield.

The verdict seems to meet the approval of everybody who is unprejudiced, and already THE PRESS has received some letters, and many verbal expressions of approval and congratulation upon the stand it took for Baldwin from the very beginning.

We might quote with pardonable pride columns of matter THE PRESS published months ago asking justice for Baldwin and condemning the course of the detectives and the verdict of the Coroner's jury. We will, however, only reprint two paragraphs, one of three weeks and one of five months ago:

[FROM THE PRESS OF AUG. 13, 1888.]

There are just as suspicious circumstances pointing to others as those that surround the man [Baldwin] now in jail. Some of these clues should be followed, or, when Baldwin is found innocent, it may be too late.

[FROM THE PRESS OF JAN. 3, 1889.]

As THE PRESS has said before, the result will not be the conviction of the accused. There was not sufficient evidence before the Coroner's jury to justify it in holding Baldwin, and there is still no evidence to put forth that will convince an entire jury of the accused's guilt.

City and Borough Improvements.

The respective "jails" of the city and borough, are striving to outdo one another in improvements about them.

A new gas lamp outside the Borough jug, now sheds a yellow glare upon the shiftless surroundings, while a board walk keeps the prisoners out of the mud from the Park avenue sidewalk to the doorway of the City cooler.

Yet No One is Killed.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company recently stationed men at the Union Depot, Elizabeth, to count the number of trains bound East and West, and vehicles that pass over the Morris avenue crossing opposite the depot, in twenty-four hours. By actual count over 575 trains passed and 2,600 vehicles, thus making it one of the most dangerous crossings in the United States.

From the New Depot.

The local passengers of the Central Railroad left the great new depot at Communipaw for the first time on Friday last. Since the commencement of the work the local way trains have left the ferry on tracks just outside the long shed, but will now leave from within. Five tracks of the dozen or so to occupy the interior are already laid, and temporary platforms of wood built between them. The platforms will be of asphalt when completed. The second of the five ferry slips was also completed, and the boats are now allowed to run on much better time. The old waiting rooms and restaurant are almost destroyed, while the new ones in the great depot are rapidly assuming shape.

Westfield vs. Brooklyn.

The Nameless Bowling Club of Westfield bowled a return game with the Recreation Club of Brooklyn, evening Jan. 15, on the alleys of the latter Club at 1,411 Fulton avenue, Brooklyn. It resulted in a victory for the Nameless Club by the following score, winning by 32 pins:

NAMELESS.		RECREATION.
McQuoid	[illegible]	Cox	[illegible]
Hurst	[illegible]	Grey	[illegible]
M. Alpers	[illegible]	Hinsch	[illegible]

The visiting club returned home on the midnight train, greatly pleased with their reception, their victory, and their entertainment. The Recreation Club set forth a bountiful lay-out and filled the "frames" of the Westfielders until there was nothing to "spare."

Resolutions of Regret.

WHEREAS: It has pleased Almighty God to call from our midst in the vigor of his manhood our late Brother, Samuel McMahon, who departed this life Jan. 11, 1889, and

WHEREAS: By the death of Samuel McMahon we have lost a true friend and faithful temperance man, therefore be it

Resolved, That while we bow in humble submission to the will of Almighty God we sincerely deplore the loss of our esteemed brother who by his upright and generous nature and strict adherence to the laws of our organization, had the good will and esteem of all who knew him.

Resolved, That we tender our heartfelt sympathy to his bereaved family in their great affliction which God in his just dispensation has seen fit to decree.

Resolved, That these resolutions be entered on the minutes and a copy of the same forwarded to the family of the deceased, and also published in THE PRESS.

Tax Levy of 1888.

(From the Central Times.)

The total valuations of Plainfield real estate and personal property for 1888 were $5,705,650.00 less deductions for individual debts. The rate of tax fixed at $2.18 on every $100, produced $121,256.97, the amount of tax to be raised for all objects.

Of this tax levy, the State and county quota, $45,980.17 was paid in December when due, out of the first money received from the collection of taxes for these two objects and about $11,000 additional for the general city tax.

The quota for city expenses was $[illegible],805.21; of which there has been collected $17,376.19, but from which about $11,000, as above mentioned, were taken to make up the State and county claim, leaving less than $6,500 for immediate current expenses.

The fire department levy of $9,[illegible].84 was not all collected, the receipts being $7,220.44, leaving a deficit of $2,235.40.

The poor fund to be raised was placed at $4,171.68 of which there have been collected $3,171.87.

The library tax amounted to $2,[illegible], and the collections have been $1,904.[illegible].

The public school tax (not including the State school levy of $17,989.18) amounted to $35,598.37 and as fast as collected, was paid over to the Board of Education.

The total collections on the tax levy of 1888, have been $92,387.75.

—The ghost which haunted special Officer Smith at the freight house, a few mornings, has vanished forever from sight. Likewise all the cats in the immediate vicinity.

—Spring politics will soon begin to boom in the borough.

—White horseradish and red-headed girls are not necessarily incompatible.

—According to advices from the North and East, but little ice has been gathered yet.

—Fashion in collars, says an exchange, changes oftener than some change their collars.

—Had the mild weather continued, trailing arbutus parties would have soon been in order.

—At the morning service in the M. E. church, Sunday, two new members were admitted by letter.

—A "Missionary Tea" was held in Vincent chapel, Monday, that proved to be an interesting affair.

—One of the young children of Mr. and Mrs. John Ackerman of North Plainfield, fell from a chair Friday and broke an arm.

—A valuable bird dog belonging to Mr. L. Wyckoff of North Plainfield, was either poisoned or died from natural causes, a few days ago.

—To pave or not to pave is the question that most agitates an East Fourth street liveryman. From the present outlook it is "not to pave."

—An unusual sight for the 18th of January, was four lads playing marbles under an electric light on Liberty street at ten o'clock Friday night.

—In Trenton it costs boys three dollars to loaf around corners and blackguard people who may be passing. There is no charge for such actions in this city.

—Don't take your sign down now that the holiday trade is over. Push things. Advertise, replenish your stock, and be content with a fair profit, and customers will not be found wanting.

—The members of the Plainfield Gesang and Turn Verein Society will tender themselves and their friends an evening sociable at their new Hall on Somerset street, on the evening of Monday, Feb. 4.

—Valentines, both comic and Sentimental, have been purchased by our local dealers in large quantities. It is said that the better class of valentines this year are more than ordinarily attractive.

—Manager [illegible] of the District Messenger office, has located two police call-boxes on the Boulevard. He has also caused to be erected three fire alarm boxes in various parts of the city, for trial.

—The Royal Craftsman, Assemblyman Ulrich's paper, would very much like to see the Grand Lodge of New Jersey take some active and decisive action at the coming of the Grand Lodge, toward establishing a Masonic Home in this State.

—Negotiations are pending for the purchase by Mr. Edward Love from the Land Improvement Company, of the desirable lot located at the corner of North avenue and Peace street. Mr. Love will probably erect a handsome building on the site.

—When Brakeman Shrope, of the Central R. R. of N. J., went to draw his pay amounting to $47, for last month, he found that it had be drawn at Elizabeth by a man who had forged his name. The forgery was cleverly done and the company is out the amount.

—The Commanderies under the jurisdiction of the Grand Commandery Knights Templars of New Jersey, now number 34. Two new Commanderies will probably be instituted during the coming year. Fifty-eight candidates were Knights last year, and there are over 1,200 Knights Templars in New Jersey.

—It is stated the L. A. Dunn Brothers and Mr. Williams, the restaurant-keeper, have been notified to move on April 1st, by the Central Railroad Company, whose building they occupy at the Elizabeth depot. The report is also being circulated that the reason for this is the company intend to tear down the property and erect thereon a new depot.

—A magnificent black stallion, 18 hands high, but as gentle as a kitten, was shipped from Plainfield, Wednesday morning, for New York. The handsome animal's name was "Watchung," about four years of age, bred from Hambletonian stock, and raised by Mr. George W. Moore, of Scotch Plains who had just sold him for a high price to a New Yorker.

—Ellen Boyle of Newark, came to Plainfield Saturday, thinking perhaps the man who was killed at Clinton avenue, was her nephew, Edward Fitzsimmons who resided with his parents at 41 Ann street, that city, and who has been missing from home since Dec. 17. Fitzsimmons was but 18 years of age. This fact, together with the description of the man and the clothing he wore did not tally in any respect with the dead man.

Report [illegible] of the State.

Walter, Jersey City, bicycle foot rest; H. F. West, Gloucester City, car axle lubricator.

He Wants $30,000 of Mr. Van Deventer.

Mr. J. Neil Darragh, whose romantic marriage with Miss Stella Whidden of this city—sister of Mrs. S. A. Potter—is still remembered by many of our readers, is suing President Jeremiah VanDeventer of the First National Bank of Plainfield, for breach of contract.

The writer heard at the time, that when a dissolution of Mr. S. A. Potter's firm was proposed, Mr. VanDeventer agreed to come in with Mr. Potter and Mr. Darragh and buy out Messrs Knight and Loomis, the other partners.

But eventually Mr. VanDeventer changed his mind and went in with the latter instead, buying out Mr. Potter, and leaving Mr. Darragh in the cold.

Mr. VanDeventer sunk $30,000 in the new firm, and now Mr. Darragh sues him for $30,000 more for breach of contract.

Mr. Thad Dunne, Jr., has recently connected himself in a business capacity with the firm of White, Post & Co., dealers in leather and findings, Duane street, New York.

Mr. Elijah Stiles, the carpenter, who broke his nose by falling from a building a few weeks ago, has so far recovered from the injuries he received, as to be able to go out.

The wife of Hon. Peter S. Bergen, the silver-tongued orator of Somerville, and the mother of City Attorney Frank Bergen of Elizabeth, died at her home in Belvidere on Monday morning.

Artist Langhorn one day last week took an excellent picture of the employees of the postoffice in front of that institution, at the request of Postmaster Force, who is the central figure in the group.

On Wednesday, February 13, at the bride's home in Mount Bethel, will take place the marriage of Miss Maggie Way and Mr. George Codington, brother of Counsellor Wm. R. Codington of this city.

Miss Carrie Halsted of Madison avenue, who was taken suddenly ill, while on duty as nurse in a New York hospital, a few weeks ago, and who subsequently came to her home in this city, resumed her charge this afternoon.

Mrs. Theodore Miller, daughter of Mr. G. M. Hetfield, died at her home in New York city, during Monday, after a lingering illness. The funeral services were held at her father's house in Dunellen, on Thursday morning at eleven o'clock.

Mr. and Mrs. John H. Stevens will celebrate the tenth anniversary of their wedding, by the entertainment of a number of their friends at their home corner of Second and Peace streets, Thursday evening of next week. Prof. Frazee will furnish the music.

Mr. Edward Dobbs of this city, who has been lately connected with the N. Y. Transfer Co., as one of its railroad agents, on Saturday accepted an offer of his old position as steward under Mr. S. V. Woodruff, formerly of The Netherwood and now of the Hotel Balmoral, Montreal.

Prof. Wm. D. McClintock, formerly Registrar of Chautauqua University, and Mrs. McClintock, arrived in New York from Europe on the steamer "Celtic," Saturday. They are again at home in Plainfield where Mr. McClintock will resume his connection with the C. L. S. C., in a new capacity.

The late Eugene I. Wetherell, better known as Emma Abbott's husband who died recently, first began his career as a business man with the New York drug firm of John F. Henry & Co., of College place, of which firm Mr. Henry E. Bowen of Netherwood, is a partner. Mr. Wetherell was immensely rich at the time of his death.

Mr. Fred Lucas, a late employee in Mr. Edward Love's wall-paper designing establishment in this city, has returned to his home in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., there to remain. Mr. Lucas was the President of the Young Peoples Society of Christian Endeavor of Trinity Reformed church, and his removal from the city, will be severely felt by the Society.

A special meeting of the Plainfield Chess, Checker and Whist Club, was held at its rooms Tuesday, and a committee consisting of E. B. Keys, President of the State Association, Eli Long, Charles Thiers, and F. A. Dunham, were appointed to make arrangements preliminary to the annual meeting and tournament of the State Association, to be held in this city, Feb. 22.

The funeral of the late James M. Whitfield, who died recently, took place from the late residence of the deceased, on Broadway Tuesday afternoon at half-past two o'clock, there being a large number of persons from New York and other places among the mourners. Rev. Mr. Goodrich conducted the services, and Rev. Mr. Schenck made the closing prayer. Interment was made in Greenwood on Wednesday.

The funeral obsequies over the remains of the late Mrs. L. W. Serrell, were conducted by Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, from her late home on West Front street, Saturday afternoon, in the presence of a large number of the relatives and friends of the family. Dr. Yerkes was assisted by Rev. Mr. Bromley of Brooklyn, who made a few remarks, and Rev. Mr. Lowry of this city, who made the closing prayer. The body was interred in Hillside Cemetery.

Mr. Leo. Daft, the electrician of Putnam avenue, is continually enlightening his fellow beings upon the subject of electricity. Scarcely a week elapses that he is not awarded one or more patents by the patent office authorities at Washington, D. C., the latest patents being issued to him last week for an armature for dynamo electrical machine, and for an insulator support for electrical conductors. Mr. Daft has done much toward perfecting the uses of electricity.

The funeral of the late Mrs. John H. Tier, Jr., who died on Thursday last, took place from her late residence on Bank place, Sunday afternoon at two o'clock. The large house was densely filled with mourners and friends of the family, representatives from the various secret societies with which Mr. Tier is identified, being among the number. Plainfield Lodge, No. 44, I. O. O. F., was present in a body. The floral display was something grand, there being fourteen distinct pieces. Rev. Mr. Schenck conducted the service, and Rev. Mr. Mitchell made the closing prayer. Interment was made in Evergreen Cemetery.

Property Changes Hands.

Rev. J. P. Taylor, D. D., rector of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, Tuesday purchased from the Central New Jersey Land Improvement Company, a plot of ground on North avenue, facing the Central Railroad station, for $14,000. The lot has a frontage of 70 feet. One-half of the amount was paid in cash to Mr. Wm. G. Ayers, the company's agent in this city.

A New Hotel for Westfield.

Mr. William Hensel, of Newark, has been licensed by the District Court at Elizabeth, to keep a hotel and bar at the corner of North avenue and Broad street, Westfield. There was great opposition among the temperance people, against an extra license in Westfield, but the Court overruled the objections and granted the petition. Mr. Hensel is remodeling the building preparatory to opening in the course of a few weeks.

No, Nor Any Other Church.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—Would you kindly let me know if the Trinity Reformed or Grace church have singers who receive a salary of $2,000 a year?

The reason why I ask the above is, a friend of mine and myself have had quite a number of arguments over the above.

Rahway, Jan. 21. F. J. B.

[You might add together the salaries of the highest paid singer in every church in the city, and the total would probably be less than the sum named.—ED.]

Kendall—Maltby.

At the residence of the bride's parents, on Plainfield avenue, 7 o'clock Wednesday evening, occurred the marriage of Miss Hattie Maltby, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Maltby, and Mr. Hugh H. Kendall of Corning, N. Y. Rev. J. P. Taylor, rector of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, was the officiating clergyman. A reception followed at the bride's residence, after which the newly-wedded couple left on an evening train for a trip in the South, returning to Corning about Feb. 1.

Wins on Any Side of the Question.

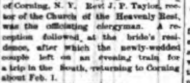
Three opinions recently delivered—one by Chief Justice Fuller in the Supreme Court of the United States, one by Judge Coxe in the United States Circuit Court, and one by Judge Ingraham in the New York Supreme Court—all upon the question of trade-mark infringement, were each in favor of the clients represented by ex-Councilman Rowland Cox of this city. Yet in one case Mr. Cox was for the appellees, in one case for the defendants, and in the other for the complainant.

Have The "White Caps" Organized Here?

Mr. Edward Staats, a very faithful and inoffensive colored lad in the employ of Messrs Maynard & Hill, of Park avenue, received the letter below through the postoffice, this city, Wednesday morning.

The letter is written in red, and the paper is headed with roughly drawn pictures of pistols, coffins, skulls and bones. Mr. Staats is naturally very much worried and will probably go home early nights for some time to come. This is the letter:

Mr Edward Staats, Plainfield, N. J.



You are hereby notified that you must be in your house at ten o'clock at night hereafter and not later than half-past ten you and your friend Alonzo Dunham we will not warn you again by order of district No. 7, order of white caps.

Death of An Estimable Woman.

It is with profound sorrow that we record the death of Ida May, the beloved wife of John H. Tier, Jr., which occurred at her home on Bank Place, at a few minutes before two o'clock of morning Jan. 17 from puerperal fever, after an illness covering a period of about nine days. The deceased was both well and favorably known, and was possessed of many friends and acquaintances who had learned to love her in life and will now mourn her loss.

Mrs. Tier was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Austin Sturtevant of Orchard Place, this city. Her marriage relationship with Mr. Tier extends back for a period of several years, during which time two children came to bless the union—the younger, a babe about nine days old.

The deceased was noted for her kind and loving disposition, and her sudden demise, while yet in young womanhood, will cast a gloom over a host of relatives and friends, and the community at large will join in extending sympathy to the bereaved family.

THE PARK HOUSE.

January 17 the Park House was the scene of pleasure and enjoyment, it being the occasion of a sociable given under the auspices and management of four of Plainfield's young members of society, Messrs John L. Force, Frank Putnam, James B. Blair and Frank H. Smith. By invitation fifty couple of young people from this city, Somerville, Bound Brook, Dunellen, Westfield, New York and Brooklyn, assembled at the above mentioned well-known house, and enjoyed themselves in dancing until early morn.

The spacious quarters of the house were thrown open for the enjoyment of those who were so fortunate as to receive printed invitations. Prof. Frazee furnished the music which is sufficient to say was of the best. Refreshments were served by the committee in a manner and style that any caterer would be proud of. In the brilliantly lighted parlors, the ladies, with their handsome attire and faces, and the gentlemen in their evening dress, made the scene one of attraction and pleasure, and the gentlemen who composed the committee are to be congratulated upon the first attempt, to be succeeded later, in furnishing their friends with such an enjoyable entertainment.

AN INTERESTING SUIT.

An interesting law suit brought by Mr. P. Ageny against Rev. Frederick W. Grant, both of North Plainfield, came up for trial before Justice Crossley and a jury in Spencer's Hall, on Saturday afternoon. The following persons constituted the jury: Messrs King, Blackford, Smalley, Stout, Weaver, Winckler, Morse, Bauersachs, Campbell, Linbarger, Colther, Whitlock. The case occupied all of Saturday afternoon and evening, and attracted many spectators.

The case was an action in tort brought to recover $200 damages from Rev. Mr. Grant for the alleged depriving of Mr. Ageny of the services, control and companionship of the latter's daughter, Mary Ellen, aged 17 years, who had hired out as a domestic in the family of the defendant. It appears that Mr. Ageny is a Catholic by faith, and the defendant is a Plymouth Brethren. The girl, it is said, neglected her religious duties in the Catholic church, and was converted as a Protestant.

The defence proved that the girl had not been enticed away, either from home or from her religious doctrines; furthermore, she had exercised her own discretion in the matter of selecting her religion. The girl had declared that she would rather die, than go home, as her father had threatened to send her to a convent.

Several witnesses testified for and against the prosecution, and about eleven o'clock on Saturday night the case was given to the jury. After a half-hour's deliberation the jury brought in a verdict of "no cause for action." Messrs Jackson & Codington and E. V. Lindabury appeared for the plaintiff, and Mr. W. A. Codington represented the defendant.

Death of Mrs. John Vosseller.

The death is announced of Emily E., wife of Mr. John Vosseller, which occurred at her home on North Front street, on the 17th inst., from epilepsy. She was in the 54th year of her age. The funeral took place from the M. E. church at Bound Brook, at 2:30 o'clock, Monday.

One of Each Kind, Now.

The hearty congratulations and sincere good wishes of their hosts of friends, will at once go out to Mr. and Mrs. Thomas S. Armstrong when it is learned by these presents that a little girl arrived Monday morning to fill their home on Duer street with gratification, and happiness, and sunshine, and, possibly, a healthy scream or two.

We May be Happy Yet.

No sleighs have been lowered from their lofts thus far this Winter, and liverymen, as well as others interested in having much snow and good "seasonable" weather, are not quite happy. Only wait a bit; it need not be long before all is changed. We may, as the country folks put it, have "six weeks' sleighing in February" alone, although it is the shortest month of the year.

Faithful Whatsoever His Duties.

Mr. Francis E. Marsh, Chairman of the Common Council Committee on Streets, is proving himself as faithful a committeeman as he was efficient as a presiding officer.

He was to be seen Monday actively engaged in personally overseeing and directing the men at work opening the gutters and making the public thoroughfares passable for pedestrians. The city lost nothing by the succession of Councilman Dumont.

Broke His Hip.

Newton Buzzard, on Monday, slid from the roof of one of the houses being erected by Mr. John W. Moore, at Front street and Washington avenue. The fall was a long and hard one, but, fortunately, the victim just escaped striking on a picket fence that would probably have killed him.

Buzzard is in the employ of Odam the roofer, and was making ready to begin a job of slating. He was picked up after his fall and taken to his home on Sycamore street where Dr. W. C. Boone attended him. It is feared his hip is broken, besides other injuries.

The Street Sweeping Nuisance.

The matter of sweeping the street-crossings, is getting to be an almost intolerable nuisance. At some of the crossings, recently, a half-dozen ragged boys collected, and enticed pennies from the pockets of pedestrians. The worst feature of the business is the fact that the boys are so very bold, and in some instances they will follow ladies nearly half a block, soliciting pennies. Then again if you happen to pass over the same crossing on your way, both to and from town, the boys do not hesitate to ask for a penny the second time.

Have the People no Redress?

We are able to state on the authority of a member of the Board of Health, that the story published in the news about diseased cows at the Johnston dairy, is utterly false.

To quiet the nervousness of some who were using the milk, the Board made an examination of the matter and the premises and report the dairy to be the pink of cleanliness and the cows all in perfect health.

It is unfortunate, to say the least, that there should continue to exist any longer in the community a sheet that will wilfully publish fakes to frighten the credulous and ruin the business of honest men.

Bishop Vincent in Plymouth Pulpit

In Plymouth church New York, Sunday evening, a Chautauqua service was held, and in spite of the storm there was a large attendance. Bishop John H. Vincent, Chancellor of the Chautauqua University, and formerly a resident here, delivered the address of the evening. Among other things he said that the Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle protested against the idea that a man was an educated man who was simply learned in one direction. They thought that the higher education was for only certain classes of people. Bishop Vincent thought that the principle of the circle was, that true education embraced the culture of the entire man.

Good Shooting.

There was an interesting shooting match on the grounds of the Union Gun Club at Springfield, N. J., January 16, the attendance being large and the shooters mostly from among the members of the Middlesex Gun Club. As usual, Plainfield's representative—Charley Smith—was the champion, he killing 38 birds straight, and winning first in each sweepstakes. The "Dutch" seemed to have "shooting clothes" on and took Holland in fine shape. Even such all-around good shots as "Uncle Billy" Siegler, Enoch Miller, Gus Manitz, Dr. Conover, and Lindsley, failed to knock Charley out. Mr. Jacob Pentz acted as official scorer in his usual efficient manner. The shoot was a success and a credit to the Union Gun Club.

Sociable at Hope Chapel.

An evening sociable, under the auspices of the Hope Chapel Temperance Society, was held in the Chapel, January 16, and notwithstanding the rain storm which prevailed at the time, about 200 persons were present. Mr. Amos Andrews announced the numbers from an informal programme, which included a duett by Mrs. King and Miss Hawkins; a piano solo by Mr. Carpenter; addresses by Rev. E. H. Stewart; choruses by members of the Society; duetts by Miss Martin and Miss Sears, and recitations in German and Irish dialects by Mr. J. H. Carney.

Messrs George Fountain, John Evans, Fred Seers and Joseph Brown each contributed some vocal selections, the latter rendering "The Stowaway" in good style. Refreshments were served in abundance for all present.

"THE CHURCH AND THE SALOON."

Notwithstanding the severe storm which prevailed during Sunday evening, a large and appreciative audience gathered in the M. E. church to hear Rev. C. B. Mitchell, the pastor, deliver a sermon on "Churches or Saloons, Which?"

The learned speaker clearly and forcibly illustrated what a great blessing the church is to the world; how it had elevated mankind; how it had built up the benevolent institutions of the land. Wherever Christianity goes, the speaker said, the church lifts up humanity; you can trace its footsteps into better civilization; it has made a better mode of laws, established on the Bible, which is the foundation of the church. Moreover the church stands ready to relieve want and destitution.

On the other hand, what have been the fruits of the saloons? If the liquor business has been the cause of erecting colleges and fostering education, then the people should vote and pray for its maintenance. But it is just the reverse. The saloons not only increase degradation and pauperism, but they increase the indebtedness of the country. The saloon, the speaker compared to a parasite on the community; it sucks blood from the people's pockets without making any reparation for it.

Mr. Mitchell said he could not see how a Christian could sustain the liquor traffic. If it is wrong, he continued, it is eternally wrong. The time has come when the saloon is trying to make itself dominant, and either the saloon or Christian civilization must go down.

Deserved Honor.

At a special meeting of the Board of Directors of the New Jersey Game and Fish Protective Society, held at Force's Hotel, this city, January 16, Hon. John Ulrich was unanimously chosen as Counsel for the Society.

Death of Mrs. Julia Westcote.

At the home of her daughter, Mrs. A. Utter, occurred the death, at an early hour morning Jan. 17, of Mrs. Julia Westcote, an elderly lady, aged 83 years. The deceased's infirmities have confined her to the house much of the time of late, although she was able to attend the funeral of the late Mrs. Dr. Stillman, recently. Old age is assigned as the cause of death.

Caught His Arm in the Belting

Mr. Charles Randolph, operator of the old Hotchkiss mill, located along Green Brook, near Farragut avenue, met with a painful accident at the mill between five and 6 o'clock, evening Jan. 17. He was at work in the mill at the time, when in some unaccountable manner his right arm caught in the belting, terribly twisting the arm and fracturing the bone in two places. He was taken to his home on Madison avenue, where a physician dressed the wounds.

The Features of the W. C. T. U. Meetings.

The subject of the W. C. T. U. meeting Thursday of this week, 3 P. M., at 73 West Front street, will be the "Kitchen Garden" and its influence upon the pupils and their homes. It promises to be very interesting as well as instructive.

The question box, (a special feature of all these meetings), affords any one who may desire information an opportunity to bring questions, which are answered from the chair. All—whether ladies or gentlemen—who are interested in the departments of work in which the W. C. T. U. are engaged, and which are from week to week presented at these meetings, are most cordially invited to be present.

Should Take and Read the Local Paper.

Not a single family in this country and in this age of intelligence should be without a local newspaper coming regularly into their homes. The newspaper is the educator of the age. It is therefore, invaluable. No matter in what station of life a man may be, he should read his local paper, and every member of his family should do the same. No man able to support a family is too poor to pay the price of subscription to at least one newspaper, and if only one can be afforded, let it be the local newspaper. In a single issue frequently will be found information worth more than the price of a year's subscription.

He'll Get There Just the Same.

A PRESS reporter was recently given an opportunity to inspect the stable of First Assistant Chief Eugene A. Laine of the Fire Department, located on East Front street. With the exception of the absence of a steamer, the interior of the stable represents a miniature engine house, with patent snap-harness suspended from the ceiling, ready to be placed in position in case of emergency. The Chief also has a faithful horse stabled there, which is evidently more enlightened than some men. The animal is becoming quite proficient in Fire Department matters, and is of great value to its owner, whose main object is to reach a fire as soon as possible after it is discovered. Chief Laine showed commendable enterprise in thus equipping himself.

The Head of an Electrical Engineering Company.

In a New York electrical review recently, appeared the following of interest to the many friends in this city of the gentleman spoken of:

"Mr. Alex. P. Wright, the managing director of the Wright Electrical Engineering Company of Boston, was in New York last week, making arrangements for carrying on the work of the new company. Mr. Wright is one of the best electrical engineers in the country, and in certain lines is without an equal. His long experience has qualified him for the planning and execution of all classes of electrical contracts in the light and power field, and he now starts under the most favorable auspices. The company will make a name for itself."

FALSE, AS USUAL.

The news had an article a few days ago, alleging that pleuro-pneumonia had broken out among a herd of cattle at the Netherwood Farm, and Mr. S. R. Wheeler, the manager of the farm, went into the news office the next day and threatened to annihilate the editor if he did not contradict the false statement. It is needless to say that the editor swallowed his own words, but he still keeps harping on the alleged plague, which is plain evidence that he feels hurt at being compelled to retract what little he does write.

As a matter of duty, Messrs L. W. Serrell, O. B. Leonard and Geo. W. Rockfellow, representing the City Board of Health, personally visited and inspected the Netherwood Farm, Tuesday afternoon. Mr. Wheeler, the manager, was only too glad to show the visitors around, and led them into every nook and corner about the place. The Board unanimously declared that the place was one of the cleanest in the State, and there was not a trace of disease among the cattle there.

The cattle belong to Mr. J. Herbert Johnston, a son of the late President of the N. J. Central Railroad, who is now journeying with his sister on the way to Jerusalem. Copies of the news' articles have been forwarded to him, and Mr. Wheeler is now anxiously awaiting word from Mr. Johnston authorizing him to begin proceedings against the news for damages. There is no doubt that any body of intelligent men would award Mr. Johnston heavy damages for the attacks made upon him, by those taking advantage of his absence.

Mr. Kaerth's Misconception.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—Evidently "E. L." has not given the subject his full attention, or he would stick more closely to the question. The subject is—not whether the Council is compelled to grant a license, but whether they have a right to declare illiteracy illegal in a property holder.

I still contend that the ordinance interferes with the State law inasmuch as the state law does not designate in what form a person's name is to be attached to an application, whereas the ordinance does. Does "E. L." contend in case where, in lieu of x signers, an applicant should procure ten reputable Hebrew property owners, unable to write their names in English, the application should be rejected because names are signed in characters? If not, why should that be any different from x's?

Does it follow that because a person cannot read and write he is not of good, moral character, or that he cannot distinguish between right and wrong? I would like to hear a little more on this subject, as there are several besides myself that would like to be enlightened.

Yours very respectfully,
CARL KAERTH.

P. S.—Why should the ordinance exempt a property owner on whose premises is situated a saloon? Is he any more moral than his fellow-men who cannot write? C. K.

[The Charter of the City of Plainfield, enacts: "That the Common Council of said city, or a majority thereof, shall have the exclusive right and power to regulate and prohibit the sale of spirituous and fermented liquors within said city." They can demand, if they choose, that every signer of an application must wear side whiskers.—ED.]

[illegible] Land Improvement Co.

The above is the title given to a party of Plainfield capitalists who own perhaps the largest tract of land in Florida, the extent of which is about 95,000 acres. Messrs Theo. French and John H. Honeyman who went South recently to explore the land, report having captured 1,200 fine logs which were cut from the land belonging to the company. The logs were cut without the knowledge or consent of the stockholders, and were on the way to the saw-mill when apprehended by the owners.

A Great Discovery.

The fact that castor oil, as vile a medicine as was ever discovered, has so long held its own as a laxative, is because, until HAMBURG FIGS were discovered, no medicine could take its place. Now, however, ladies and children take HAMBURG FIGS, and like them. 25 cents. Dose, one fig. J. G. Miller, Agent, Plainfield.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Just time enough since the Holidays to take breath and settle down to business. We have been looking about a bit to see what others engaged in the same line of business as ourselves are saying and doing.

It's funny, to say the least, to read the announcements. Here's one who thinks he has a monopoly of all the good clothing made in the world; no clothing but his is fit to wear. Here's another who thinks his method of business the only proper one; all others are "dead" wrong. A third says his clothing is 30 per cent. cheaper than any other. All sorts of inducements are offered, on paper, to attract buyers.

What are we doing? Well we find that the old method of giving an honest dollar's worth for a dollar, without bragging, to be more popular than ever, judged by the growth of our business during 1888. We say this and know it to be true: Not a real point of advantage to be obtained anywhere will be forfeited by dealing with us. Our bid for your patronage for 1889 is the same which we have made for a quarter of a century.

Honest statements about our goods; garments perfect in fit; minute attention to all details connected with the manufacture; and prices which, comparing the goods, cannot be beaten. It will pay you to watch our announcements during the present year. It will save you not a little uncertaintw and a good deal of time and money to patronize us when in need of clothes for self or children.

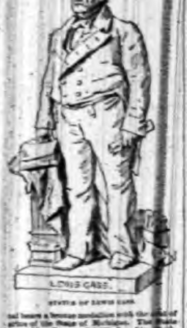
WASHINGTON LETTER.

Statuary Hall and Its Interesting Collection of Art Work—A Recent Accession of the Statue of Lewis Cass.

(Special Correspondence.)

Statuary Hall in the Capitol at Washington has lately received one of the most important pieces of sculpture, the statue of Lewis Cass, by D. C. French, the young [illegible] sculptor. Mr. French is a son of the [illegible] Assistant Secretary French, of the Treasury Department. [illegible]

[illegible]



STATUE OF LEWIS CASS.

[illegible] a bronze medallion with the [illegible] of the State of Michigan. The State pays Mr. French $20,000 for his work. The figure is heroic in size, and there was no place in Statuary Hall where it would show to good advantage except on the spot occupied by the [illegible] of Ethan Allen, or the Ethan Allen was moved a few feet away to the side of the hall and the Cass statue placed where the Ethan Allen had stood.

There now remains but one available spot in the hall for a statue. All the spaces in the circumference of the chamber and along the southern side, where the speaker's desk stood when the House of Representatives occupied the room, are [illegible] filled up with the exception of one small space. On this southern side of the chamber stand bronze statues of Governor Allen, of Ohio, and President Garfield, both by Niehaus. [illegible] figure of Muhlenberg, the [illegible] of Pennsylvania, who was the first Speaker of the American Congress under the Constitution. [illegible] Statuary Hall. The general law governing the use of the chamber provides that there shall be admitted to it only statues of distinguished citizens of States, and that they shall be approved works of art.

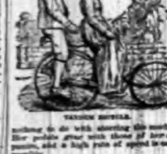
THE TANDEM BICYCLE.

The Latest Invention for Those Who Enjoy the Wheel—A Tandem Bicycle for Ladies.

The latest thing for lovers is the lady's tandem bicycle. It is an English idea, none the less popular in this country on that account. In Brooklyn, Boston, Washington and other cities where there are good pavements it is rapidly coming into vogue. Its construction is, in the main, similar to that of the ordinary safety machine, the wheels being similar and propelled by gearing connected with the pedals.

The front wheel is considerably smaller than the main wheel, and the seats are on standards low and strong. The lady's seat is between the two wheels a little back of the center of the machine. The gentleman's seat is over the large wheel in the rear. Upon him devolves the greater part of the duty of propulsion and the guidance of the vehicle. The lady has hand rests by which to make her seat more firm, but has nothing to do with steering the machine. Her pedals gear with those of her companion, and a high rate of speed is easily possible.

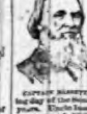


TANDEM BICYCLE.

All the advantages of safety machines are secured, and the tandem is a very delightful machine to ride. As a matter of fact, bicycles are far safer than tricycles, and some of the most terrible accidents that have occurred to ladies in the pastime of wheeling have occurred to those riding tricycles. They are bulky, hard to steer, slow of speed, confusing in their movements and liable to frightful headers on bad pavements. The safety tandem has never been known to break any limbs.

An Old-Time Senate Employe.

Uncle Isaac Bassett, as every body calls the venerable old man who acts as virtual Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, celebrated the other day the fifty-seventh anniversary of his appointment to a Senate position. He was appointed a page by Daniel Webster in the first session of the Twenty-first Congress, or in the winter of 1831. In all the interval he has been employed in the Senate and not absent more than a day at a time. He has been right in the chamber and on duty nearly every minute of every working day of the Senate in all these fifty-seven years. Uncle Isaac was born in Washington August 5, 1819. When he is seventy he is going to publish his reminiscences—a work that will abound in good stories and a great deal of historical material. He knew well all the great men of the last half century—Clay, Webster, Douglas, Calhoun, Sumner, Jeff Davis, Ben Toombs, Ben Hill and scores of statesmen who have occupied the admiration of the country at some time or other. Captain Bassett looks very much like Senator Joe Brown, of Georgia, having long white hair and beard like "Old Joe." One of Uncle Isaac's notable duties is to turn back the hands of the clock at the close of every session in order to have important bills passed and signed.



CAPTAIN BASSETT.

Furnishing Up the House.

"That painting," exclaimed the art dealer to Mr. Hayward and his wife, "is the work of Rosa Bonheur, and is called 'The Horse Fair.'"

"By gum!" said Mr. Hayward to his wife, "I'm a good mind to buy one if it don't cost too much. How that picture would please the children."—Life.

"Mr. Browne," said the waitress, "you sent me the wrong check. This is drawn to the order of the Board of Water Commissioners."

"Why, so it is," replied Mr. Browne, and then he added: "Natural mistake, though. Mr. Pump—very."—Harper's Bazar.

JUDGE BOYLE.

The Late Chief-Justice of Washington Territory.

The late Chief Justice Boyle, of Washington Territory, was a very prominent figure in Congress until his failure to secure a renomination to the Fiftieth Congress. He was born in Uniontown, Pa., and lived there all his life until President Cleveland appointed him Chief Justice of Washington Territory. He was a graduate of Waynesburg College, and was admitted to the bar in 1865, at the age of twenty-five. From that time on he continuously practiced his profession. Before he had been at the bar a year he was elected district-attorney for his county, and held the office three years. Before the expiration of his term he was elected to the State Legislature, and was again re-elected.

He occupied a prominent place in the Democratic party of his State. In 1880 he was nominated as the Democratic candidate for Auditor-General of Pennsylvania, but failed of election. He was a delegate to the National convention at St. Louis in 1876, to the Cincinnati convention in 1880 and to the Chicago convention of 1884. He was elected to the Forty-eighth Congress, and re-elected to the Forty-ninth.

THE LATE JUDGE BOYLE.

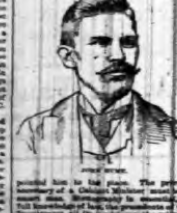
He achieved special prominence during the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress as chairman of the special committee appointed to investigate the Pan-Electric telephone combination. His work resulted in a majority report exonerating Attorney-General Garland, Indian Commissioner Atkins and others who were alleged to be implicated in a scheme to bring the great power of the Government to their aid in breaking up the Bell telephone patents.

JOHN HUME.

The Youngest Private Secretary in Washington.

The youngest private secretary in any of the departments at Washington is John Hume, a Wisconsin boy, nineteen years old. He was born at Chilton, in the land of the Winnebagoes, and was brought up on venison and cranberries, two of the leading staples of that section of the State. As soon as he was old enough he and his brother owned and edited the Chilton Times, a paper founded by their father, and one of the brightest and strongest local papers in the Badger State. Mr. Hume's father was a Democratic politician of prominence. Two years ago, desiring to see more of life, "Johnny" Hume went to Washington and took a clerkship in the House of Representatives.

Keeping his eyes and ears open he became a good deal wiser and when Colonel Vilas laid down the post-office portfolio to become Secretary of the Interior he could think of nobody better able to assist him as private secretary than Hume, so he appointed him to the place. The private secretary of a Cabinet Minister must be a smart man. [illegible] full knowledge of both the precedents of the Department, all the machinery, the relation of the various bureaus, and the entire [illegible] of a mighty Government [illegible] as familiar to him as his A B C's. Mr. Hume was preceded [illegible] in the place over ten years, and had served under Zach Chandler, Carl Schurz, Governor Kirkwood, Secretary Teller, Judge Lamar, and for several months with Colonel Vilas. He was regarded as the best man who had ever held the place. Mr. Hume has [illegible] in the time he has been private secretary that he has a capacity equal to Mr. [illegible] record.



JOHN HUME.

Cunning Swallows.

Birds are often said to possess instinct, as distinguished from intelligence, by which is meant, apparently, that such knowledge as they have is inherited, not acquired. "A bird always builds its nest in one way," it is said, but first statements could be less exact.

Our common cliff swallows, known also as the eave swallow and the "Republican," formerly built against the face of a cliff, and as a protection against the weather, the nest, instead of being open at the top, had bottle-shaped, the entrance being through a kind of neck at the side. Now that the country has become populous, however, this swallow has taken to nesting under the eaves of barns, where it is shielded from rain by the overhanging roof.

Little by little, therefore, the wise bird has given up its more elaborate method of construction, till now you may see side by side nests that are simple mud saucers, nests that are built in the old-fashioned bottle-shaped, and nests half way between the two extremes, showing plainly that a process of adaptation is going on.

A Pennsylvania newspaper lately reported a very clever piece of work by a pair of these same cave swallows. They had built a nest in the old style under the eaves of a barn, and when it was done an English sparrow took possession.

The swallows made frantic efforts to dislodge the intruder, but could not drive her out. Then they went deliberately to work and plastered up the neck of the bottle with mud, burying the sparrow alive, after which they built another nest close by and occupied it as if nothing had happened.—Youth's Companion.

The original of Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett's "Little Lord Fauntleroy" is her own son Vivian, an extremely lovable boy, now twelve years old.

SEMI-ANNUAL ROUND-UP.

How the Cowboys in the West Collect and Brand Cattle.

Expert Lassoists Who "Heel" the Calves and Drag Them Up to the Fire—Hard Work Accompanied by All sorts of Privation and Danger.

The word "round-up," so often seen in print, is known by most people to be a Western term, but its real significance is not generally known, says a Denver letter to the Philadelphia Press.

On the northern ranges in Dakota, Montana and Wyoming Territories the cattle are all allowed to run at large through the winter and summer. They do not stray a great distance off, however, and unless stampeded may usually be found within thirty miles or so of their respective ranges.

To collect these immense herds of cattle in the spring and fall is no easy matter, and to do this a "round-up" is formed. This is made up by the owners of the ranches which are on the same range sending a "round-up" outfit and their quota of cowboys.

A "round-up" outfit consists of, besides the indispensable cowboys, a camp-wagon drawn by four horses or mules, at least five horses for each cowboy, branding irons, cooking utensils, and last, but not least, a cook, who generally drives the wagon.

These respective representatives of the different ranches meet at the end of their range of district and slowly go through the country, collecting and branding the cattle and calves. The wagons do not drive more than ten or fifteen miles a day, but the cowboys in search of cattle ride sixty or seventy miles. This is where the necessity for each cowboy having so many horses comes in.

The cattle collected during the day's riding are all driven to the nearest ranch where there is a corral. Cattle are not collected every day, as the cowboys stop every other day to brand the cattle caught. The cattle collected in a day's ride by a "round-up" of forty cowboys make an immense herd. This herd is watched very carefully during the night, and the next morning the work of "rounding them out" begins.

"Rounding-out" is the term applied to separating the cattle of different brands from the herd. This is difficult work and is done only by very expert cowboys. They ride into the herd, and when they find one of their own brand they slowly drive it out from the bunch. When it is driven out it is taken in charge by another cowboy, who drives it to a small herd which is entirely composed of cattle of its own brand. It will take two or three hours to get the large herd separated into as many small herds as there brands are represented in the "round-up."

After the small herd is separated the cows with calves and unbranded cattle are rounded out from the branded cattle. The branded cattle are put into a herd and driven several miles back over the same ground and turned loose. A fire is built in a corner of the corral, where the "round-up" is, the bars are let down, and one of the herds of cows with calves and unbranded cattle are driven in.

Two ropers walk their ponies into the corral, the bars are put up, the brands of the man who owns the cattle in the corral are heated in the fire. The work of branding begins.

The ropers ride around the corral, swinging their ropes around their heads. As they ride single calves on the edge of the herd their lassoes leave their hands with a snap and wind around the calves' two hind legs. This is called "heeling," and is a great deal more difficult to do than catch them by the neck. The calves when caught are dragged up to the fire, where they are held and branded. Branding does not take long and soon the corral is ready for the next herd. The ropers are quite expert with the lasso and keep the men at the fire busy. The calves are not only branded to mark them, but some owners cut their ears in different shapes. Other owners even go so far as to cut one of the ears off entirely. After a herd that is marked this way has left the corral the ground is sometimes covered with ears. In almost every herd that is driven into the corral there are some cattle that were not branded the year before, and these have to be handled more carefully or else they gore the handler.

One of the ropers walks his horse around until he sees a good chance, when, quick as a flash, he catches the steer by the hind legs. The steer knows he is caught, and turns at the man who caught him. As soon as he turns the other roper throws his lasso around the animal's horns, which holds him fast. The steer is thus held fast, and in that condition is branded. When done the lasso around his head is taken off and he is allowed to rise.

When all the cattle are branded they are driven back over the same ground that the "round-up" traversed the day before, and turned loose.

On the "round-up" each man leaves his horses to the care of men called "wranglers," who keep the horses in herds which are easily guarded. Every morning one of the herds is driven in near the wagons, and after breakfast some good lasso-thrower stands near the herd, and as the cowboys come after horses he catches ponies for them. So the cowboys do not ride their own horses but have to take whatever is given to them. Some of the horses are "bucking bronchos." Any one may be the unfortunate man that gets a "bucking broncho."

Breakfast on round-up is at three o'clock, and by four the wagons are all moving and the cowboys are riding off in different directions. They ride all morning and at noon stop an hour for dinner. After dinner they change horses and start out again.

Life on the round-up is hard work. The cowboys are in all sorts of danger, have to sleep on the ground, rain or snow, ride hard one day and work hard the next at branding.

Small Bits of Soap.

Careful housewives save even the small bits of soap that have become too little to use. Melt the pieces all together, put in a small bit of Indian meal and a few drops of perfumery. Let this harden in any shape desired, stamp on a pattern, or cut with a cake-cutter, and the result is a pleasing soap for toilet use. Other bits of soap can be melted in water, and while the mixture is hot stir in oatmeal until there is a stiff batter. For a hand soap this is unequaled when much dirt or deep stains of ink or berries are to be removed. The common yellow soap melted and thickened with scouring sand makes an excellent soap for scrubbing and scouring.

How Old Shoes Are Utilized.

Old shoes have uses as raw material for certain industries. In many countries abroad and to some extent in the United States they are collected with care, ripped apart and the leather subjected to treatment that renders it soft and makes it available for sundry purposes. Patterns are stamped upon it, trunks are covered with it, and it is also used for making shoes again. The soles are extensively used in making heels for ladies' and children's shoes. The nails also are saved and made profitable, and the useless scraps are converted into fertilizers.

A Sincere Criticism.

"No," said the dramatic critic to the theater manager. "No, my dear Phalen, there is no use in trying to defend this new piece of yours. It's bad from the word go—lart, plump, dire—no use to anybody. The construction's bad, and the dialogue would wear out a set of false teeth. I'll let you down as easy as I know how in the paper; but it's bad. By the way, gimme three seats for Monday night, will you? Some of my wife's family are coming to town, and I mean to find out when they're going back."—Puck.

CRUEL BUT EFFECTIVE.

Summary Method of Freeing a Town of Thieving Tramps.

A correspondent of the Las Vegas (N. M.) Optic is responsible for the following: More than thirty years ago the writer of these lines was a very young teacher in a female seminary in a small village of a Southern State. The village, far away from the great thoroughfares of the State, and without any railroad facility, was very quiet, and the appearance of the old mail stage, which passed our "Tusculum" three times a week, was the greatest event of the day.

The principal of the seminary, an old, venerable Methodist preacher, was undoubtedly the first man in the village. He was an Englishman of good family, a great English scholar and of a mild and kind disposition. Although but every body's friend—for he knew the old German proverb, "Every body's friend, nobody's friend"—he was anywhere beloved by old and young.

The life in our village was a regular "idyl;" all the inhabitants, white and black, were acquainted; we knew the owners of every cow, pig, horse and mule; we knew the circumstances of every body, and secrets were in every respect an impossibility.

Suddenly the good villagers were aroused in a terrible manner by the news, "Tramps in the village!" It was an awful, but glorious time. The public square, marked by four youthful trees, was made the headquarters of a vigilance committee, every young man was armed and the excitement grew higher, reaching the superlative form, when the news came Mrs. Brown and Mr. Dixon were missing several hens and turkeys.

A general order was given out. The vigilance committee, provided with guns and ammunition, should be in full force at the public square by nine p. m.; no excuse was allowed. The password was "Bunker Hill," and the humble author of this little novel was made auditor of the committee, of course without gun and powder, because I made an open confession that the only powder I knew was harmless tooth powder and gunpowder was not exactly my fancy.

Ten minutes past nine our commander-in-chief gave the order to "March, march," and silently, but every one a hero, the committeemen were marching to their different stations. A little after ten two tramps were captured, each one with a corpse detect on his belt, of course no scalps; but one had a turkey and the other an old hen, and both fowls were recognized by Mr. Dixon as his property.

We had no judge, no sheriff, and no jail in our village; what should we do with our prisoners? The question was settled in a moment. A court-martial was formed; both prisoners confessed their guilt, and were sentenced to receive, we were in the South and slavery and the whip around us, twenty lashes, with pepper and salt. An overseer of a plantation in the neighborhood, well experienced in such affairs, executed the sentence of the high court, and for years the good villagers never heard any thing of a tramp.

HAD NO UPPER TEETH.

That Is Why Two Excellent Cows Were Sold for a Mere Song.

A Lake George hotel-keeper, combining also farming with his business, and priding himself somewhat on his skill at the latter avocation, some years ago after the season was over desired to sell a pair of cows, the milk of which was no longer needed, as his boarders had left. Among his friends, says the Albany (N. Y.) Journal, was a man who every fall bought cattle, and in whom he had confidence as a square dealer. The cow buyer came along one day and the hotel-keeper informed him that he had two cows for sale. The pair went out into the field to look at the cows, and among other things in recommending them, the hotel man said, what he thought was true, that they were not more than ten years old, and named a price for them which was as low, if not lower, than the market value. The buyer then looked into the cows mouths and observed that they had no teeth on the upper jaw, and that he was afraid they could not masticate their food sufficiently well to be fattened. The hotel-keeper, who is exceedingly conscientious, then said that he had no use for the cows, and that if the buyer could use them he might have them for ten dollars less than the first price named. The bargain was struck, the money paid and the cows driven away, the hotel man glad that he had gotten rid of his toothless bovines. The next spring, on looking at some cows with which to stock his farm with milkers for the boarding season, he bethought himself of his previous fall's experience in selling cows, and looked into the mouth of a well-recommended milch cow, and discovered that, though said to be only nine years old, she had no teeth in the upper jaw. With the injured air of a man on whom a swindle was attempted, he indignantly told the owner of the cow that she was older than nine years, so old in fact that she had lost her upper front teeth. The farmer began to laugh immoderately, and the hotel man, on inquiring the cause of the mirth, was asked if he did not know that cows never had any upper front teeth. He said no, and was not convinced until the farmer had shown him the jaws of several other bovines of undoubted youth. The cow-buyer friend since then has not stood high with the hotel man for probity, but he accords him high rank as a practical joker. The parties to the above transaction are two of the best known men in Warren County.

A CANNIBAL'S HOUSE.

Description of a Queer Hut Adorned with Skulls of Eaten Men.

The Truth-Seeker gives the following description of a cannibal's house: There are two large posts in front, eighty feet high, on which rests the large peaked shade, around which there hangs a graceful fringe of young sago leaf. The front is about thirty feet wide, and the whole length of the house is 100 feet, tapering gradually down to the back, where it is small. Our compartment is about twenty feet high and ten feet broad. The front is a common platform, floored with the outer skin of the sago palm, and kept beautifully clean. The whole is divided into courts, with divisions of cocoanut leaves, nine feet high, on which hang various figures, not at all good looking. From the top of the cocoanut leaves hang graceful curtains of the young frond of the sago palm. Standing on the platform in front and looking down the whole length along the passage or hall, with the various divisions and their curtains, it has a wonderful effect. In each of the courts are numerous skulls of men, women and children, crocodiles and bears; also many breasts of the cassowary. All are carved and many painted. The human skulls are of those who have been killed and eaten. The daintiest dish here is man, and it is considered that only fools refuse and despise it. In the last court there are the same kinds of ornaments, and then a screen with curiously formed things of wood and native cloth hangings on it; also sibis (their only clothing), belts, small bags and other things belonging to those murdered, which have been presented to the gods.

The population of Germany, according to the last census, is 46,855,704.

An Insane Congressman.

Congressman James Thompson Maffett, one of the Pennsylvania delegation, has gone insane from overwork in the late campaign. Judge Maffett is a tall, large, fine-looking gentleman, full bearded and possessing a strong physiognomy. He was born in Clarion County, Pa., and is fifty-one years old. His education was received at Dickinson College, and soon after graduating he became a pioneer in California, mingling the digging of gold with the study of law. The latter becoming more attractive than fortune hunting, he returned to Pennsylvania to complete his law studies; was admitted to the bar, and has practiced since at Clarion. In 1880 he was a Republican Presidential elector and in 1886 he came very near being nominated for Congress.

THE FREEHOLDERS PROCEEDINGS.

[OFFICIAL.]

ELIZABETH, N. J., Jan. 3, 1889.

Regular meeting of the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union, held on Thursday, January 3, 1889, at 2.30 o'clock p. m.

Present—Director Hubbard, and Freeholders Bryant, Doty, Donahue, Howard, Houston, Jones, Kyte, Kleinhans, Pierson, Roll, Thompson, Vanderbeek, Van Saun, Wright, Whaley, West—17.

Absent—None.

The minutes of last meeting (omitting list of bills ordered paid) were read and on motion approved.

COMMUNICATIONS.

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union:

GENTLEMEN—We, the undersigned members of the bar of the county of Union, respectfully represent that they and all persons whose business calls them to examine the records of the county for deeds, mortgages, and other legal conveyances are greatly hindered and put to loss of time and expense, are compelled to interfere with official duties of the county clerk and his officers, and to suffer mutual annoyance, on account of the manner in which the daily entries of recorded instruments are kept. They also represent that under the present system mistakes are very likely to occur, and innocent parties put to great loss. They therefore ask that some new system may be adopted by which a daily entry may be made of every name appearing in each recorded instrument, and to which the public may have access at all times, or that some other system than the present be adopted, by which the public may be protected.

NERVOUS DISORDERS.

To Neglect Them Is Not Only Foolish But Absolutely Criminal.

In a lecture delivered before the Industrial Educational Association which met in New York a few months ago, the eminent Dr. William A. Hammond said:

"It is well for us to know that the emotions cause more unhappiness and crime than any other function of the brain. Human beings are governed by their emotions, and it is well that they should be, though it is emotions that wear away the brain. It is the emotions such as anxiety, fear, sorrow and love. I consider that eight hours are sufficient for a man to use his brain, because if he exceeds that time he becomes nervous and fretful, and an exhausted brain is an irritable brain. You may not feel the evil effects of the stress of brain work at the time, but you will sooner or later, when it will be too late. The men that work at night with their brains are the ones that expose themselves to danger and death, which will surely come unless the great strain on the mind is lightened.

"Any man that neglects the first warning of a brain or nervous system that is becoming exhausted, overtaxed or about to break down, is not only a fool but a criminal. These signs are not many, but they tell the story of coming dangers only too plainly. Headache, sleeplessness, irritability of temper, neuralgic pains about the head and heart, unrefreshful sleep, nervous dyspepsia, dull eyes, heaviness of the head and stupid feeling after meals, worry about trifles, unreasonable anger, tingling and numbness in the limbs, cold feet and hands, flushed face and burning ears, palpitation of the heart, and irregular, weak and unsteady pulse. When you note these symptoms beware; the brain and nerves are about to break down, and it may be insanity, perhaps death."

A Great Showing of Hands.

All who want the post-office let them hold up their hands.

So Says the World.

"You told me you'd ne'er been engaged,"
She said, with sad reproach;
"And here are three most tender notes
That on my claim encroach.
You dropped them in a bunch, last eve."
No flush his calm brow mounts;
"Mt. Desert heads them all, you see;
There's nothing there that counts."
ARISTINE ANDERSON.

"I LOVE you little, love you long," said Bertha, of Boston, aged seven, as she gave her rubber doll some violent gymnastic exercises. Thus does the heredity of a "course of reading" produce glorious results.

AN ORDINANCE

To amend an Ordinance entitled "An Ordinance to License Inns and Taverns and to Regulate and Prohibit the Sale of Spirituous and Fermented Liquors," adopted February 22, 1875; re-adopted March 8, 1875, notwithstanding the objections of the Mayor; amended by Ordinances approved June 3, 1879; December 7, 1881; December 19, 1882; January 30, 1885; November 16, 1886; December 31, 1887; February 7, 1888.

The Inhabitants of the City of Plainfield, by their Common Council do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. That section 13 of said ordinance, and section 3 of amendment of Dec. 31st, 1887, be and the same hereby are amended by striking out the word "twelve" where it occurs in said sections and substituting in lieu thereof the word "eleven."

SECTION 2. That section 17 of said ordinance be and the same hereby is amended by striking out the words and figures "five hundred dollars ($500,)" wherever they occur in said section and substituting in lieu thereof the words and figures "seven hundred dollars ($700)."

IN CHANCERY OF NEW JERSEY.

To Stevens S. Rowland:

By virtue of an order of the Court of Chancery of New Jersey made on the day of the date hereof in a cause wherein William Bartle is complainant and you and others are defendants, you are required to appear, plead, answer or demur to the bill of said complainant on or before the Ninth day of March next, or the said bill will be taken as confessed against you.

The said bill is filed for partition of certain lands in the village of Scotch Plains, in the Township of Fanwood, in the county of Union and State of New Jersey, of which Sarah Bartle died seized, and you are made defendant because you have recovered and now hold a judgment against Isaac Bartle, one of the tenants in common therein.

Dated January 8, 1889.

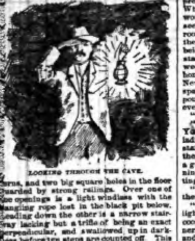
MUSHROOMS.

They Are Extensively Cultivated in a St. Louis Cave—Thousands of Square Feet of Surface Given to the Growth of the Edible Fungi—A Natural Cave Fifty Feet Under Ground—The Garden.

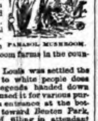
NEAR the north side of Benton Park, in the southern portion of the city, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, is a large tract of land unoccupied but for several small frame buildings standing without apparent purpose upon it. They are roughly constructed, unpainted, and carry nothing in the appearance to attract the attention of the passer, unless it be to wonder as to what use they can be put. The one most remote from the street alone has an entrance, and over the solitary door is the mandate, "No Admittance."

If the door happens to be unlocked, and a caller ignores the admonition against crossing the threshold, but little will be found to satisfy the eye, although there will be much to mystify and excite the curiosity. The total furnishing of the interior consists of half a dozen flambeau lamps and lanterns, and two big square holes in the floor guarded by strong railings. Over one of the openings is a light windlass with the dangling rope lost in the black pit below. Leading down the other is a narrow stairway lacking but a trifle of being an exact perpendicular, and swallowed up in darkness before ten steps are counted off. This is the condition of things to a dot. What it all means would probably puzzle 999 out of every 1,000 people in St. Louis to tell. The Globe-Democrat, however, will make every thing clear.



LOOKING THROUGH THE CAVE.

Lantern in hand descend the stairs dropping from the floor in the box in the building. Look out, for the steps are irregular. Down! Down! Down! Sixty feet below the surface there is an end to the stairway, and solid ground is under foot. Swing the lantern and peer into impenetrable blackness. Above, at the sides and below, is rock. It is a passage about eight feet high and six feet wide. An easy incline of a few feet brings up against heavy doors. Swing them back and on the other side is an underground chamber, 200x50 feet area, and from ten to twenty feet high. Lights twinkle like stars in the distance, and voices can be heard. The cave is a natural one, and is being utilized to carry on one of the biggest mushroom farms in the country.

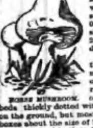


PARASOL MUSHROOM.

How long after St. Louis was settled the cave became known to white people does not appear; but the legends handed down tell that the Indians used it for various purposes. There was an entrance at the bottom of a hill sloping toward Benton Park, but the grading and filling in attendant upon the city's growth have buried the passage beyond hope of restoration. Some years ago an endeavor was made to convert the cave into brewery uses, but it was abandoned as a failure. Two years ago a start was made to raise mushrooms in the cave, the conditions being regarded as in every way favorable.

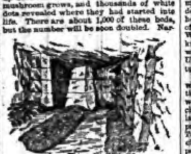
GROWING IN A TUB.

"We are now picking from twenty-five to forty pounds of mushrooms every morning," said the owner, "but when the improvements intended are carried out there will be a bearing surface of over 10,000 square feet, that should produce from 200 to 400 pounds daily."



HORSE MUSHROOM.

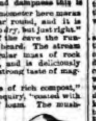
By the light of the lanterns tiers of mushroom beds could be seen at the right and left. In one of the corners beds thickly dotted with white fungi are on the ground, but most of the beds are in boxes about the size of bunks in a sleeping-car, arranged in tiers from the bottom to the top of the cave. Each box is rounded up with the soil and compost in which the mushroom grows, and thousands of white dots revealed where they had started into life. There are about 1,000 of these beds, but the number will be soon doubled. Narrow walks between the tiers of beds lead from end to end of the cave. On one side several men were removing old beds and making new.



MUSHROOM BEDS ON THE GROUND.

"Nine months is the limit of time in which a bed will bear," it was said. "In the great French caves they think five months doing well, but here we treat the bed differently and good results. In France there are artificial caves having miles of beds that raise thousands of pounds of mushrooms every night. Of course, this place can not compare with those for size, but for conditions of temperature and dampness this is far superior. The thermometer here marks sixty degrees the year round, and it is neither too damp nor too dry, but just right."

Nearing the center of the cave the running of water could be heard. The stream comes from an irregular mass of rock pendant from the top, and is deliciously clear and cool, with a strong taste of magnesia.



FAIRY RING MUSHROOM.

"The beds are made of rich compost," was the reply to an inquiry, "coated with about three inches of loam. The mushroom does not grow from a seed, but from a germ found in certain kinds of earth. The spawn is planted in the bed about two inches deep. Water warmed to seventy degrees is sprinkled occasionally, and the compost generates a warmth in itself. In six weeks or two months the mushrooms begin to show, and all to be done then is to pick them every morning until the bed is exhausted."

Locality was said to have much to do with the quality of mushrooms. Some much liked in England do not prove palatable when cultivated in America, and the kind known as the common mushroom, or Agaricus campestris, generally eaten the world over, is looked upon in Italy with as much aversion as though poisonous. This is the kind growing wild in the old pastures. The horse mushroom (Agaricus arvensis) is another variety familiar in the Southern States, where it is called "snow-ball."

This kind is also abundant in England. The parasol mushroom (Agaricus procerus) has a nutty flavor, and ranks as the choicest variety in the English markets. The favorite mushroom in Italy is the "Imperial," and is found in this country in North Carolina. The French call all mushrooms "champignons," but in England this name is only given the "fairy ring" mushroom (Marasmius oreades) that grows freely in pastures and lawns there.

"The demand is constantly increasing," went on the proprietor of the mushroom premises, "and now exceeds the supply. When I started it was the hardest kind of work to sell any in St. Louis. No one seemed to think it possible to raise mushrooms here that would be fit to eat, but they have got bravely over that now, there being a number of private families having standing orders for a delivery twice a week. The St. Louis Club is the largest home customer, but the best market is in New York, they taking there all I can spare. The price is seventy-five cents a pound, and a heaping quart measure is an even pound."

"Do you have many visitors?"

"Not many outside of my customers. You would hardly believe it, but several ladies have been here and climbed the stairs for the sake of seeing the cave and the way we carry on the business. Before a great while there will be an elevator running, when the objectionable part of getting down here will be obviated."

"How do the men stand it down here all the time?"

"They get fat. When we feel like it we light up an oil-stove, put on an oven and cook some mushrooms to go with our dinners. They are as rich as meat, you know, and with plenty of them to eat and magnesia water to drink a post would grow thick."

CRESCENT CITY LETTER.

Some Rare Confederate Coins and Their Interesting History.

[Special Correspondence.]

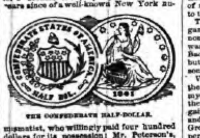
NEW ORLEANS.—"It is probably not generally known," said Mr. A. M. Peterson, of this city, to the writer recently, "that the late Confederate Government, despite its tremendous struggle for existence, had been able to concern itself in regard to a coinage."

It was in February, 1861, it will be remembered, that the New Orleans branch of the United States Mint fell into the hands of the Confederate authorities. The Southern Congress was in session at Montgomery, Ala., at the time, and soon after the news was announced Secretary of the Treasury Memminger held a consultation with President Jefferson Davis, at which the advisability of attempting the issue of metallic currency was discussed. The latter, foreseeing that the idea would be found an impractical one in view of the great scarcity of bullion that might be made available, is reported to have been opposed to the proposition advanced by the Secretary; but at a later Cabinet meeting, in which the question was brought up, the earnest and eloquent appeal of Memminger to the patriotic feeling of his fellow members seems to have prevailed and ultimately enabled him to secure Davis' approval.

So, in April following, several well-known artists of the South were asked by the Treasury Department to prepare and submit designs for a Confederate half-dollar. A number were sent in. The obverse of that finally selected for use of the die-sinker was identical with the United States half-dollar of the series of 1861; the reverse contained the American shield, with but seven stars in its upper section, however, to correspond with the number of seceding States; surmounted by a Liberty cap and inclosed by branches of sugar cane and cotton, with the legend "Confederate States of America" above, and the words "Half Dol." in the exergue.

Mr. Peterson himself, he tells me, having had some little experience as a die-sinker, was asked to assist Conrad Smith, foreman of the coinage room of the New Orleans Mint, in preparing the new die; and they completed their work the latter part of May and turned it over to Dr. B. F. Taylor, Superintendent of the Mint, who had four specimen pieces struck. One of these was forwarded to Secretary Memminger and another to President Davis; one given to Mr. Peterson and the last retained by Dr. Taylor himself.

And, out of the four, only the whereabouts of two are now known: Dr. Taylor's became the property about twelve years since of a well-known New York numismatist, who willingly paid four hundred dollars for its possession; Mr. Peterson's, he still retains and has twice refused an offer of seven hundred dollars for it. What became of Memminger's no one knows, while the one Jefferson Davis had was taken from him when captured by United States authorities and never returned.



THE CONFEDERATE HALF-DOLLAR.

Just as Davis had anticipated, no coins were ever struck from the die for circulation by the Confederate authorities; and when the first mint here was ordered closed by Secretary Memminger a little later, the die thus rendered useless and practically thrown aside was taken up by Dr. Taylor personally, by whom it has been since cherished as a valuable memento of a sad period of the country's existence. He has it yet, I am told, but from the fact that the obverse is an identical counterpart of the United States half-dollar of the same year, no proofs are permitted to be produced from it.

No other denomination than this was ever provided for by the late Confederacy, but dies were ordered made for a Dixie copper of a Philadelphia engraver and die-sinker known as Lovett at the same time. This was to have been a one cent of the usual size and weight, with the liberty cap and legend and a Confederate flag on the obverse above the date. This man Lovett, tempted by a high price, prepared the dies as instructed, but owing to the difficulty of transmission across the lines into Dixie, they lay in his possession till long after the war had closed.

Feeling that he was then in possession of an exceedingly perilous piece of property, the engraver, after striking about a dozen of the copper coins, intended to bury the die; but, with the last cent molded, it cracked, and thus the supposed dangerous witness to the disloyalty of the engraver was out of the way. A few years later he disposed of the few coins made to a well-known collector of the Quaker City, who in turn parceled them out amongst wealthy European and American numismatists at fabulous prices.

The half-dollar silver piece, however, an illustration of which—thanks to the courtesy of Mr. Peterson—I give herewith, I am assured by parties in position to know was the only coin ever struck under direction of the Confederate authorities.

JOSEPH BASSON.

An Honest Restaurant.

"Waiter, what is this?"

He was sitting at a table digesting that hallucinating dream, that mockery of restaurant mockeries, a modern oyster stew. Calling the white-aproned darkey to his side, he pointed down into the dish and said:

"Waiter, what is this?"

"I beg yah pawdon, sah?" queried the waiter.

"This thing must be investigated. It appears that you have given me an oyster stew with an oyster in it. Come, this is hardly fair. And I am a stranger too."

"Hey!" asked the puzzled waiter.

"I repeat that you have given me an oyster stew with an oyster in it. Must I pay any thing extra for the oyster?"

"No—why?"

"Well, that's all right; I'm glad of it," smiled the stranger, straightening up. "Only I don't see how you can make any money at that rate. You pay a dollar a gallon for oysters and then sell stews at sixty cents. That's barely living profit, whereas if you put an oyster in the stew—well, it beats me how you can afford to do it. I suppose you'll be putting chicken in the chicken salad, ham in the ham sandwiches, and veal in veal pie, next. Then you'll be so rash as to give a man a clean napkin, besides putting vinegar in the vinegar caster when it's run out. You folks will bust up with goodness if you're not careful."—Texas Siftings.

HEALING BY MAGNETISM.

Egyptian and Greek Forerunners of Leger and Mesmer.

A Modern Mystery Which Likewise Puzzled the Wise Men of Ancient Times—The Virtue of Enchantments—Magnetism as a Cure-All.

In these days, when so many people of intelligence are investigating physical phenomena; when occultism, spiritualism, mind-reading, faith-healing and kindred subjects are attracting unusual attention in the scientific world, it may not be amiss to review the past to ascertain, if possible, something of the history of these modern mysteries. A very little investigation will show that the ancient philosophers were puzzled by the same questions which the thoughtful men of to-day are asking, and that they sought to obtain the power of mind over mind by various theories, some of which are still widely current. The study of the peculiarities of mental action, says a writer in the Pittsburgh Dispatch, and the hidden forces that are the causes thereof, probably began with primitive man and has remained ever since a theme of fruitful speculation.

The investigation of the phenomena of mesmerism perhaps received more serious attention from learned men in the latter part of the last century and the early part of the present than at any time in the history of mankind. It was undertaken by the Royal Academy of Medicine at Paris, and by a great many celebrated physicians in other parts of Europe. Mesmer's doctrines found many believers, and the opinion seems to have been extensively entertained that in "animal magnetism" there had at least been discovered a remedy for the greater part, if not all, of the ills which flesh is heir to.

But there were many before Mesmer who claimed to be able to heal the sick by mysterious power. In a work entitled "The History of Pyscodunamy," by Theodore Leger, of the medical faculty of Paris, published over fifty years ago, are instanced many facts, more or less well authenticated, which are marvelous, to say the least. Leger was an ardent believer in the value of what he styles "the new science, pyscodunamy," and his book was written to give the world knowledge of the distinguishing features of doctrines then attracting almost universal attention. Whatever may be said for his theories it must be admitted that he argues his case well, showing perfect familiarity with the subject in all its forms. As Leger's name, as well as his book, is probably unfamiliar to the average reader of to-day, a partial summary of the contents of the work may not prove without interest.

The magi, or wise men of India, were in great renown for their medical skill. Philostratus described their practice as consisting chiefly of gestures and secret manipulations, which Leger believes to be identical with those of modern mesmerists. The priests of ancient Egypt were the only physicians, and they also made a secret of their arts. Both Indian and Egyptian images of gods represent the figures in attitudes such as a mesmerist would assume in obtaining mastery over his subject.

The medical practices of Greece were largely borrowed from India and Egypt, and the author cites numerous passages from classical writers in support of his theory, that the oracles, to whose words the Greeks attached such importance, were in some way controlled by mesmeric influences. Socrates, who claimed to have some sort of a spiritual guide, by him termed a demon, was certainly gifted with remarkable prescience, or else the historians are greatly at fault. He predicted all the important events of his life, and even foretold his own death. Apollonius, who is reported to have restored to life by the laying on of his hands a person supposed to be dead, foretold events as accurately as Socrates. At Ephesus, in the presence of a crowd, he saw and described the murder of Domitian at Rome, and when intelligence of the Emperor's death was received it was found to have occurred at the very moment indicated by Apollonius. Secret arts of healing, wonderful revelations in dreams, and marvelous gifts of prophesy were in as high honor among the Romans as among the Greeks. In the Latin authors are numerous descriptions of mental states corresponding very closely to the modern trance or mesmeric sleep.

The sixteenth century scientific men began to explain the nature of physical phenomena by theories, not unlike that afterward formulated by Mesmer. Chancellor Bacon maintained that magic was nothing but the power of imagination of one person acting on the body of another.

Von Helmont, a Belgian, born in 1597, was the first to give the name magnetism to the mysterious force. Between 1603 and 1700 there were several magnetic healers who gained great notoriety in England, France and other parts of Europe. A man named Greatrakes traveled through Great Britain performing most extraordinary cures by the application of hands. Among the diseases which he is reported to have cured were blindness, paralysis, deafness, dropsy, pleurisy, fevers, neuralgia, tumors, scrofula, cancer, etc.

The celebrated Emanuel Swedenborg, according to his own account, had most remarkable visions, in which the mysteries of the spiritual world were revealed to him. "The Lord manifested Himself in person to me, His servant," he says, "in 1743, and granted me the privilege of conversing with spirits and angels, which I have enjoyed to this day. From that day I began to print and publish various arcana that have been seen by me or revealed to me, as respecting Heaven and hell, the state of man after death, the true worship of God, the spiritual sense of the word, with many other most important matters conducive to salvation and true wisdom." According to other writers Swedenborg had gifts resembling those claimed by the spiritualistic mediums of to-day.

Mesmer, whose name is inseparably linked with one branch of occult science, was born at Weiler, on the Rhine, in 1734. He studied medicine and astrology before entering his career of healing by magnetic means. The influence of celestial bodies upon living beings was an essential part of his theory. The record of his experiments and that of his pupils is voluminous; suffice it to say that scores of remarkable cures of diseases that baffled physicians are attributed to him and them.

With all the progress and learning that this century has brought it seems that we are almost as far as ever from obtaining such knowledge of the mind's mysteries as will lead to a clear understanding of the nature and causes of phenomena which have puzzled both the wise and the ignorant in all ages.

Had Had Lots of Fun.

A man who recently committed suicide in St. Louis left letters in which he said: "I am 69 years old. In eight years I would be 70, an old, dilapidated, tottering fossil. I have played the world out and it don't owe me a cent. I've had more fun than a mule in a cornfield and I've got enough. Therefore I will cheat the course of nature and jump the time to come."

So Says the World.

"You told me you'd ne'er been engaged,"
She said, with a reproach;
"And here are three most tender notes
That on my claim encroach.
You dropped them in a bunch, last eve."
No flush his cal[m] brow mounts;
"Mt. Desert heard them all, you see;
There's nothing here that counts."

Cammerer—Why, that's the late great railway accident, in which two trains were telescoped.

Simpson—You don't say! I fancied it might represent the wreck of a phonograph which had tried to record the chatter of three young women on a street corner.—Judge.

ALL ABOUT ICEBERGS.

An Old Tar's Yarns About the Dangers of Mid-Ocean.

A Berg Sixty Miles Long and Another One That Reached a Thousand Feet Above and Nine Thousand Below the Surface of the Sea.

Out on one of the long docks just below Wall street ferry a heavily-bearded, rather well-to-do-looking man stood the other day looking up into the rigging of a big ship, says the New York Mail and Express. He was an old sailor, having, as he said, "crawled in the hawse-pipe and come out at the cabin windows," which being translated means that he had worked himself up from before the mast to the master's berth.

All of a sudden he sniffed rather eagerly in the rather damp, misty air. The reportorial nose could only faintly trace the Hunter's Point aroma that haunts the river, but the sailor had caught a whiff of something else.

"Do you know," said he, "I thought I smelled an iceberg just then. At sea in high latitudes you can smell them miles away, and many a night I have kept all hands on deck sniffing and peering around on the watch for field-ice or bergs. I tell you it is no fun to have half a dozen icebergs loafing around when your ship is logging nine or ten knots straight off the reel and you are in such a hurry to make a passage that you don't want to shorten sail."

The scent had awakened a train of memory, and, seating himself on one of the dock piles, he took a large-sized chew of plug and settled himself to talk about field ice and bergs.

"I was for nearly twenty years master of a deep-sea ship," began the old shellback, "and have doubled both Cape Horn and Cape of Good Hope more times than I have fingers twice over. That's where you see ice. The bergs down there are not so lofty or so beautiful as those in Arctic regions, but they are much more dangerous; first, because of their number and extent, and again because they have submarine formations that are just like a ledge of rocks and project sometimes half a mile or a mile out from the base of the berg. You see, with those fellows you might think you were giving them all the berth they needed and still break your ship up on one of their reefs.

"The biggest ice island I ever heard told of by sailors was seen drifting around in about 32 S. and 24 W., almost in the track of the English Liverpool boats bound to Melbourne. It was in 1853 that it was first sighted, and the same chunk of ice was reported from that vicinity until 1855, when it disappeared. It was said to have been about 350 feet high, 60 miles long and forty miles wide and was curved very much in the shape of a horseshoe. The two arms of the curves embraced a bay forty miles across and perfectly sheltered. A big English emigrant ship, called the Guiding Star, I think, sighted the ice island, but, whether because of fog or carelessness nobody knows, sailed slap into the bay between the arms of the island, and was lost with all hands. Pieces of her wreckage were picked up near the island by a steamer bound for Australia.

"The highest berg I ever heard of was seen in the Southern Ocean, where they are not generally very lofty. I sailed with a man who declared that he had seen this berg, and that it was 1,000 feet high above the surface of the water. Now, as there is always nine times as much of a berg below the water as there is above, that would make this fellow 9,000 feet from the base under the water to the highest point above. That's a pretty big chunk of ice, considering that it is over fifty times as high as the Brooklyn bridge. I'll bet it made a splash when it fell! That's where the danger is. In warm latitudes the base melts away, and the first thing you know it falls over. I have heard of several ships that had big chunks fall on their decks, one vessel having her masts carried away and several of her crew killed.

"Northern bergs are neither so large nor so numerous as those seen in Southern waters, but they are usually loftier and more beautiful, with lots of spires and domes, and when the sun shines on them they look like a lot of rainbows piled on top of each other. These fellows are tall, and draw lots of water. I have heard of them grounded on the banks of Newfoundland where there was over 600 feet of water by the lead. They have been reported in Baffin's Bay hard aground in 1500 feet of water.

"Some years there is much more ice than usual. I heard a man who had run on a ship named the Swanton say that they saw over 200 icebergs in a single passage in 1849, and most of them were in about 43 north and about 50 west—that is, less than 1,000 miles about east-northeast from Governor's Island. The Swanton had a hard time getting through the fleet of bergs and passed between two that were so close that she had to brace her yards sharp up for fear she would get caught. In 1883 there were plenty of icebergs, and last spring or the year before the steamer Concordia reported having seen over fifty icebergs aground in the straits of Belle Isle, one of the outlets of the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

"Every thing considered, the loss of vessels on account of ice is not nearly so great as might be reasonably expected. Still there have been some queer cases. In 1841 a big ice island was seen just off to the east of St. John's, N. F. Very near the center of the island, and bedded between two big hills of ice, were two ships, their masts gone and not a sign of life appearing. They may have been there for years, and you can find plenty of old sailors to-day who believe them to have been part of Sir John Franklin's expedition. There was a German ship named Hansa that went to pieces on an ice island, and the crew took refuge on the ice, built a hut out of wreckage and spent eight months drifting around on their ice island. When discovered they had drifted way down to 41 N., although the ship struck the ice somewhere in the fifties.

"Sometimes icebergs are met in the middle of the Atlantic, and several ships have reported that they stopped and killed seals that were found on the ice. In crossing from here to England the big ocean racers take the most southerly course possible, and in that way avoid the ice. Of course, in some months the ice is so solid that little gets adrift, and then the ordinary northern course is pretty safe, but from March to August you are likely to see ice way down in the rolling forties. The fastest passages have been made on southerly tracks."

The Worst of All Enemies.

Every animal has his enemies. The land tortoise has two enemies—man, and the boa constrictor. The natural defense of the tortoise is to draw himself up in his shell and remain quiet. In this state the tiger, however famished, can do nothing with him, for the shell is too strong for the stroke of his paw. Man, however, takes him home and roasts him; and the boa constrictor swallows him whole, shell and all, and consumes him slowly in the interior, as the court of chancery does a large estate.

HINTS FOR EMERGENCIES.

How to Act in Cases of Accident and Sudden Illness.

Sir W. Moore, late Surgeon-General with the Government of Bombay, has a paper in the Hospital on "The Immediate Treatment of Accident and Sudden Illness," in which he states that only the other day he was passing Kensington Gardens, when he observed an old man being supported by two other persons, and encouraged to cling to the railings, so as to maintain an upright posture. A glance showed what was the matter with the old man. He had been struck by cardiac failure, or serious apoplexy, or that variety of the malady in which the face is pale, and the circulation of the blood failing. His pulse was feeble and intermittent, and there was evident paralysis on one side of the body. Now, what ought to have been done in such a case? The poor old man should have been laid on right side full length, his collar should have been opened, he should have been allowed plenty of fresh air, and his legs, feet and hands should have been well rubbed. Then, when the first shock of the malady had passed away, he ought to have been carried, still in the recumbent posture, to the nearest hospital. Again, another instance. Only a few days back, in the Hammersmith road, two boys were knocked down by a cab. One escaped with little injury, the other got concussion of the brain. He was almost senseless, speechless, cold and pallid. The same plan ought to have been pursued as in the case of the old man; but, instead of this, the boy was surrounded by a dense crowd of inquisitive people, and one good but mistaken Samaritan was supporting the injured youth in an upright position on his knee. After a time the poor boy was dragged away on his legs, being well shaken and jostled in the process. Yet a third instance. In Hyde Park, one recent Sunday, a person was taken in an epileptic fit. One bystander wisely ran for water; others carried the epileptic to a bench, on which he was seated. Now, in epilepsy there is a great struggling, the limbs are convulsed, and the tongue is very liable to be protruded between the teeth and severely bitten. This accident should be guarded against by placing something, as a small piece of soft wood, too large to slip into the mouth, between the teeth; and the person should be simply prevented injuring himself in his struggles until the fit passes away. But nothing of the kind was attempted; the consequence being that the tongue was bitten, and the limbs of the epileptic were bruised against the hard wood of the bench on which he was seated and held. Had he been placed on the soft grass and left alone he would have injured himself less.

The following are rules which may be safely adopted in cases of accident and sudden illness: Place the person on the ground or floor lying toward the right side, and with the head raised to the level of the body by a pillow, folded coat or other soft substance. Then unbutton or split open any clothing pressing upon the neck or chest. The face and chest should be sprinkled with cold water, and some cold water may be given to drink if the power of swallowing remains. Wine, brandy or other liquor should not be hastily given without evidence of their being needed. Examine the head and limbs separately. The prominent parts of the limbs may be examined with very little movement of the body. If it is necessary to move a person after any injury, especially of the head, the person should be carried while lying down. He should not be allowed to sit upright in a vehicle or to walk. See that the person is allowed plenty of fresh air. The history of the accident should be obtained, and when sending for a surgeon the message should be as clear as possible, and, if practicable, a written one.

The most common maladies which occur suddenly to people in the streets of large towns are apoplectic and epileptic attacks, maladies depending on heart affections, and drunken fits, although, perhaps, the latter should not be classed under the head maladies. But it is necessary to distinguish apoplexy and epilepsy from "dead drunk" as it is called, and also poisoning by opium. Apoplexy is known from epilepsy by the puffing or snoring breathing which occurs in the former malady. In epilepsy there is no struggling of the limbs, the eyes are turned up under the lids, so that the whites only are visible, and the person generally falls down with a loud cry, none of which are the symptoms of apoplexy. Apoplexy is to be distinguished from affections due to the heart, because in the latter maladies the symptoms are very similar to fainting. The person is pale, unconscious, with feeble pulse, scarcely perceptible breathing, white lips and a death-like expression of countenance; while in apoplexy, though the person is unconscious, there is snoring or puffing breathing, and the face is often drawn to one side. Apoplexy is best distinguished from the effects of spirituous liquors by the history of the case, which may probably be one of drinking. Secondly, by the smell of liquor in the person's breath; although this is not a certain sign, for some one may, in mistaken kindness, have given the person struck with apoplexy some kind of liquor. Thirdly, in the "drunken fit," the size of the pupils of the eyes is equal, while in apoplexy one is often larger than the other. By the pupils of the eyes is meant the round space in the center of the dark part of the eye. Fourthly, the person "dead drunk" may generally be roused, when he babbles incoherently, while from apoplexy the person can not be roused. Lastly, if any movements occur in drunkenness they will be of the limbs, whereas movement is usually restricted to one side of the body in apoplexy. From poisoning by opium apoplexy is best distinguished by the history of the case; by the smell of opium in the breath; by both pupils of the eyes being very small and contracted; by the fact that the patient may be roused, although he does not then babble as in the drunken fit, but immediately goes to sleep again.

If all that has been advanced can not be held in recollection the condensed rules may certainly be remembered, viz.: First, in all cases of accident or sudden illness let the person lie down, and do not assist him to maintain the upright posture; secondly, let him have plenty of fresh air; thirdly, unloose all clothing round the neck and chest; fourthly, convey the patient, still in the recumbent position, to the nearest hospital. Stretchers for this purpose ought to be available at known points, or at least at every police station.

Conscience and Kreutzers.

Maria Theresa, of Austria, was greatly addicted to gambling, and played for exceedingly high stakes. The court functionaries did all in their power to overcome this passion, but to no purpose. They finally appealed to the Empress's confessor, who induced the imperial gamester not to give up cards, but to play for only a copper kreutzer a point. The cunning Empress, however, ordered her jeweler to make her 200 kreutzers in a peculiar manner so that each one could be opened in the middle and a ducat inserted. The two pieces were put together, so that only the initiated knew that they were not what they seemed. Thus the Empress kept the letter of the confessor's demand and at the same time enjoyed the excitement in which she delighted.

WISDOM OF A MULE.

He Knows When It Is Sunday and When Noon Comes Around.

Working animals, such as horses and mules, are generally kept on a cotton plantation in a large open pen, says a letter to the Scientific American. In the center there is a feed shed, containing a trough for corn and a rafter for fodder overhead. Stock is fed only twice a day—noon and night. By sunup, on work-days, the plow hands appear, each to catch his "critter," and the forty or fifty mules at their sight move in utter confusion around the shed hiding behind one another. But how is it on Sundays? There reigns then an arcadian peace in the pen. Each mule is paired off with his "chum" (a selective affinity, no doubt), in an angle of the rail fence, head and tail together. The object is a practical exemplification of the golden rule. To enjoy an untroubled siesta each head secures immunity from the fly pest by a close proximity to his friend's "perpetuum mobile." Farm hands may go in and out without producing the least sign of alarm. But, should bridles appear, that disturbs only master's saddle or carriage horses. As to the mules, no extra twitch in tail or ear shows the least suspicion that their owner could possibly be the victim of a mistake. With eyes drooping and head on a level with that of his neighbor's tail, his somnolent torpor is a picture of trust and safety. He knows it is Sunday. I remember well the amused look of my foreman, Essex, when asking him his opinion on the subject: "Why, in course," said he, "dey knows it's Sunday!"

Pertinent to the above query is the other: Do animals know noontime? For the sake of its lively scene let us some forenoon go into a large field. Presently we are startled from our reverie by an unearthly "He-hung, ee-hung, ee-ee-ee-hung, hung, hung." It is the Nestor of the four-footers that calls thus: "Time for refreshment"—a signal similarly seconded and approved in succession by forty others. We look at our time-piece, and sure enough the large hand is about covering the smaller. It is noon. The mule, however, is some minutes ahead of time, and there ensues a fearful contest for the mastery between him and the driver, which the distant dinner-horn only ends.

Now, how is it that the mule knows noontime? Does he rely on the infallibility of his time-piece that warns him that it needs rewinding? Or has he noticed his equally hungry partner, Sambo, who, when reaching the end of a row, halts a moment, and turning face northward, anxiously scans the shadow at his feet? Or is the sensitiveness of his back so delicate that he can discriminate between oblique and vertical rays?

We are prone to mystify, and because we are unwilling to grant brute creation the power of reasoning we call their actions that surprise us "instinct." In the barnyard, stable and field we never observe this quality of instinct in the young. It is only the old that become wise by experience.

A Thrilling Experience.

Epitaph on a tombstone in the Island of Jamaica: "Here lieth the body of Lewis Galdy, Esq., who died the 22d of September, 1739, aged eighty years. He was born at Montpellier, in France, which place he left for his religion and settled in this island, where, in the great earthquake in the year 1692 he was swallowed up, and by the great providence of God by a second shock was thrown out into the sea, where he continued swimming till he was taken up by a boat and miraculously preserved. He afterward lived in great reputation and was universally lamented."

THE PARTY OF THE PEOPLE.

The ever honorable record of the Democratic party has been its uncompromising advocacy of the rights of the people, regardless of birth, creed or worldly condition.

Democracy at first [illegible] political organization upon that distinct issue, and boldly unsheathed the sword of opposition to the aristocratic designs of the Federalists, who [illegible] direct avowal that all governing authority in this country should be controlled by "the rich and the well-born."

Against such a [illegible] imitation of the monarchial system of England and flagrant violation of the vital principles of American freedom, the Democrats [illegible] battled, and fought on until the purposes of the Federalists were frustrated and their party scattered out of sight.

Still the contest for popular liberty continued. The [illegible] of aristocracy showing itself under other political names and forms, but destined to meet the unflagging hostility of the party of Democracy.

So the warfare went on and so it [illegible] today, under changed devices, but for the attainment of similar objectionable ends.

Now, as at the very beginning of Constitutional Government in the United States, [illegible] efforts are being made, more [illegible] than those of Old Federal times, because less open, to concentrate arbitrary power in the hands of privileged classes at the expense of the people, and to make [illegible] the [illegible] of government.

The [illegible] remains and so does Democratic duty.

That is an evident fact.

The Federalists, the original enemies of Democracy, urged that none but rich and well-born persons ought to enact and execute laws, which in effect meant, that the honest laboring masses should be made and kept servile—hewers of wood and drawers of water for lordly masters.

How does that [illegible] idea differ from the [illegible] of the [illegible]-grabbing Monopolists and Trust Combiners of this the year 1889?

Only in style.

It is the same devouring wolf, now artfully wool-covered.

In defending popular rights against unjust exactions and impositions of every kind, the Democratic party has encountered whirlwinds of misrepresentation and abuse.

It cares naught for all that.

Its mission is to succor the weak and make sovereign the cause of equal and exact justice.

IT IS THE PARTY OF THE PEOPLE.

JUST AS "THE PRESS" STATED.

The City Board of Health met in the City Clerk's office Friday last, and passed a just rebuke to the News, for publishing the malicious and sensational falsehood, concerning the alleged breaking out of pleuro-pneumonia among a herd of choice Jersey cattle belonging to Mr. Herbert Johnston, owner of the Netherwood stock farm. Mr. Johnston is now traveling with his sister, in Europe, and he was thus maliciously attacked, while thousands of miles from home, and unable to defend himself. He will, however, doubtless straighten things out when he arrives home, and it is to be hoped that the originator of the story (?) will be made to answer for his attempt to injure Mr. Johnston's business.

The Board of Health that evening passed a resolution to the effect that the News article was "entirely erroneous, if not wilfully malicious and sensational." The Board declares that everything about the Netherwood farm is in an unquestionable sanitary condition. The resolution is published in full in another column to-day.

A New Road Laid Out at Westfield.

Messrs. Theodore Folsom and William Schoonover, representing Westfield Township; Edwin Garthwaite and James H. Partridge from Cranford Township, Edwin N. Johnson and H. C. Randolph, representing Fanwood Township; constituting Commissioners of Highways, appointed by the District Court at Elizabeth, met at the Westfield Hotel on Saturday morning at ten o'clock, for the purpose of laying out two new streets in the Township of Westfield. One new road was laid out from the Boulevard across lands owned by C. B. Ripley, Esq., and [illegible] March. There being no objection, the road was laid out as applied for and the [illegible] signed.

The extension of North avenue from Clark to Broad street, across lands owned by Mr. L. E. Hart, was not agreed upon. It is understood, however, that the parties interested have agreed upon a plan, and that the matter will be amicably adjusted on Saturday next, to which time the Board adjourned.

Is Mrs. Foster Politically [illegible]?

To THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS—I enclose you an extract taken from the New York Tribune of January 4, 1889. Will some of the friends of Mrs. Foster kindly inform those who heard her at the Baptist church, Sunday evening, how she reconciles the below with her remarks at that time, when she declared herself a decided Prohibitionist?

PROFESSIONAL SAFE BREAKERS IN WESTFIELD.

During Saturday night, or early Sunday morning, the coal office of John S. Irving, at Westfield, was broken into. The two iron safes were drilled, and the doors blown off with powder, ruining both safes. The contents were strewn over the floor of the office—books and papers indiscriminately. The desk in the office was also broken open. Mr. Irving told a PRESS reporter that there was about $10 in silver in the safe, which was taken.

The cast iron compartment of the safe, containing Mr. Irving's bank books, notes, mortgages and policies of insurance, was carried to the section house alongside of the freight depot, and broken open with a sledge hammer which the thieves had procured by breaking open the door of the section house. The books and papers were strewn over the ground, and were soaked with the rain.

Among these papers was a government bond of $50, the property of the Westfield Thief Detective Society of which Mr. Irving is Treasurer. This was found on the ground among the other papers. The thieves either overlooked this bond, or else it being a registered one, they did not care to take it.

Mr. Irving has not missed anything as yet except the silver. Both safes are ruined. The robbery was first discovered by Edward Baum, one of Mr. Irving's workmen, at about 6.30 P. M. He had come to the front of the office and noticed lying there a brace, a cold chisel and a hammer which the thieves had got by breaking into the blacksmith shop connected with Mr. Irving's steam mill. Two large picks taken from the section house of the Central Railroad, were used in prying off the doors of the safes after the explosion.

The job was no doubt the work of professional safe breakers, but they secured very little benefit for the trouble that was taken. Mr. Irving, in connection with the Thief Detective Society, has offered a reward of $100, for the arrest and conviction of the thief or thieves.

It is only about three months ago that Mr. Smith's coal office on Spring street was broken into and the safe damaged to a considerable extent by drilling, but the thieves failed to affect an entrance to it.

AnotherSter[illegible].

A lady who resides on Mercer avenue, North Plainfield, states that after "advertising a week in the News for a servant, without avail," she put an advertisement to the same effect in THE PRESS of Saturday, and secured just the girl she wanted "within two hours after the paper was issued."

Building a New Spur.

Work on six miles of railroad to be built between the Jersey Central Railroad and the Arthur Kill bridge has been begun. The right of way has been acquired by purchase of land for four and a half miles of the distance. The other mile and a half will be acquired during the next three months. Some difficulties have been encountered in the matter of obtaining titles. The six miles of road will cost about $250,000.

A Great Public Convenience.

Since the management of the local telephone service was placed in the hands of Mr. Charles Runyon, it seems to have much improved in readiness, efficiency and many other satisfactory ways.

The latest accommodation offered the public, is a long-distance transmitter placed in Steele's pharmacy at Front street and Park avenue, where connection can be made with New York and other distant points, and intelligible conversation can be held with perfect ease.

A Good Story.

Four members of the Middlesex Gun Club visited the Club grounds at Dunellen, on 24th ult., for the purpose of looking at the condition of the grounds, and at the same time indulging in a little quiet practice at inanimate targets. As usual, the Vice President, Charles Smith, the irrepressible "Dutchy," took the cake in making the best score of any of the shooters, breaking 61 out of 70 blue rocks in fine style. He is now sorry that he did not go to the Reading, Pa., tournament and "knock out" his friend Fred Quimby.

Fees and Freeholders.

Amid the multiplicity of Legislative enactments proposed for the present session, Middlesex comes forward with a bill to abolish the Boards of Chosen Freeholders, and substitute therefor a board of three commissioners to be elected by the people, one each year, and whose salaries shall not be less than $600, nor more than $1,000 each per year. This is a movement against the expensive system which allows a representative in the board to charge $2 for a day's services when perhaps he has not spent an hour of his time on the county business. This thing has been overdone in all the counties, but Middlesex has been especially victimized by its avaricious Freeholders.

To Widen Peace Street.

Mayor Mair is one of the chief instigators, it is said, in the movement which is now being agitated, concerning the widening of Peace street from North avenue to Front street. It is the intention of those having the matter in charge to widen the street to the extent of forty feet from the building line on either side. This would necessarily cut off about fifteen feet of the door yard in front of some of the residences on the South side of the street, while those on the North side would be comparatively uninjured.

It is thought that before long Peace street will be extended and opened for travel into North Plainfield, in which event the street is likely to become one of the main thoroughfares of the city. If the street is to be widened, now is the proper time to begin the work, before any brick buildings are permanently erected.

Another Intimation That Anything's Good Enough for Plainfield.

THE PRESS has frequently referred to the opinion epidemic among professional artists that "anything's good enough for Plainfield;" and again Monday was the presence of such a sentiment shown. The Emma Juch concert company appeared at Music Hall before a cultured audience, yet the selections were mainly trivial, and their execution careless.

Miss Juch saved the programme. Her singing was grand, and her acting though at times exaggerated, was satisfactory by comparison to that of Faust's and Martha's.

Miss Aus Der Ohe, who can play far better than almost anyone else, seemed to think any effort uncalled for, and played with false expression and even false notes, without shame and without regret. Her selections were not those promised on the programme circulated in advance. She played popular music instead, gave Godard's mazurka as an encore, and even substituted Liszt's "[illegible] Polonaise" for his Rhapsodie Hongroise.

Mr. Herbert, it is said, does not like his accompanist, and so he has been refused any other it is charitable to suppose his bad playing was due also to the lack of harmony between the two. But why should the audience suffer? Mr. Herbert can do better—at least he used to.

Plainfield is considered a poor city for traveling troupes, yet to some extent THE PRESS is proud of that. So long as the audiences here are treated to operas with unbalanced choruses or incomplete orchestras, and concert companies that offer trivial music or careless renditions, this city will be a "poor one" for them.

—The bowling team of the Produce Exchange are contemplating a roll with the Fanwoods at the latter's Club House, in the near future.

MRS. FOSTER AT THE FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH.

Notwithstanding the inclement weather, a large and appreciative audience gathered in the First Baptist church, Sunday evening, to listen to an earnest and eloquent appeal on behalf of total prohibition of the liquor traffic, by Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, President of the State W. C. T. U., of Iowa. Most of the other churches and the Reform Club omitted their evening services so as to give their members an opportunity of hearing Mrs. Foster, whose reputation as a temperance advocate is known all over the continent. In the audience were noticed Rev. Drs. Ketcham, Lewis, Yerkes, Rodman, and Rev. Messrs Dills and Honeyman of the city clergymen; President French of the Reform Club; Mr. A. M. Powell, Secretary of the National Temperance Union, and many of the representative citizens of this city and North Plainfield.

After the preliminary opening exercises, which included a prayer and Scripture reading by Rev. Dr. Yerkes, singing by the congregation, and a prayer by Rev. Dr. Lewis, Mr. A. M. Powell was introduced. He said that it was with pleasure that he welcomed the gifted and eloquent Mrs. Foster to our midst; he had known her for a decade, and had carefully noted her progress in the temperance work. In her early experience Iowa resembled New Jersey in one respect—it had its saloons and breweries. Under the influence of the work carried on conjointly by the men and women of Iowa, a great transformation has taken place there, and to-day there are eighty counties in the State without saloons, and not one legalized place in the whole State. Iowa has many noble women, but their acknowledged leader is the distinguished speaker soon to be announced. Mrs. Foster was then introduced.

Mrs. Foster spoke disparagingly of the high license system, claiming that it does not materially decrease the business. Plainfield, she said, could well boast of its prosperity; it has no criminal element. On the other hand, it has wealth and culture, and all it requires is the influence of wealth, culture and the Christian church to stamp out the saloons.

The speaker closed her able address by admonishing all to be total abstainers—at the banquet, at dinner, at political gatherings and in business. She insisted upon her hearers becoming enthusiastic on the subject, and stated that progress is born of enthusiasm.

Rev. Mr. Dills led in prayer, and the congregation joined in singing a hymn, after which Rev. Dr. Yerkes pronounced the benediction.

Lost a Digit.

Michael Conway, an employee in Mr. M. Powers' stone yard in North Plainfield, met with a painful accident while at work in the yard, on Saturday. He was unloading stone, and had nearly completed his work, when a heavy stone toppled and fell, crushing the little finger on his right hand to a jelly. A physician dressed the wound.

Contesting the Will.

Mrs. Emeline Hines, died at Dunellen, Nov. 7, 1888, leaving all her property to her daughter, Mrs. Ham. The deceased's will is being contested by her grandson, Charles H. Hines. Testimony was taken in the office of Messrs Jackson & Codington, Saturday, at 10 A. M. Craig A. Marsh is the Counsel for Charles H. Hines, and Messrs Jackson & Codington represent Mrs. Ham.

The Central's Earnings.

The report of the New Jersey Central Railroad shows that for the year ending June 30, 1888 the gross earnings were $11,989,419, operating expenses $6,420,744, and net earnings $5,568,674. Income from investments amounted to $734,407, making the total net income $6,303,081. The fixed charges were $5,010,120, leaving a balance applicable to dividends of $1,292,961, equal to over six per cent. on the stock.

Legislative Personnel.

Of the 81 members composing the New Jersey Legislature, 54 are natives of New Jersey. Seven are foreign born, viz: Ireland, 5; Canada, 1; Germany, 1. The other 20 hail from New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Delaware, Ohio and Virginia. In the Senate are five lawyers, four merchants, and two farmers. In the house are fifteen lawyers, two merchants, nine farmers, two physicians, two hotel keepers, two saloon keepers and one brewer.

Death of Mrs. Holton.

At her home in North Plainfield, at an early hour Monday morning, occurred the death of Mrs. Sarah Ann Holton, widow of the late Joseph Holton, after a short illness from a complaint bordering on pneumonia. The funeral took place from the late residence of the deceased, No. 90 Grove street, corner of Emily street, on Wednesday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock.

The death of Mrs. Holton, recalls to mind the fact that she is the fifteenth member of the First Baptist church, who has been called from the ranks by death, since the last annual Convention, held in the church June last—an unprecedented occurrence in the history of the church.

Plainfielders Who Deal in Black Diamonds.

A New York paper Jan. 24, writing of the representative coal merchants of that city, has the following to say of two well-known Plainfielders:

William R. Potts is one of the smartest and best known men in the coal trade. He is a member of the firm of F. A. Potts & Co. and a brother of the late F. A. Potts, whom he strongly resembles in looks. His business qualifications are of a very high order, and his modesty, quiet demeanor, strict integrity and excellent domestic habits make him a model citizen. He resides in New Jersey and is a man of great wealth. His firm handles 1,000,000 tons of coal per annum.

John F. Wilson is the gentleman who manages the New York office of that prominent corporation, the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal Company, whose annual output is 2,500,000 tons. He is about 55 years of age, is well known, and has been connected with the company for twenty-five years. He is a man of strong character and unquestioned ability. Though a Baltimorean by birth, he possesses the proverbial shrewdness and genius of the cutest Yankee.

THE STATE TOURNAMENT HERE.

The committee as published in THE PRESS of January 23, consisting of Messrs R. B. Keys, Eli Long, C. H. Thiers and F. A. Dunham, appointed from the Plainfield Chess Club, are busy perfecting arrangements for the annual meeting and tournament of the State Chess Association, to be held in this city, Feb. 22.

This meeting will be held in Laing's Hall and dinner will be served in the Hotel. The tournament will begin at 10 o'clock A. M., and may last till very late in the evening. A determined effort will be made by the most expert players of the State, to wrest from the Plainfield Club the championship cup that was won last year by Mr. R. B. Keys, of this city, President of the State Association and one of the most skillful players of the Plainfield Club.

This cup will be on exhibition in a few days in the window of Collier, the jeweler. The Plainfield members will also contest at the same time among themselves, for a special club prize that is to be put up under certain regulations, not yet decided on, as to how often it must be successively won before becoming the property of a winner.

Taken to The Asylum.

Thomas Van Nest, of South Plainfield, an account of whose strange actions appeared in THE PRESS a few days ago, has been declared insane by the Middlesex County Board of Chosen Freeholders, and on Thursday Jan. 24 Freeholder Garretson of New Market, took the unfortunate man to the insane asylum at Trenton for treatment.

The Semi-Annual Examination.

The half-yearly examinations of the pupils in St. Mary's school commencing January 21 were brought to a conclusion Friday. The examiners, Rev. Fathers Smyth, Stafford and Flood were pleased with the result and complimented the children on their progress, particularly in grammar and arithmetic. The Sisters have always urged the need of study and careful preparation at home for daily recitations in school and the intelligent answers of the children proved that the advice was not ineffectual.

A New Race Track.

It is stated that a race track is to be located on a plot of 112 acres within ten minutes' walk of the Union station at Elizabeth. The Central Railroad of New Jersey promises to build a spur that will carry passengers to the grand stand. Plans of the track are modelled after those of the Gravesend course. Dates are to be claimed early in the Spring and late in the Fall, so as not to interfere with the regular season in this State. October 16, 1889, is set for the opening day. It is said that the list of stockholders includes a number of Jersey Central Railroad people.

Went for the Husband And Got the Wife.

For several weeks past the police have been looking for John Dady, a young man residing on the Boulevard, for complicity in a row. Between three and four o'clock Friday afternoon Chief Carey and Officers Diesse, McCue, Lynch and Sliter, secreted themselves in an express wagon and were driven to Dady's residence. When the officers arrived at the place, they alighted and quickly surrounded the house. Mrs. Dady discovered the officers approaching and rushing into the house bolted the door.

The officers burst open the door, and as two of them started to ascend the stairway leading to the upper story, Mrs. Dady cooly and deliberately dropped a dish pan filled with dishes and greasy water upon the officers' heads. Officer Lynch was in the lead and his clothing was thoroughly saturated. Mrs. Dady was arrested, and Saturday Justice Nodyne held her for the Grand Jury, in default of $150 bail. Dady could not be found.

A New Church Organ.

The Methodist Episcopal church people have a Visitor in the shape of a four page paper published by their pastor, the Rev. Chas. B. Mitchell. It is full of interesting church news and notices, kind words of advice, sympathy and cheer, and is flavored with a little church gossip.

The salutatory says: "This little paper is printed in order to help on the work of our church. The pastor hopes by this means to talk at least once every month to every member of the church about the interests of our Zion. There are many of our number who, by reason of age or illness, are unable to attend the services of the church. We hope this little Visitor will be useful in keeping such persons posted in church matters and thereby keep alive their interest in God's cause. We do not intend to print a beautiful paper, but a neat and interesting one. Our aim is to awaken in all a greater interest in all the departments of our church work. This little messenger is sent out with the prayer that it may do good. The pastor does not wish to attract to himself, but to point Christ-ward."

A COUNTY COUNTRY CLUB.

At Finderne, Saturday, a number of gentlemen got off the 2.04 P. M. train from this city, to attend a meeting having the purpose in view of organizing a Country Club. The idea was started on New Year's Day among some of the members of the Finderne Park Association, of which David Bonner is President, C. N. Chalfers is Secretary and John C. Shaw is Treasurer. Thirty of those present signified their desire at once to become members, and have already sent their names for enrollment.

On account of the location near Somerville, and the close proximity of large towns in other counties whose dividing lines are only a short distance away, it was thought practicable to put residents of adjoining counties on the same footing. Indeed as the county line—it might be said—bisects Plainfield, it would be absurd to include residents of one part and exclude those of another. More than this, it is contemplated at the organization this afternoon, to arrange for the choice of at least two of the Board of Governors from this city.

From the proposed constitution to be submitted for consideration, the following facts have been gleaned by a PRESS reporter in advance:

The Club will be called the Somerset County Country Club, and is established for the purpose of affording the residents of the county a convenient place of resort by the maintenance of a Club House for the entertainment of themselves and their friends, the development of an interest in the picturesque scenery of the neighborhood, and the cultivation of a love for athletic exercises and out-door sports.

The affairs and management of the Club will be entrusted to a Board of fifteen Governors, three of whom shall go out each year and three chosen by the members to fill the vacancies.

This Board of Governors will have the sole power to elect members of the Club and the officers thereof, the latter of whom shall be chosen from the Board of Governors; they will have power to appoint such sub-committees from among their members as they think necessary. They will take cognizance of all infractions of its Constitution and By-Laws; will receive and act upon all suggestions or complaints of its members, and will have power to expel or suspend any member of the Club by a two-third vote of their number, if, in their judgment, his conduct has been prejudicial to the best interests of the Club.

Candidates for membership must be twenty-one years of age, and be proposed by one member of the Club and seconded by another, neither of whom shall be a Governor. A book shall be kept for this purpose, which shall be open to the inspection of the members of the Club.

Every person elected shall, within ten days after being informed thereof by the Secretary, pay an entrance fee of Twenty-five dollars and sign the Constitution. Every member shall pay the sum of 12 dollars annually, in four equal payments in advance, on the first days of January, April, July and October in each year. The family of any member shall be entitled to such privileges as the Board of Governors may by rule adopt.

Any person not residing or doing business in the county of Somerset, but residing or doing business in any of the counties adjoining, may be elected a member of this Club, upon the payment of the regular entrance fee, and shall be liable for the payment of the annual dues, and shall be entitled to all the rights and privileges of this Club with the other members.

Strangers may, at the discretion of the Board of Governors, and under such regulations as they shall provide, and upon the payment of such dues as they shall determine, be admitted to the Club and to such privileges therein as may be provided for by the Board of Governors.

Of Interest to Landlords.

The State Court of Errors has decided that where a landlord accepts a surrender of the lease by his tenant before the expiration of the term, he cannot thereafter sue the tenant for a breach of covenant as to the repair and condition of the demised premises, because the tenant cannot lawfully re-enter the premises after such surrender to make such repairs.

The Drake Will Live in Hopes.

Miss Rose Verdon, of North Plainfield, who is a great admirer of President Cleveland, named one of the finest drakes of her flock in honor of him. The drake was to be dressed and served in grand style on the 4th of March if Cleveland was elected. But as he was not elected, and Miss Verdon does not want to see the drake in the soup, too, she has asked a farmer to take him out to his farm to be kept until the next Democratic President is elected.

Scotch Plains Roll of Honor.

The December Roll of Honor of the Scotch Plains Public School, is as follows:

Principal's room, Class A—Mamie Mercier, Fannie Haskard, Anna Radin, Nellie Hollingsworth; Class B—Gertrude Calkins, Mabel Mooney, Amy Cook, Anna Murphy, Mamie Murphy; Class C—Nancy Wade, Ella Frentz, Hattie Gibson, Sadie Walpole, Mamie Collins, Lillie Nicholl.

Miss Earl's room, Class A—Lizzie Reick, Roger Haskard, Albert Hollingsworth, Gussie Rose; Class B—Jeppe Sorensen; Class C—Jennie Coyte, Etta Cook, Nettie Reick, Mamie Bancroft.

Miss Allen's room, Class A—Horace Young; Class B—Emma Gibbs, Harry Hall, Horace Hand, Henrietta Beason, Frank Pfister, Charley Hall, Harry Ilsley; Class C—Christine Sorensen, Gabrielle Bocton, John Beason.

Nearly Lost Her Eye.

Miss Carrie Spencer, a young lady residing at Washingtonville, met with a painful accident on Jan. 22, which nearly resulted in the loss of one of her eyes.

The young lady had just opened one of the doors of a cylinder stove, when a piece of red-hot coal snapped from the fire striking her directly in the eye. The burning coal imbedded itself firmly in the eye-ball, and it was with great difficulty that it was removed by members of the family. Miss Spencer suffered excruciating pain, and was obliged to walk the floor all night. Dr. Whitcott was summoned early on the following morning and prescribed the usual remedies. The doctor has hopes of preserving the sight, but the eye is yet very much swollen and inflamed.

HUSBAND AGAINST DAUGHTER.

A contest is going on in the Court of Appeals in New York, before the Judges sitting in Albany, over the estate of the late Mrs. Lurad C. Heath, who for many years resided with her husband and daughter Emma, near what is now known as Darby's Fur Factory, at Scotch Plains.

Lurad C. Heath, died about 1870. The daughter Emma, had previously married Dr. Sumner A. Mason, a New York physician. Mrs. Heath, soon after her first husband's death, married John Libbey, of Orono, Maine. This displeased the daughter and her husband, for Mrs. Heath had considerable property, and it was feared by Dr. Mason and wife that the second husband would impair their rights to his wife's estates. Mr. Libbey was a man of property, and Mrs. Heath was worth from $50,000 to $100,000 in her own right.

Emma was in litigation with her mother for ten or fifteen years before the latter's death, which occurred in 1886. The litigation was mostly in New York City and Brooklyn. After Mrs. Libbey's death litigation commenced with Mr. Libbey and Emma. Letters were granted to Emma to administer on her mother's estate on the ground of Mr. Libbey's alleged residence in Maine.

The case has reached the Court of Appeals of the State of New York, and was argued on behalf of Mr. Libbey on Tuesday by Chauncey B. Ripley, of Westfield, who has been in all the litigation referred to, acting for Mrs. Libbey, during her life-time, and then for Mr. Libbey after her death. The Albany Argus of Jan. 23 has the following:

No. 124. John Libbey, appellant, agt. Emma J. Mason, respondent. Appeal from an order of General Term, Second Department, affirming a decree or order of the surrogate of Kings county denying letters of administration to John Libby, appellant, husband of Lydia C. Libbey, deceased, intestate, and granting such letters to Emma J. Mason, respondent, her married daughter, on the ground that he is not a resident of the State of New York, but lives at Orono, Me., while the daughter is a resident of New York City. The property consists of real and personal estate in New York and Kings counties. The General Term held that the husband had the better right under the Revised Statutes, but declined to reverse the decree on the ground that the letters had been properly issued under section 2662, Code of Civil Procedure, the husband not having been cited. Mrs. Mason is the only daughter by a former husband of the intestate, who died in Brooklyn. C. B. Ripley for appellant; N. B. Cooke for respondent.

A Few Facts For Elizabeth.

(From the Central Times.)

We reproduce elsewhere an editorial from the Elizabeth Journal in which that paper pleads as a reason for adopting a high license system in Elizabeth the alleged success of the system in Plainfield. While it is a very desirable thing for Elizabeth to do something to abate the liquor evil in that community, and while it might be agreed to have it make a beginning in the reform by wiping out some of its numerous saloons through a high license system, we object to the use of Plainfield's experience as an argument for adopting such a system.

Plainfield always had fewer saloons than other towns of its size, even before the present five hundred dollar license fee was fixed. It never licensed as many as thirty places, as the Journal intimates, nor more than half that number. It has, on the other hand, issued more licenses under the present large fee than it did some of the time under the three hundred dollar fee.

What has kept down the number of saloons in Plainfield has been the persistent opposition to the liquor traffic by temperance people. For the last twenty years there has hardly been a charter election when this opposition did not make itself felt in some form. Though it may not have resulted, with one or two exceptions, in the election of anti-license councils, the councils chosen have been composed of a good class of citizens who have had regard in a certain degree to the strong temperance sentiment in the city, and have not licensed all persons who have applied. Last year, for example, the council respected this sentiment and refused licenses to two applicants, and they were gentlemen of excellent reputation, too, who were ready to pay the five hundred dollar fee.

So the Times affirms, as it has over and over again, that it has been due to the unceasing protests of the large temperance element of the city and not to the high license system that the liquor traffic of Plainfield has been confined to a comparatively small number of dealers. We do not believe the number would have been any larger, had there been no license fee whatever to pay.

This view is supported by what is seen in the borough of North Plainfield, a separate community in its government, but one with Plainfield in every other respect. There is no high license there, and yet that place of 4,000 people has but two licensed bars. This is owing principally to the prevalence of the temperance sentiment which asserts itself before the courts and elsewhere, as the same sentiment makes itself felt in Plainfield in one form and another.

—There is great activity among those desirous of "moving" this Spring. Desirable houses at moderate rents are extremely scarce.

Who's He?

The Messenger of Somerville, says: "It is reported that Rev. Louis J. Lockwood of Plainfield has become insane." The name does not appear in the city directory.

Rahway Excited.

The hotel keepers of Rahway, N. J., are in dismay over the action of the City Council of that place. Tuesday night the Park House, the chief hotel of the place was refused a renewal of the license.

John W. Weldon, the manager of the establishment, is going to test the right of the Council to deny his application. He has taken legal advice, and intends to make a vigorous fight.

A Prominent Corner to be Built Up.

On January 23, Mr. Edward Love consummated the purchase of the property at the corner of North avenue and Peace street, probably the most desirable building site in the city today. He will erect thereon an extensive building, 32x65, the entire lower floor of which will be thrown into one store, and the upper stories will be used as the designing and work rooms for Mr. Love's manufactory of wall-paper printing rolls.

Notified to Leave.

Complaints have been numerous of late, concerning the notorious den of colored people who inhabit the rookery on East Fourth street, opposite the Crescent building. It is alleged that eight distinct families and a dog inhabit two small rooms, and fights and brawls are of nightly occurrence there.

The owner of the place has become tired of hearing the complaints, and has notified the occupants that they must seek quarters elsewhere. This action is endorsed by the respectable people living in the neighborhood.

A Long Legal Contest Ends in Peace.

The case between Wm. Chism and Charles Schipper occupied Judge Van Syckel and a jury Jan. 23 from 10:30 A. M. to 5:30 P. M. The Court remained to so late an hour hoping that the case might be concluded. It was an action brought by the plaintiff for extra work done in building a house and barn for the defendant in this city, the amount claimed being $284.50. The evidence was not all in when the Court adjourned.

After adjournment the parties and their lawyers got together, and each side making concessions, a friendly settlement was soon reached, and the gentlemen who had been fighting in the different Courts for nearly two years, shook hands and, to all appearances, parted the best of friends. Of course, this takes the case away from the Court and jury.

The Union County Records.

Surrogate Parrot, Judges McCormick and Gilhooley, Assemblymen Marsh and Voorhees, W. H. Corbin and other prominent members of the Union County Bar have petitioned the Freeholders, "that they and all persons whose business calls them to examine the records of the county for deeds, mortgages and other legal conveyances, are greatly hindered and put to loss of time and expense, and compelled to interfere with the duties of the County Clerk and his officers, and to suffer mutual annoyance, on account of the manner in which the daily entries of recorded instruments are kept. They also represent that under the present system mistakes are very likely to occur, and innocent parties put to great loss. They therefore ask that some new system may be adopted by which a daily entry may be made of every name appearing in each recorded instrument, and to which the public may have access at all times or that some other system than the present be adopted by which the public may be protected."

Real Estate Transfers.

[From the Somerville Messenger.]

The following transfers of real estate have recently been made in North Plainfield Township, and the deeds for the same have been recorded in the County Clerk's office at Somerville:

Maillard's Bon Bons.

The finest French confectionery that we know of is made by Maillard of New York, who has just opened a shop in the arcade of the Equitable Building, 120 Broadway. This is on the street floor of the building, and it is one of the brightest little shops that is to be found in the arcade. Visitors to New York who go to see the sights always go to the Equitable Building as one of the principal sights of the city, and they will be glad to know that Maillard is right at hand to furnish anything they want in fine confectionery.

A Word to the Wise.

If every male citizen would exert himself a little to remove the snow from the public foot-path in front of his domicile as soon as the slippery stuff ceases to fall, much vexation of spirit, many bruises, and vast volumes of high-seasoned language would be surely avoided. We wish that every owner of a brick pavement in this town would paste this paragraph on his snow-shovel, and then hang the shovel where he can see it in the early morning after the next snow.

—The "musical critic" of the News, in writing of the Juch concert, speaks of Miss Aus Der Ohe's playing of Liszt's "brilliant Rhapsodie Hongroise." Poor simple News! That was the selection on the programme, but that was not what she played.

PURE MILK.

It is the duty of the Board of Health of Plainfield among other things, to see that no milk is sold or offered for sale within the city limits, which is in any way adulterated or of an unwholesome character.

It having been alleged that unhealthy milk was being introduced into Plainfield from the Netherwood Farm, the Board visited that dairy Tuesday, January 22. By a careful examination of the premises, and a thorough inspection of the milch cows, and all other members of the numerous herd, it is the unanimous opinion of the Board that the unfavorable reports circulated recently are entirely erroneous, if not wilfully malicious and sensational. Every thing about the farm is in an unquestioned sanitary condition.

In the judgment of the Board the milk furnished by this Dairy cannot fail to be pure and wholesome.

—Oh! for a Y. M. C. A. building.

—The Borough Council will meet in regular session on Friday evening of this week.

—It is said that the two trials of Morris Nolan will probably cost Somerset county $7,000.

—One new member was admitted into the M. E. church, at the morning service, Sunday.

—The City Council will hold its regular monthly meeting on Monday evening of next week.

—No less than seven ex-Assemblymen are holding offices in the two houses of the Legislature this Winter.

—A bill has been introduced in the State Senate making the compensation for grand jurors the same as petit jurors.

—Mr. R. J. Shaw's code of weather signals are a great benefit to the residents of this city, many of whom govern themselves accordingly.

—A bill has been introduced into the House of Assembly providing for the appropriation of $500 a year to each military company for uniforms and armory rent.

—An intoxicated woman created quite a sensation on West Front street, Saturday evening. She was finally spirited away by her friends before the police interfered.

—There were two converts baptized at the First Baptist church Sunday morning after an appropriate sermon suitable for the occasion by the pastor, Rev. D. J. Yerkes.

—The Summit Record in its last issue, says: "Being in Plainfield last week, we noticed several boys tapping sugar-maple trees, and we were assured that the sap ran plentifully."

—The members of the Plainfield Gesang and Turn Verein, will tender themselves and their friends an evening sociable, at their new hall on Somerset street, Monday evening, February 4.

—The Mission Band of the Presbyterian churches of this city will reap a profit of about $60 from the cake and candy sale held Jan. 24 in the parlors of the Crescent Avenue church.

—In ten years New Jersey Central stock has been down to 13¼, up again to 112, down to 31, and last week was selling at 98. The value of the road has not changed a particle in that time.

—One unfortunate man, whose name is omitted out of consideration for his family, was gathered in by the police on Saturday night for disorderly conduct. This morning Mayor Male fined him $3.

—As a matter of history, it will be interesting to remember that the first real snowstorm of 1889, in this region, occurred on Sunday, Jan. 20. This is a little past mid-Winter, very late indeed for snow in these parts.

—As a specimen of consistency, commend us to the business man who complains of people for going out of town to buy their goods, while he gives orders for printing to drummers for "rat" printing offices, instead of getting his work at one of the home offices.

—Next Saturday will be what is known as Candlemas Day, when it is customary for the congregation to present candles to the church, to be used on the altar at the different services during the year. There will be mass in St. Mary's church at 8 o'clock, Saturday morning.

—Another class for beginners will be formed in Prof. [illegible]'s school for dancing and esthetics, at Front and Grove streets, Monday afternoon of next week, at 3:45 o'clock. These classes are growing so rapidly that arrangements are being made to secure larger rooms.

—Three more were Jan. 23 added to the total of over 100 digits that have been mashed shapeless or destroyed entirely in the workshops of the Pond Tool Co., since its establishment in this city. This latest victim had three fingers crushed under a falling piece of heavy metal, and may lose them altogether.

—The Firemen's Herald in its issue of last week, says: "The Mayor of Plainfield, N. J., recommends that the Legislature be petitioned to amend the laws so as to give the same benefit of exemption to Plainfield firemen who became exempt in the service of the old Fire Department, as if that Department had always been controlled by the city."

—A hotel proprietor of this city and an ex-politician of the Borough, went fishing along the brook, recently, in search of suckers and eels. In their wanderings they struck a country tavern, and a break was made for the bar at once. The astonishment of the rustic innkeeper may be imagined, when the hotel proprietor called for absinthe and "Dave" asked for a gin fizz.

—It will be remembered that the first two observation days of Winter, December 1 and 2, were warm and clear, which according to the old saying foretold that December and January would be decidedly "open" months. The old saying has proved true, in this particular instance. The third observation day was not so pleasant, so we may expect most of our Winter weather in February.

—The ball and cake walk given by the Messrs Martin Bros., Quartette, at The Crescent, evening Jan. 28, was a grand success. There was a large number of white persons present to witness the walking for the cake, which competent judges awarded to Mr. Wm. Pettis and Miss Ida Tucker, for the most graceful walking. Dancing followed until an early hour this morning.

—Manager G[illegible]man, of the Plainfield Cornet Band, has received an invitation from the Phil Kearney Post, Drum and Fife Corps of Newark, extending to the Plainfield Band an invitation to attend the first annual ball of the drum corps, to be held at Park Hall, Newark, Monday evening, Feb. 18. The Band will hold a meeting to-morrow evening to act upon the invitation, which will in all probability be accepted.

PLAINFIELD BIRDS WIN.

A desperate and bloody cock-fight took place at a resort in East Newark, Monday evening, between birds owned in this city and a similar number of game cocks from Long Island. The conditions were for a purse of $100, the birds to weigh in.

About a dozen sports from this city were present to witness the main, which continued until an early hour this morning. Eleven fierce and bloody rounds were fought, the Plainfield birds winning six out of eleven. The main last night is the third which Plainfield has won with Long Island birds. A large amount of money changed hands on the result.

Several of the Plainfield sports missed the first train from Newark Monday, so they "hoofed it" to Elizabeth, arriving home during the forenoon.

Miss Julia Jermaine Ketcham gave a musicale at her home on East Fifth street, afternoon Jan. 24, to a number of invited guests, upon which occasion her pupils vocally acquitted themselves greatly to their own credit and to that of their instress. Those who sang were the Misses Kate Potter, Bessie Blair, Emily Huff, Kittie Glenn, Carrie C. Dewey and Miss Ketcham. Miss Dewey also played.

IN SATIN KNICKERBOCKERS.

The most unique affair held this Winter or probably ever held in Plainfield, was given Tuesday by the Whist Club, at the residence of Mrs. John W. Murray on Central avenue. The Whist Club, this season, has given a "Ladies Night" once every month, and that evening they succeeded in eclipsing in brilliancy anything ever before attempted. This time the event was an old-fashioned card party and the young ladies all appeared in "old-fashioned" costumes.

Several of these which were especially artistic, were made expressly for the occasion, but all were very beautiful and appropriate. Some representing the gowns worn in the times of our grandmothers and great-grandmothers, and some dating as far back as the sixteenth Century and the Empire. But the sensation of the evening was caused by the entire Whist Club appearing in black satin Knickerbockers, evening dress coats, black silk stockings, low shoes with huge silver buckles, powdered hair, etc.

Everybody said the "Knickerbockers" were a pronounced success, and many were the congratulations the Club received, and many were the expressions of hope that they had "come to stay" and form a necessary auxiliary to correct evening dress.

Before the dancing began the large dining room was thrown open and the whole company sat down to an old-fashioned dinner. The long table extending the full length of the room, was beautifully decorated with flowers and fruit and other "fixins," and when the young people had gathered round it with their quaint gowns and powdered hair it reminded one of some state dinner of a hundred years ago. Meanwhile the parlors had been cleared and after supper the "old" folks returned and spent the remainder of the evening in the "Mazy Waltz," or gliding through the "Stately Minuet" or "Dancing in the Barn."

The whole affair was a great success and reflects much credit on those who had the matter in charge.

ONE YEAR OF MARRIED LIFE.

The members and friends of Trinity Reformed church turned out in large numbers, Tuesday, to pay their respects to Rev. Mr. Schenck, the pastor, and his wife, the occasion being the first anniversary of their marriage.

From the pulpit in Trinity Reformed church, on Sunday, Rev. Mr. Schenck read an announcement to the effect that a "general" sociable would be held in the lecture room, on Tuesday evening. A cordial invitation was extended to all. The invitation was generally accepted, and when the pastor and his wife entered the lecture room, that evening, they were surprised to find a large and merry throng awaiting their arrival. The pastor and his wife at once mingled with the audience, and gave a kindly greeting to all.

Mr. Chas. Wheeler, Vice President of the Young People's Society, called the audience to order soon after eight o'clock, and announced from an informal programme, a duett by Messrs B. T. Barnes and E. E. Runyon, Mrs. Barnes accompanying on the piano, followed by a recitation by Miss Abbie Wilson of Dunellen, entitled "On the Tennessee." Mrs. E. H. Bird and Mr. E. E. Runyon rendered a duett in excellent manner, and Miss Fannie Gaskill of New Market, convulsed the audience with her quaint sayings, reciting a piece entitled "I'm Ninety-five," and wondering why others of her sex

While yet so young,
Should be governed
By a husband's tongue.

The young lady was attired in ancient costume, and her dialect was of "ye olden tyme." She was assisted by her sister, Miss Millie Gaskill.

Mr. Runyon followed with a solo, after which Mr. Daniel Van Winkle was announced to "recite." His recitation took the form of a presentation speech. Mr. Van Winkle said he had been appointed a messenger to convey to Mrs. Schenck the handsome gold watch and chain, which he then transferred to her.

Mrs. Schenck was entirely dumbfounded—the surprise was complete—but quickly regaining her thoughts she made a brief address, thanking the congregation for so generously remembering her. At this point all joined in singing "Blest be the tie that binds."

Mr. and Mrs. Schenck were then presented with a beautiful painting in water color, representing a scene along Green Brook, the work of Mrs. P. P. Van Arsdale, to which Rev. Mr. Schenck responded, stating that he was more than usually embarrassed to-night because he had been called upon to help his wife out. He was not at all suspicious, but he had thought it rather strange why groups had dispersed in the church of late, whenever he approached; this was now clearly explained. He stated that the past year of his married life had been a pleasant and happy one. Mrs. Schenck, he continued, came here as a complete stranger, and was unacquainted with the duties devolving upon a pastor's wife. But the thoughtfulness and kindness of the people, had made the work easy and delightful. The reverend gentleman again thanked the congregation for the exceeding great kindness bestowed upon both his wife and himself, and expressed a hope that the work of the coming year would be prosperous and that much would be done for the Lord, whose we are and whom we serve.

At the close of Rev. Mr. Schenck's address, refreshments were served, and an hour or so was spent in general sociability.

The esteem in which Rev. and Mrs. Schenck are held by the members of Trinity Reformed church and Sunday school is noteworthy. The former is accomplishing much good work for the Master, and the latter carries on her share most worthily.

The purchasing committee and those having the entertainment in charge are to be congratulated upon the very able and efficient manner in which the affair was conducted. The committee was composed of the following ladies: Mrs. J. C. Van Dyke, Miss E. Benedict, and Mrs. W. L. VanDeventer, Miss S. R. Van Winkle, Miss Randall.

The watch presented to Mrs. Schenck is a solid gold, hunting-case, Swiss movement, Benedict Bros., make, with chain and charm attached.

Kendall—Maltby.

Notices were sent out January 24 announcing the marriage of Miss Harriet Ellen Maltby, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles R. Maltby of this city, to Mr. Hugh Harris Kendall of Corning, N. Y., which occurred at the residence of the bride's parents on Plainfield avenue, Wednesday Jan. 23 at seven o'clock, Rev. J. P. Taylor officiating. On account of the recent death of the groom's mother, the invitations were confined strictly to the immediate relatives of the bride and groom. Mr. and Mrs. Kendall left the city on a late train, expecting to return to Plainfield on a two weeks visit, before permanently locating at Corning, N. Y.

JUNIOR CLASS SERVICES.

Rev. C. B. Mitchell, pastor of the M. E. church in this city, has undertaken a commendable work, in the formation of a Juniors' Class, composed of the children of the members of the church and others who feel disposed to attend. Meetings are held every Friday afternoon, beginning at 3:45 and much good will doubtless result from the series of meetings which Rev. Mr. Mitchell has inaugurated for the young people. The attendance Friday numbered upwards of 250 children, ranging in age from five to fifteen years. Each member of the class is provided with a white badge, with the name of the class inscribed thereon, together with a card announcing ten lessons, covering a period from January 11 to March 15. The services Friday was the third in the series, and the subject was "The Herald of Jesus."

After formally opening the meeting Rev. Mr. Mitchell read the scripture from Luke, 1st chapter, 76th verse: "And thou, child, shalt be called the prophet of the Highest; for thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare his ways." Zacharias, the speaker said, told John the Baptist, his son, to go and prepare the way of the Lord; the latter told his people to repent for the King of the Heavens is at hand; every child can be a prophet of the Highest; Jesus wants you to be his messenger—a forerunner and helper.

Here the speaker told a touching incident of a boy who prevailed upon his father to accompany him to Sunday school; the father accompanied his son, learned to read, and in later years gathered 35,000 children into Sunday schools. By our prayers, words and questions, the speaker continued, we prepare the way for the Lord; Bishop Ames of the M. E. church was converted by hearing a little girl pray for her mother.

Mr. Mitchell closed his brief address by alluding to a man who had became so addicted to strong drink that he sold his household furniture, in order to obtain rum. His little daughter prevailed upon her father to sign the pledge, which he did, and today he lives in a happy home. First he said, you must have the Lord in your own hearts, and then you will be a herald of the Lord.

An informal programme of music and recitations followed, the numbers on the programme being announced by Mrs. C. VanVliet, Mrs. C. B. Mitchell, acting as precentor and Mrs. D. E. Davis as accompanist:

Recitation .... Mabel Jennings.
Recitation ...... "The Captain's daughter" ...... Lillie VanVliet.
Singing .... Junior class.
Recitation ...... "Jerry's New Pantaloons" ...... Lillie Thorn.
Recitation ...... "The Doll" ...... Florence Taylor.
Solo and chorus ...... Kitty Mitchell and Junior Class.

On the whole, the service was both pleasant and profitable, and was greatly enjoyed by those present.

TRUSTEES—F. M. Slater, J. P. Allis, A. L. Titsworth.

Resisted an Officer.

Martin Lotus, a typical tough from Bound Brook, came to Plainfield on Saturday and took on a cargo of Jersey lightning. Late at night Officer McCue attempted to arrest him on West Front street, and the officer was obliged to call for assistance in order to get the fellow to the station house. The prisoner fought like a tiger, and when the party arrived at the city jail, the officer's clothing was disarranged and bore evidence of a desperate struggle.

Monday A. M. the prisoner was arraigned before Justice Nodyne, on a State warrant, charging him with resisting an officer. The fellow trembled perceptibly when he pleaded the baby act, claiming that he was ignorant of the law. Justice Nodyne committed him to the county jail to await the action of the Grand Jury in default of $250 bail.

An Innocent Joke.

The special to THE PRESS from Trenton January 24, announcing that Worshipful Brother John Chandler of this city was a candidate for Grand Master of Masons of New Jersey, was no doubt intended for a practical joke. R. W., Brother Mann, the very able and distinguished Deputy Grand Master, was unanimously chosen as Grand Master, and justice would demand that no joke be carried on to reflect upon his candidacy.

Of course such a joke must have been as unpleasant to Mr. Chandler as it would be to any Mason not having the least intention of being a candidate for so high an office.

In the same way, and at the same time, Mr. B. Frank Coriell was nominated for Senior Grand Warden, and such pleasantry necessitated his arising and declining. Most Worshipful Grand Master Moore, replied that he believed that Mr. Coriell was named because he was one of the handsomest Masons of all those assembled.

THE LAST OF THE VENINO CONCERTS.

The closing one of the Venino Chamber-music concerts, was rendered in Seminary Hall, January 24, before the largest audience of the series despite the unpropitious weather. The Beethoven Quartette played beautifully and was heartily encored.

The especial feature of the evening, however, was Mr. Venino's playing. His first solo was the same nocturne of Chopin's that Mr. Wm. Sherwood played recently at Music Hall, and if it was Mr. Venino's purpose to show his audience how Chopin should be played, he thoroughly succeeded.

To play Chopin well, one must be possessed of a poetic nature full of emotion, and a refined touch. "Touch" in its vulgar sense is mechanical, teachable and belongs to technic; in its nobler sense it is a gift, cannot be imparted, and belongs to talent if not emotion. There is a certain timbre in inborn touch, as in a voice; an indescribable something, as it were, from the fibres of the soul which directly indicates and appeals to emotion. Such a touch has an inherent power, which, to a certain extent, can move and charm the listener even without brilliant technic.

The music-lovers will be glad to learn that these excellent concerts will again be given next season, and those who were present last night, especially, will look forward with impatient expectation.

INJUSTICE TO CHIEF DOANE.

There was never a plainer instance of how far men will be carried by their envy, jealousy, spite or miserable ill-nature, than is shown in the ways adopted by some of those who are opposed to the re-appointment of Chief Doane of the Fire Department. There are of those whose names are being used as opponents of Mr. Doane's appointment, some who claim they have been induced to sign by misrepresentation, and of such it would be most unjust to say that they were actuated by any of the baser motives. Yet they should no longer permit themselves to be used as a lever to accomplish the designs of others.

A dozen who have signed the remonstrance say that they did so because they were told that the Chief, in a letter to Mayor Male, spoke of some of the firemen as the "scum of the Department." Mr. Doane states that such a charge is a lie. He assures a PRESS reporter that he never wrote anything of the sort, and that those who are circulating that story against him know it is false. Consequently those who signed because of such a tale, will have their names removed—if they are honest.

Some say that because one-quarter of the members of "Gazelle"—Mr. Doane's own company—are opposed to his appointment, they signed the remonstrance. After reading the following they should demand that their names also be at once removed from the list of opponents.

We wish to state in justice to Gazelle Engine Company and to Chief Doane, that any report to the effect that "fifteen of the sixty members of Gazelle Company have signed a remonstrance against his re-appointment," is entirely false.

Of the fifty-four members of the company only four have signed any such paper, and one of those did so because the matter was misrepresented to him. He has since insisted that his name be removed. The feeling of the members of Gazelle Engine Company is entirely in favor of the re-appointment of the present efficient and faithful Chief, under whose direction they will most willingly serve the city at all times.

C. R. HOFF, Foreman.

T. A. SOFIELD, Secretary.

Others have been told that the Chief's management of the Crescent church fire showed inefficiency and want of coolness. But the fact of that matter is that the Board of Trustees of the Church held a special meeting for the purpose of "expressing their thanks to Chief Engineer T. O. Doane, for his valuable services in conducting the extinguishing of the fire," and the resolutions passed and published, further spoke of his "valuable aid in saving the main church edifice from being burned."

Such a pointed and emphatic endorsement, by such a body of men, was never accorded any other Chief of the Fire Department since Plainfield existed. Thus it seems certain that the present Chief is not in anyway incompetent nor unduly excitable in the greatest emergency. Therefore the cause of any remonstrance against his re-appointment must be looked for elsewhere.

Is it not a fact then, that his opponents are either actuated by envy, jealousy, spite or miserable ill-nature, or are being used under misapprehension by those who are? THE PRESS, however, has faith in Mayor Male's thorough understanding of this matter and his ability to discern the animus of the attacks on Chief Doane. The people may rest assured that the attacks are incited by no desire for their good—and they may also rest assured that Mr. Doane will probably be Chief of the Plainfield Fire Department for another year at least.

We Never Smoke.

Dr. Thiers of Plainfield, presented to The Fredonian this morning a box of the original Blackwell's Durham tobacco which was manufactured by a friend of the Doctor's in Virginia twenty-eight years ago. It is unnecessary to say that the tobacco is greatly appreciated. Thanks, Doctor; come again.—New Brunswick Fredonian.

The "White Cap" Scare.

Each incoming mail brings a quantity of "White Cap" letters. No less than a half-dozen letters were received by residents in this city Monday. The "scare" is getting to be somewhat of a "Chestnut." It will be noticed that in none of the letters, do the writers lay themselves liable, by threatening to do bodily injury. The letters simply give warning that the recipient should mend his ways.

Mrs. Lattimer Paralyzed.

The many friends of Mrs. Sarah Lattimer, of East Front street, who recently contributed $25,000 toward the cost of erecting the new First Presbyterian church, will regret to learn that on Thursday of last week she was stricken down with paralysis in the entire left side. The physician in charge reports her condition as most critical, with little or no chance of her recovery.

The Divorce Case Again Adjourned.

The case of Illsley vs. Illsley, came up again before Special Master John H. Van Winkle, morning Jan. 30. Although the Chancellor had not yet ruled on the admission of the letters published in THE PRESS, the taking of testimony was proceeded with.

Mrs. Lyons (formerly Miss Demming), Mrs. McDonald and Mr. John Dent, were called as witnesses for the complainant, but their testimony did not materially strengthen her case. Adjournment was then taken until Thursday, Feb. 7.

Will the Council and the Health Board be Bullied by the "news?"

The news is now endeavoring to give life to its faded advertising columns by the publishing gratuitously of city advertisements. Both the City Treasurer's Report and the Board of Health report recently published in the news, were specimens of such free advertising. Not only were they published without orders, but in face of the fact that the news was told not to publish them and that it would get no pay for them if it did.

The news proposes to bully the Council and the Health Board into paying for those advertisements, and the people will be somewhat interested to see which of the servants are so cowardly and so extravagant as to vote for paying again for advertising that has already been published legitimately and effectually in the Central Times and THE PRESS.

Where the Professionals Colonize.

Park avenue from Fourth to Seventh street, may well be proud of the residence thereon of so many of the most skillful and successful of the city's physicians and surgeons.

Drs. Endicott, Long, Fritts, Penfield, Rushmore, Davis, Lowrie and Manning, have undoubtedly saved the lives of many, "but," they say over the brook, "what profit a man if he gains a long life and loses his freedom or his property?"

Of the shining legal lights of the city and Borough, Esquires Jackson, Van Winkle, Reed and Cloid, live within a limit of three blocks on Duer street, and that thoroughfare is naturally proud of that. Often it is as difficult and as commendable a job to save a man's skin as to save his life.

A Few of the Places to Which it Accompanied a Plainfielder.

Umbrellas are not generally retained very long in the possession of the original holder, but we know of one that is an exception to this rule.

This Umbrella had travelled up to Jan. 1, 1889, 91,341 miles through many countries and on both the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. It has been up the Rhine, as well as the St. John River, to the top of St Paul Cathedral in London, as well as the Mormon Tabernacle in Salt Lake City.

It is not a stranger to San Francisco or Monterey—or to Havana or Winipeg. It has served as an alpenstock in the Cove of Belly-y-mar; in Cuba it has been used in Morro Castle and done good service along the banks of the Kaministiquia River, over the Marshall Pass, through the Indian Territory—in Santa Fe and Yuma has it been and once came very near being lost by being captured by train robbers in Arizona—through Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec.

To over one hundred and fifty principal cities in all the States but two has the owner carried it, besides having used it in England, Ireland, France, Germany, Belgium, Switzerland, California and elsewhere.

A few of these points of interest will be touched upon in a talk on "Travel" to be given soon in the Y. M. C. A. rooms.

AN ADDRESS BY MRS. ELLEN J. FOSTER.

Upon invitation, a few of the personal friends of Mr. and Mrs. Aaron M. Powell, were present at their residence No. 39 East Sixth street, January 24, to listen to an address by Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, President of the State W. C. T. U. of Iowa.

Mr. A. M. Powell, Editor of the Temperance Advocate, first spoke of his long personal friendship with Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, and expressed pleasure in having her present. He said she would speak of the temperance work in Iowa.

Mrs. Foster said that Iowa had a prohibitory law in 1855. It was not passed by either of the present great parties. In 1857 they virtually repealed it by adding a free bill clause. This law was a great educator, and prepared Iowa for future legislation. In 1880 the women began vigorously to agitate in favor of submitting a constitutional amendment, and after a time the legislature consented to submit it. This was not a party measure, for the dominant party refused to commit itself. "In fact," said Mrs. Foster, "the party did not take up the question, but the question took up the party." It was carried by 30,000 majority, but the Supreme Court over a technicality declared it not adopted. It was carried at a special election, free from politics. Then the next legislature passed a statutory law and all temperance people rejoiced. Did this law prohibit? Most assuredly. In 80 out of 99 counties there was not a saloon. Many jails were empty, crime had greatly decreased, and in the other 19 counties saloons were nearly crushed out. The people would never repeat it.

In conclusion she took strong ground against wine drinking and "High License." Nothing but total abstinence and constitutional prohibition would crush out this evil.

Mr. Foster then made a very short address.

Remarks were made by Rev. Dr. Lewis, Rev. E. M. Rodman, Rev. W. E. Honeyman, Rev. Mr. Mitchell, Rev. Mr. Goodrich, Editor Leonard, Mrs. Dr. Tomlinson, Mrs. P. M. French and Mrs. Dr. Kimball, after which refreshments were served.

Following is a list of those present: Rev. Dr. Rodman and wife, Rev. Dr. Lewis and wife, Rev. Mr. Honeyman and wife, Rev. Mr. Mitchell and wife, Rev. Mr. Goodrich, Editor Leonard, Dr. H. H. Lowrie and wife, Dr. T. H. Tomlinson and wife, Dr. Kimball, wife and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. P. M. French, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. F. Opdyke, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Place, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Harder, Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Gavett, Mrs E P. Williams, Mrs. Maxson, Mr. and Mrs. Moore, Mr. and Mrs. Rushmore, Mrs. Woods, Mrs. Petrie and many others.

Another Accident at the Tool Works.

Mr. Thos. Kiernan, one of the employees of the Pond Tool Works, met with an accident, about 3:30 Friday, P. M., that resulted in a broken leg for the unfortunate man. A heavy "core" of metal, weighing many a hundred pounds, was being lifted off a car, when the crane let it fall and Kiernan's leg was caught beneath it.

A Great Discovery.

The fact that castor oil, as vile a medicine as was ever discovered, has so long held its own as a laxative, is because, until HAMBURG FIGS were discovered, no medicine could take its place. Now, however, ladies and children take HAMBURG FIGS and like them. 25 cents. Dose, one fig. J. G. Miller, Agent, Plainfield.

I have not used all of one bottle yet. I suffered from catarrh for twelve years, experiencing the nauseating dropping in the throat peculiar to that disease, and nose bleed almost daily. I tried various remedies without benefit until last April, when I saw Ely's Cream Balm advertised in the Boston Budget. I procured a bottle, and since the first day's use have had no more bleeding—the soreness is entirely gone.—D. G. Davidson, with the Boston Budget, formerly with Boston Journal.

Just time enough since the Holidays to take breath and settle down to business. We have been looking about a bit to see what others engaged in the same line of business as ourselves are saying and doing.

It's funny, to say the least, to read the announcements. Here's one who thinks he has a monopoly of all the good clothing made in the world; no clothing but his is fit to wear. Here's another who thinks his method of business the only proper one; all others are "dead" wrong. A third says his clothing is 30 per cent. cheaper than any other. All sorts of inducements are offered, on paper, to attract buyers.

What are we doing? Well we find that the old method of giving an honest dollar's worth for a dollar, without bragging, to be more popular than ever, judged by the growth of our business during 1888. We say this and know it to be true: Not a real point of advantage to be obtained anywhere will be forfeited by dealing with us. Our bid for your patronage for 1889 is the same which we have made for a quarter of a century.

Honest statements about our goods; garments perfect in fit; minute attention to all details connected with the manufacture; and prices which, comparing the goods, cannot be beaten. It will pay you to watch our announcements during the present year. It will save you not a little uncertaintw and a good deal of time and money to patronize us when in need of clothes for self or children.

WHEN WORK IS DONE.

It is as if the world were glad!
Whether in light or darkness clad,
The hour is never dull or sad
When work is done.

The very [illegible] in the street
Are tuned to notes more soft and sweet;
We love all things we chance to meet
When work is done.

The gentle [illegible] of the breeze,
The [illegible] of the trees,
And every sound, has power to please
When [illegible] is done.

[illegible]
When work is done.

Life's [illegible]
[illegible]
When work is done.

But when the [illegible] of labor close,
[illegible]
When work is done?

Oh, kind [illegible], let Thy rest
[illegible]
And [illegible] who do their best,
Say [illegible] "Well done!"

—Margaret [illegible]

A COQUETTE.

How Ruby Howard Was Taught a Severe But Valuable Lesson.

"How absurdly disagreeable you can make yourself, Jack! Now, there—I'm not going to quarrel with you. How much longer are you going to keep me here [illegible]?" Ruby laughed aloud in her usual [illegible]. Jack looked at her, his face as black as a thunder-cloud, [illegible] but she was in no way appalled by it. On the contrary, she looked at him [illegible] as if she were perfectly [illegible] for him to open his mouth.

"Miss Howard," he began.

"Miss Howard," she mimicked, mockingly. "Since when, pray? How ceremonious we grow, to be sure."

[illegible]

"Ha, ha!" and her sweet, low laugh rang out [illegible]

[illegible]

"Well, of all things!" she murmured. [illegible]

[illegible]

The next day Miss Ruby failed to meet Jack as usual. [illegible]

[illegible]

Four years after Jack had gone Ruby was at a fashionable watering place, [illegible]

[illegible]

One day she was taking her morning stroll, [illegible]

[illegible]

"Oh," she said aloud, in a troubled voice, "does he know I am here, and will he [illegible]?"

[illegible]

The man came up and stopped beside Jack, who said impatiently: "Why did you come for me so soon?"

"Why, sir, you told [illegible] an hour, and it is up since."

"I don't believe it's up," Jack cried, violently, "but, because I am a poor, blind stick you think you can fool me. But you can't. Go away and let me be in peace if you can, and don't dare to come near me again under an hour from now. Do you understand? An hour from now, a whole hour."

"Yes, sir, I understand," replied poor Peter, deprecatingly, preparing to move off, after casting a glance at the watch he wore to make sure of the time.

"Stay," called Jack, irritably. "First tell me if any one is anywhere in sight. I don't want to sit here as a show for any one if I can help it."

"Not a soul, sir, to be seen," responded Peter, cheerily.

"Then clear out," was the gentle reply.

After Peter's retreating form was lost to view Ruby stole forth pale and trembling—her eyes moist with tears of pity. How wretched he looked—how sad—how she pitied him! She forgot everything except her love for him and wished to comfort him. On the impulse of the moment she went to him and put both soft, round arms around his neck and laid her cheek against his. Her sudden embrace aroused him effectually from the gloomy thoughts he was indulging in, and gave him a little shock. But as soon as he could collect his scattered senses he became aware that it was a woman! Yes, a woman! A bad woman, no doubt! Did she intend to strangle him, or what? The novelty of it pleased him. He remained perfectly still and awaited developments like a philosopher.

"Jack—Jack Hunter, don't you know me?" said a tearful voice in his ear.

"Heavens! That voice! Ruby!" he cried, doubtingly, but nevertheless drawing both arms about her and drawing her to him while he rained kisses on her face. At last he drew her gently down on the rustic bench beside him and said: "My darling, words are not needed to tell me it is Ruby, or that you love me. But tell me—you are still free as I am?"

He did not ask how, or why she happened to be there. He did not care. That she was there, was the one supreme thought of that happy moment.

"I am still Ruby Howard," she murmured in reply.

"Thank God!" he said, reverently, "and for this later. And now, will you, dear one—heart of my heart, marry me, as I am—a blind man?"

"Yes, Jack, gladly, if you will have me. I have longed for you ever since you left me," she whispered.

"My treasure!" he cried. "It was cruel of me. We will never part again; we will get married at once—within the week," he went on, in the eager overmastering way that she well remembered. "Your people will not object, I fondly imagine, for I am rich, you know, and all that, besides I am only blind for a season. My blindness is the result of an accident, happy accident that brought me home to consult a specialist. He tells me if I be patient and very careful I will see in six months, and perhaps sooner. Oh, if I could but only see now! But I can wait and I would not exchange places with any one on earth."—"Clover Jr.," in Albany Journal.

American Weapons of War.

The Fuji Shimpo strongly advises Japan to go to America for weapons of war. "While the people of Europe on the one side are crouching ready to spring at each other's throats, and on the other the nations of Asia are barely maintaining their independence, the United States," it says, "continues moving forward in a steady, unvarying line of progress and prosperity. These people seem heedless of what occurs in other parts of the world; but they are not so in reality, for they do not fail to turn to good account the prevailing condition [illegible] of other civilized nations. Full of inventive genius and rich in capital, they have been enabled to take practically the lead in the manufacture of arms and other appliances of war. The men-of-war constructed by them lately have evoked the admiration of Europe; the dynamite gun is a product of the States, and they are well ahead in the manufacture of torpedo-boats and torpedoes."

Wealth in Wives or Dogs.

In some parts of Africa a man's wealth is judged by the number of his wives. A man with forty wives is looked upon as a sort of business king. His wives probably go out washing at fifty cents a day, or make shirts at forty cents a dozen. In this country a man's wealth is judged by the number of dogs he owns. The possessor of eight dogs is generally too poor to pay school tax, and his wife takes in washing.

THE WAITER GIRL'S LIFE.

Something About the Good Angels Who Bring Hungry Men Their Dinners—Not Always Pretty, But Young—They Work from Six in the Morning Till Seven at Night, Never Take Tips, but Will Sometimes Flirt, in Spite of the Rules.

HURRY or you'll be late. It's half-past five now."

Some such salutation as this wakes the pretty waiter girl these winter mornings and she must jump up and dress quickly and walk perhaps a dozen squares, for riding is usually out of the question, since only the cars on certain lines run so early. Promptly at six she is expected to reach the restaurant where she is employed and she is on duty until seven at night. If smart and capable she receives three dollars a week and board.

Waiter girls are not always pretty, says the Philadelphia Press, but they invariably are young. A gray-haired woman of fifty who has worked in a restaurant since she was sixteen, told me she could no longer obtain employment as a waitress.

"A man doesn't want to look at an old face while he's eating," she explained. "It is hard to get a place in a restaurant, for the girls never leave unless they get married. They know if they do leave they can't get back, and when you've been a waitress awhile you don't want anything else. You have your evenings after eight o'clock and one afternoon a week and perhaps Sundays."

Youth, good nature and steady nerves are the requisites of the successful waiter girl. It is not likely she will ever forget her first day as a waitress. Customers always notice a new face and if [illegible] glasses are broken the other girls are jealous.

"It doesn't do to change help often," said the proprietor of a large restaurant. "If a man comes in and says: 'Where's Mollie?' and Mollie's gone, he'll be gone, too. You see, Mollie knew just how he liked his coffee and whether he preferred rare or well-done meat, and what dishes he disliked or fancied, and he [illegible] when she waited on him. So, of course, he misses Mollie, and perhaps twenty or thirty others miss her, too. You can see it doesn't pay to let Mollie go if a dollar more a week will keep her, but few restaurant girls get over four dollars and board, and three dollars a week is all most of them earn."

It is hard to believe that the awkward country lassie, who asks in a timid whisper if you 'will have tea or coffee, and on being told the latter, brings you milk, will ever develop into the accomplished waitress who can take a dozen orders at once and carry steadily a tray of heavy dishes and keep an apron clean two days. Restaurant people agree in preferring country girls who have led such quiet lives that they enjoy the excitement incident to an eating house, and will at least stay until the novelty wears off, although once a waitress always a waitress seems to be the rule.

"A restaurant is a good place to study human nature," said a girl who had been waitress eight years in one place. "Did you ever know a man good-natured when he's hungry? Now, imagine waiting on fifty hungry men in an hour, and nearly every one of them calling to you to step lively and not be all day when you're hardly taking time to breathe. Then some one will ask, 'Isn't my soup ever coming?' 'In a minute, sir,' I'll tell him, and he'll take out his watch and say, 'Now, I'll time you,' and when the minute is up and no soup he's madder than ever.

"Four girls and myself have waited on six hundred men in three hours, and I took in the cash, too. We called this 'slinging hash.' The man I dread waiting on is the one who orders a fifteen-cent dinner just because he's too stingy to pay for a fifty-cent meal. Poor men are never any trouble; it's the mean rich ones I hate to see come in the door, and I'd rather wait on ten men than one woman. I never accept fees. Sometimes a gentleman will leave a quarter under his plate, but I put it in the cash-drawer with a check."

What are called "half-time girls" work from eleven to three, thus helping through the busiest part of the day. These girls receive two dollars per week, and most of them have comfortable homes, only needing to earn their clothes. They are a well-dressed crowd, who talk about "going to theaters," and would think it a great hardship to be obliged to rise at half-past five and work until seven, like the "full-time" girls.

Of course the popular restaurant girls are glad when Christmas comes and are often loaded down with gifts. Often a subscription book is started and the girl's friends put down their names for a certain amount. I heard of a waitress who received in this way thirty dollars besides being given several boxes of handkerchiefs, bottles of cologne, books and some ten pounds of candy. A gold watch is no uncommon gift and certainly at holiday time the pretty waiter girl fares very well.

FASHION LETTER.

An Interesting Chat on Feminine Apparel—New Dinner Dresses—Novelties in Jackets—Dresses for the Ball-Room and the Street—Pretty Dresses for Children.

[Special New York Correspondence.]

Embroidery holds its position as the most fashionable garniture this season. Dinner gowns have the whole front and trimming embroidered, and even cloth costumes are not complete without at least a vest of oriental work. The only rival of embroidered fabrics are the magnificent Pompadour brocades and embossed faille with alternating stripes of velvet or satin some six inches wide. The wider the stripes the higher the prices, but most women of good taste prefer the simpler patterns. Gros de tours, a heavy, soft, corded silk, is the new satin that line. A changeable velvet, with soft old blue for its main color, is cut Princess in the back. The petticoat is a perfect piece of brocade in dull shades on a creamy ground.

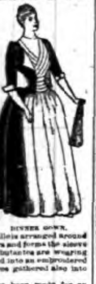
The dinner gown pictured here is of a wonderfully soft shade of willow green velvet made in perfectly plain redingote style. The front is cut away and partly loose, showing the surplice waist and sash of very delicate old rose crepe de chine, which also forms the loosely plaited skirt.



DINNER GOWN.

For young ladies ball dresses still retain their light, airy character. Faintly tinted gauze with delicately embroidered sprays is the popular novelty. These are generally made over satin slips. There is certainly a decided suggestion of sleeve in the full dress toilets of young ladies this season. A Berthe of tulle is arranged around the neck and shoulders and forms the sleeve also. Many young debutantes are wearing gauze guimpes gathered into an embroidered collar and short sleeves gathered also into bands.

A pretty dress has been made for an heiress who makes her debut this season. A skirt of plain white gauze over satin, with an oriental jacket of white velvet embroidered in gold. Pale gray gauze embroidered with rosebuds is an appropriate material for very young ladies.

Feather boas are very popular among those who can afford them. They are worn at the opera and theater as well as for street wear in darker shades.

Never were skirts so severe and the corsage so elaborate. The latter has become such a bewildering mass of drapery, revers, embroidery, buttons and ribbons that it has become a puzzle to know how to get into them correctly and still more of a puzzle how to get out. No corsage is complete without at least two or three kinds of trimming.

For the street toques and large hats vie with each other for precedence. The large black hat with a low crown has become very popular this season, probably on account of the full Brussels net veils, which looks best when worn with this style of hat, and has the additional merit of keeping that picturesque but rather unruly head covering in place on a windy day.

The coat-bodice shown here is one of the novelties of the season. The main dress is light-weight cloth of a new shade of smoke gray. The jacket bodice is cut away at the waist and rolled over with a very deep collar. There are two waistcoats, one plain, deep pointed one, of cream cloth, and another shallow one, embroidered in silver on a cream ground. This only shows in a small fold over the bust.

Long-handled directoire umbrellas and canes have come to be quite a common sight on the promenades, and ladies are spending fabulous sums on unique designs for the head.

The new ribbons keep pace with the other handsome fabrics of the season, and are generally in better taste. Heavy gros grain has a rich substantial appearance after the flimsy fancy ribbons of the summer. From three to five inches is the fashionable width for dress and millinery. [illegible] has entirely gone out, with only a narrow satin on one or both edges, or a fancy border in the prevailing cashmere shades. Gold and silver thread are woven into brocade borders, and form a very handsome trimming without any thing else.

Children's dresses for house and street wear are rather more simple than last year, but of handsome material. A simple costume for a girl of ten or twelve has a skirt of blue and white checked surah with several rows of smocking below the belt in front. A blue serge redingote goes over this falling in plaits at the back.

A full silk blouse is smocked at the neck and drawn in at the waist with a sash of silk edged with lace fringe.

The party dresses illustrated here are made of delicate shades of surah and Bengaline.

Long leather or cloth, leggings are used for both girls and boys. There is a decided tendency to dress children in the prevailing empire and directoire styles, and when well carried out the effect is quite picturesque.

The Connemara cloak is a simple but stylish addition to the fashions of this season. They are inexpensive and easy to make and always look well on a small, slender figure. Camel's hair, serge or cheviot cloth are the materials most used in shades of brown, gray and green. They are usually put on and off and for that reason make excellent traveling wraps. It takes only two yards of double width cloth. This is shirred around the neck four or six rows and falls gracefully over the shoulders and back. The garment can be lined with a contrasting silk, which adds much to the elegance of the garment. The cloak is tied at the neck with long, handsome bows of ribbon.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Senator Dolph, of Oregon, Likely to Represent the Pacific Slope in Harrison's Cabinet.

[Special Correspondence.]

One of the most puzzling problems now vexing the soul of the President-elect is the selection of his Pacific coast member of the Cabinet. He is bound to do this because of the action of the Pacific coast delegates in the Chicago convention at a time when the point was made against General Harrison's candidacy, that he had voted against the Chinese treaty. There is, also, the other reason that President Cleveland took no Pacific men into his Cabinet, and the Republican party would be the stronger in future campaigns if this honor were given to that section of the country.

The two names that have been canvassed most are those of M. N. De Young, editor of the San Francisco Chronicle, and Mr. Estee, who was chairman of the California delegation in the Chicago convention. It is now said that General Harrison has decided, in view of the struggle between these two gentlemen, to select neither of them, but to go to Oregon and appoint either Senator Dolph, or some prominent Republican in that State. The chances favor the appointment of Dolph, and the place likely to be given him is the Interior Department. While in the Senate he has given a very large share of his time to questions closely connected with the routine of business in the Interior Department, chief of which are Indian and land affairs.

As an all-around man of business Senator Dolph would undoubtedly administer the business of the Interior Department successfully. He is a New Yorker, fifty-three years old, and comes of a family of sturdy Englishmen, who settled the little town of Dolphsburg, in Tompkins County, now Schuyler County. His education was picked up at the district school, village academy and by the light of a big fire in his father's old-fashioned farm house. He began to teach school when eighteen years old, and kept on studying to complete his education. He was admitted to the bar in 1861, at Binghamton, and began to practice, but in a few months decided to go to the Pacific coast.

He took no part in the war except to enlist in Captain Crawford's company, known as "The Oregon Escort," raised to protect the emigration of that year against hostile Indians while crossing the plains. The highest rank attained by Mr. Dolph was that of Orderly-Sergeant. He fixed upon Portland as his home in the latter part of 1862, and has remained there since. President Lincoln appointed him District-Attorney of the State, and he was several times elected to the State Legislature. He was at one time a man of great wealth, having prospered as the general counselor of the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company, and the Northern Pacific railroad.

He and his colleague, Senator Mitchell, were law partners for years prior to Mitchell's election to the Senate in 1872. Mr. Dolph has not been connected with railroad legislation since he entered the Senate. When Henry Villard was hammered into bankruptcy Dolph lost several hundred thousand dollars. He is a man of giant stature, with a long, patriarchal beard, and has been oftentimes compared in likeness to old John Brown, of Ossawattomie. He is one of the best debaters in the Senate, having a strong, rich, resonant voice, a flowing delivery and a Websterian faculty for clear and forcible statement. His judgment in the framing of laws is sought by all his colleagues in the Senate, and there is hardly a bill that has passed that body since he became a member of it that has not somewhere thrust the stamp of Dolph's phraseology.

The Parrot at Home.

"Come in," the saucy parrot bawled
When the parson knocked at the door.
"Take off your hat." "For goodness sake!"
"Go back and shut the door!"
"Kiss me quick!" "You naughty man!"
[illegible]
The parson stared, the parrot shrieked
"Go put your head to soak!"
"Oh, ain't you sweet." "Mamma!"
"Papa!" "Rats!" "Come and scratch my back!"
"There aren't any flies on me!"
"Give me a rousing smack!"
"Who the d—l are you?" "Go home!"
"Come off!" "Give us a rest!"
"Oh, Johnny get your gun!" "Give me a chew!"
"Pull down your vest!"
The parson turned and ran for his life, said he, "I've often heard
That the devil is really and truly in that prevaricating bird!"

SCIENTIFIC.—It has been discovered that the reason four "three-minute" boiled eggs always emerge so hard is because they are chips from the old block.—Plymouth Rock.

A HUGE MAGNET.

Major King's Exploit—Constructing a Mammoth Magnet from a Brace of Cannon.

Among the experiments which the Secretary of War describes in his recent annual report is the construction of the largest electro-magnet ever made in the history of the world. During the summer Major William R. King, of the engineer corps, being in command of Willets Point, N. Y., conceived the idea of constructing from two fifteen-inch guns a large quantity of torpedo cable and an electro-dynamo, the largest magnet ever thought of. The two guns weighed together fifty tons. They were placed side by side and connected at the breech by a pile of railway bars. Then four miles of insulated wire was coiled around each gun. The armature or bar, similar to the little steel bar used with small toy magnets, was made of fifteen soft wrought iron plates, each eleven and a half inches wide and half an inch thick, bolted together. When this armature was placed from muzzle to muzzle of the guns and the electric current put on, it required sixteen men at a capstan pulling a three-inch iron chain cable through a pulley to remove it. Four three hundred and twenty pound shells were suspended from one of the guns, and it took twelve men twenty minutes with the cable to pull them away. Experiments were made at a distance of twenty-five feet from the muzzles of the guns by spreading on a platform iron filings and bits of iron wire so as to show the direction of the lines of attraction.

The bits of iron arranged themselves in curved lines, extending out four feet from the muzzles of the guns. At a distance of forty-six feet this huge magnet neutralized the earth's magnetism, and at twenty feet pieces of wrought iron wire were so magnetized by attraction that they clung together.

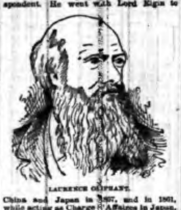
One curious discovery was made in regard to the neutral point in the axis of each arm of the magnet. For instance, if an iron bolt were put a foot or two within the muzzle of either gun, the magnetic force would throw it out to a distance of seven and one-half inches from the mouth of the gun and there hold it. Sometimes this force was so great as to throw the bolt out two feet from the muzzle and then draw it back suddenly to within a few inches of the face of the gun. But if the bolt were put at the neutral point in the first place it would remain there and resist any force moving it either towards or from the gun. A neutral point was also found inside the bore of the gun about five and one-half inches from the face of the muzzle. The men put a three hundred and twenty-pound shell in one of the guns and rammed it down to the breech, and the magnetic force hurled it back and out of the muzzle, where it hung on the lower side of the gun. This magnet, large as it is, could have been made much more powerful by the use of more wire and a stronger dynamo. Experiments with these several forms of electric force will be conducted during the coming year. Electricians will not say that it is impossible to discover some form of application by which a motor power can be developed by the combination of two or more bar magnets.

THROUGH MANY COUNTRIES.

The Portrait of a Remarkable Traveler and Correspondent.

Laurence Oliphant, the writer, who died recently in the residence of Sir Grant Duff in Twickenham, Eng., was a remarkable traveler, and during his youth a daring adventurer. His first journey was to Ceylon, his father having been appointed Chief Justice in 1838. Just before the Crimean war he traveled through Russia.

His first visit to this country was made in the capacity of private secretary to the Earl of Elgin, who was then Governor-General of Canada. He was made Superintendent of Indian Affairs, and he also assisted Lord Elgin in negotiating the Reciprocity treaty of 1854. He tired, however, of the peacefulness of mere diplomatic employments, and began a systematic exploration of the United States and Central America. During these trips he fell in with Walker, the Nicaraguan filibuster, and joined his forces. He was, however, captured before he entered serious warfare by a British man-of-war. The Admiral in command proved to be Oliphant's cousin, and he was released without much difficulty. He accompanied Omar Pasha in a campaign as a war correspondent. He went with Lord Elgin to



LAURENCE OLIPHANT.

China and Japan in 1857, and in 1861, while acting as Charge d'Affaires in Japan, he was nearly cut to pieces by assassins. He saw the whole of the Schleswig-Holstein war, and penetrated to the camps of the Polish insurgents. He left the diplomatic service in 1862.

He was in Parliament in 1865, but he was not prepared to settle down. He became interested in a religious reformatory movement, conducted by Thomas S. Harris, and came with him to Portland, N. Y., where he staid for several years. His last travels were in the East.

Powerful Cigars.

A. visits B., who offers a cigar.

A.—But, my dear friend, how can you smoke such a vile weed as this?

B.—They are the best cigars that are made. As soon as I light one my mother-in-law skips out of the room.—Texas Siftings.

TWAIN IN NEVADA.

Origin of Two Stories on Which His Reputation Was Founded.

"No man ever led a more peculiar career anywhere than Mark Twain did in Nevada," said Hon. T. C. Bates, of the Sage-brush State, to a San Francisco Examiner reporter.

"I remember well when, in 1861, he came to Carson with his brother, Orion Clemens, the new Secretary of the Territory. Mark came along, not as a secretary to him as is popularly supposed, but as a mere sight-seer. Mark was not disposed to work, and never did work to amount to any thing, except when he went to the Virginia Enterprise as a reporter. He put in the whole of his first winter looking around Carson, and the next winter he went over to Humboldt County and did some more of it there.

"I always held that circumstances made him. The two best stories he ever published, and upon which he made his reputation as a humorist, he was not the original author of at all. These, the 'Jumping Frog of Calaveras County,' and the 'Pie-Biter of Mariposa,' were published years and years before in a Stockton paper by Sam Seabough, the old California editor.

"Seabough was editor of the Stockton Independent, and some miners came down from Calaveras and told him about the miners there loading a frog up with shot. And it was a fact. In those days the men in those camps would bet about any thing, and one day they got to betting how far some frogs could jump that they had found. One miner conceived the idea of filling one of the rival frogs with shot, and he did it, and the frog couldn't jump.

"Seabough printed this as news, which it was, and it was copied all around, and long afterward it came out in Mark Twain's book.

"In like manner the story of the 'Pie-Biter of Mariposa' was printed by Seabough. A gang of men had gathered one night in the saloon below Seabough's office. There was among them a man with the awfulest mouth you ever saw. It was very big and curious-looking, and out of his ponderous lower jaw two teeth were missing. Somebody came in and asked Seabough to go down and take a look at him. Seabough did so, and somebody then asked the man what had happened to his teeth. He said he was a pie-biter from Mariposa, and had bitten through as many as thirteen pies at one time, on several occasions, but that the last time somebody rung in a plate on him, and that was what did it.

"It struck Seabough as an unusually funny thing, and he fixed it up and published it. Years after, as I have said, after the 'Pie-Biter of Mariposa' had gone the rounds of the press, it turned up in Mark Twain's book."

A Monarch's Reflection.

When Charles V., after a long and turbulent reign, resigned the crown of Spain and other dominions to his son Philip, reserving to himself merely a small pension, he retired to St. Just, near Placentia, where he amused himself with mechanics. One day he placed before him upon a table a number of watches, which he had vainly endeavored to make agree exactly in their time. Having looked at them for some minutes, he said: "How foolish was I to endeavor to make religious sects all agree in their doctrine. I might as well expect this as suppose that these watches would all move with the same regularity."

THE PECULIAR PEOPLE.

They Establish Their Right to Live and Die Without Medical Advice.

England has a curious sect known as the Peculiar People, and their peculiarity consists in regarding the employment of physicians as a sin. In case of sickness they depend upon the prayer of faith, anointing with oil and probably hygienic measures so far as they understand them. When the death of a child occurs among these people it has been customary for the government to step in and prosecute the parents on the charge of neglect. The Pall Mall Gazette says of these prosecutions: "When juries were first called upon to sit in judgment upon the victims of the prayer and anointing oil mode of treatment, they promptly returned verdicts of manslaughter and the Peculiar People were cast into prison as martyrs for their faith. With them, as with most persons of that temper, imprisonment only stiffened their resolution. The struggle has gone on for years, but recently the Peculiar People triumphed, the enemy hauled down his flag, and capitulated at discretion—or in other words a British jury formally placed on record its conviction that it was useless to censure the Peculiar People any longer." The mother questioned by the coroner said: "We believe in warm water and flannels but nothing else." The child was subject to rickets, had been ill from birth, and died when eleven months old from convulsions. The post-mortem doctor thought he might have done something for the case if he had been called, but the jury vindicated the right of the Peculiar People to their own religious and medical notions. The Pall Mall Gazette comments thus: "When once people are stubborn enough to convince the ordinary man that it is no use torturing them, then the landmarks of liberty are enlarged. Almost all our liberties have been won in this fashion. The scientific frontier between the authority of the State and the rights of the individual is perpetually in dispute, and it is only when the individual defies the State to do its worst, and proves that he is willing to take the consequences, and then do it again, and to keep on doing it again until the State gets tired of sending him to prison, that the individual's claim to consideration gains any recognition. Every such victory gained by men who put a conscience in their work is an encouragement to all who care for individual liberty as against over-encroaching authority, to pluck up courage to push still further forward the boundary line of freedom."

The Reason Why.

As they came from their summer's outing
And trotted from stage to car,
He bitterly groaned at the satchels,
Whose weight was heavier far
Than ever before in their travels.
Unpacking them later, he swore:
"Great skoots! Here's that rock of ages—
The soap I fired out of the door."

Social Amenities.

"Why does my new house resemble your last 'first night audience?'" said Magnum to his daughter's caller, young Liteplays, wishing to be pleasantly facetious.

Then he was surprised to find that his mirth was not contagious when he gave the answer:

"Because both were pronounced so well papered."

Rheumatism and Neuralgia

These twin diseases cause untold suffering. Doctors admit that they are difficult to cure—so do their patients. Paine's Celery Compound has permanently cured the worst cases of rheumatism and neuralgia—so say those who have used it.

FOR SALE. NO USE TO OWNER.

"Having been troubled with rheumatism at the knee and foot for five years, I was almost unable to get around, and was very often confined to my bed for weeks at a time. I used only one bottle of Paine's Celery Compound, and was perfectly cured. I can now jump around, and feel as lively as a boy." FRANK CAROLL, Eureka, Nevada.

"Paine's Celery Compound has been a God-send to me. For the past two years I have suffered with neuralgia of the heart, doctor after doctor failing to cure me. I have now taken nearly four bottles of the Compound, and am free from the complaint. I feel very grateful to you." CHAS. H. LEWIS, Central Village, Ct.

Paine's Celery Compound

"I have been greatly afflicted with acute rheumatism, and could find no relief until I used Paine's Celery Compound. After using six bottles of this medicine I am now cured of rheumatic troubles." SAMUEL HUTCHINSON, So. Cornish, N. H.

Effects Lasting Cures.

Paine's Celery Compound has performed many other cures as marvelous as these,—copies of letters sent to any address. Pleasant to take, does not disturb, but aids digestion, and entirely vegetable; a child can take it. What's the use of suffering longer with rheumatism or neuralgia?

ABOUT COACHING.

An Interesting Article on Old-Time Stage Coaches and Their Drivers—Merry Days in Merry Old England.

There were two main roads to York in the old coaching days, says a writer in an English magazine. The first of these was measured from Shoreditch, and went by way of Ware; the second was measured from Hick's Hall, and went by way of Barnet. At the Wheatsheaf inn at Alconbury Hill, down in Huntingdonshire, these two roads to York became one and the same road; but the Ware route was four miles one furlong the shorter of the two.

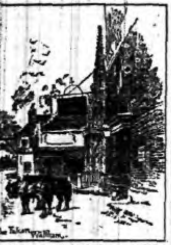
When we want to go to York now we breakfast at half-past eight, if we are wise, and catch the ten o'clock Scotch express from King's Cross. Our grandfathers did not breakfast at all; not because they had no appetite at half-past eight, but because they had to start from High Holborn at half-past six.

According to the faculty, early rising is a healthy thing, yet I have known it bring strong men to their bier; and besides, however enjoyable, though perilous, it may be in summer, I think that few of us care to leap from our beds at half-past five on a raw January morning.

Yet this is what our ancestors had to do who wanted to catch one of the crack northern coaches.

Shall we follow them in the spirit on one of these ghastly expeditions?

Our coach—we will take the Regent for choice—as we can not get further than Stamford this journey—starts at 6:30 from the George and Blue Boar, but we are not there yet. We are in bed in Berkeley Square, Marylebone Lane, or where you please.



The Talbot, Waltham.

Our sleep has been fevered with grim visions of the coming strife.

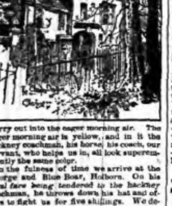
It is broken by a loud knocking at the outer door, as in Macbeth.

Our servant, who has overslept himself according to immemorial receipt, now comes to tell us that it is half-past five, and that the hackney coach ordered over night to take us to the coach office is already at the door.

Unless on these occasions you ordered a hackney coach over night, you were utterly undone.

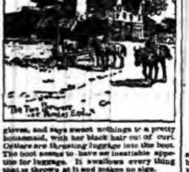
We now use strange words and ask what sort of a morn it is. We are told that it is foggy, and we soon see that it is yellow. We have thoughts of not going to York, but we recollect that we have already bought our ticket. At the same time knocking from the hackney coachman below tells us that time flies.

We now fly into our boots and hat and other things. A horrible attempt at preparing breakfast has been made in the interval by the penitent valet; an impromptu effort in the way of a dingy table-cloth, a tea-urn, a loaf and a pat of butter, which causes us to shy as a thoroughbred shies at a traction engine. We seize our portmanteau, and hurry out into the eager morning air. The eager morning air is yellow, and in it the hackney coachman, his horse, his coach, our servant, who helps us in, all look supereminently the same color.

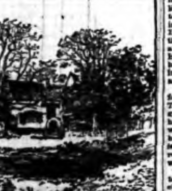


In the fulness of time we arrive at the George and Blue Boar, Holborn. On his legal fare being tendered to the hackney coachman, he throws down his hat and offers to fight us for five shillings. We decline the stirring invitation and hurry into the inn yard. All here is bustle and animation in a sort of half gloom.

The Stamford Regent stands ready for her fight; four chestnuts with a good deal of blood about them seem anxious to be off; ostlers, making noises after the manner of engines letting off steam in underground stations, are giving the finishing touches to the toilet. Afar off in a dim doorway the celebrated Tom Henney draws on his gloves, and says sweet nothings to a pretty housemaid, with her black hair out of curl. Ostlers are thrusting luggage into the boot. The boot seems to have an insatiable appetite for luggage. It swallows every thing that is thrown at it and makes no sign.



The two inside passengers now appear upon the scene. One of them is an Anglo-Indian, who has whiskers bushed as if by a whirlwind, a voice like a bull, and a complexion in harmony with his surroundings. A sort of Joe Sedley going to York. The other is a lady of uncertain age, who wears her hair in curl papers, and pretends to a rooted antipathy to traveling alone with a man. This antipathy she communicates to the guard in a faded whisper. The guard grinning all over his face communicates this faded whisper to the Bengal Civil Servant. He receives it with maledictory curses.

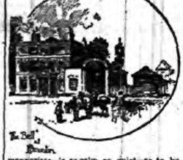


"Confound it, sir," he roars, "then let her ride outside."

With which he hurls himself into the coach. From this point of vantage he shakes his fist at a wretched native in a turban, who, safely out of distance, salaams till his head almost touches the coach court-yard, and confesses that he has indeed omitted to provide the Sahib with his umbrella.

While a terrible volley of objurgations in Bengalese pours from one door of the coach, the lady with the faded manner enters it by the other. At the same time the incomparable Tom Henney languidly mounts on to his box. He chews a piece of sweet lavender given by the pretty housemaid—assumes the whip as a marshal does his baton, and darts a deathly glance over his left shoulder at the lingering fair. "Let 'em go," he says, "and look out for yourselves." The ostlers fly from the chestnuts' heads—the four horses spring up to their collars—the guard performs, "Oh, dear, what can the matter be?" on his bugle in a manner which would elicit an enthusiastic encore at an evening concert, and we are out of the coach-yard almost before we know it, stealing down Holborn Hill with that "fine fluent motion" which De Quincey described as characteristic of the Bristol Mail—but which indeed could be experienced on any crack coach which was finely driven.

And Tom Henney is a master of his art. His manner on the box—all great artists are mannerists—is so calm, so quiet—as to be almost supercilious.



The Bell at Edmonton.

But he has to keep a sharp look-out, for he is driving through Egyptian darkness. The weather indeed reminds us of Homer's hell; and as for the cold, it would make a snipe shiver in an Irish bog. Up Cow lane we steal, through Smithfield. The wheelers appear like phantom chestnuts, the leaders are hardly seen, the houses on each side of the way loom grim and ghostly. And through the gloom the Stamford Regent steals along like some ghost of a coach itself. We on the box seat feel like unembodied joys. We have already lost the use of our hands and feet. Deep draughts of yellow fog complete our debility.

Suddenly shouts are heard ahead, and large herds of cattle throng the streets; they seem to come out of the foul air as every thing does besides, but they come from Smithfield, of course, or are going there.

Drovers looming phantom-like, like every thing else, prove by a graceful flow of expletives that they are, after all, but men. Our near side leader now mistakes a strayed bullock for some monster of mythology and swerves on one side after the manner of Balaam's ass, upon which our coachman, who has up to now sat perfectly upright with hands still, the very statue of an accomplished charioteer, immobile as fate, turns his wrist under, and lets his thong "go" in such a way that the near side leader's hind leg is nearly severed from his body. Which duty done, Tom Henney remarks "that there are some of 'em as never could hit a horse." And we feel, almost as poignantly as the near side leader has done, that Tom Henney is not to be included in the category.

And now the Peacock at Islington begins to loom through the fog. Or rather the horn lantern of the old ostler, whose province it is to stand outside the inn and announce the names of the coaches as they drive up to the door, with the voice of an asthmatic trumpet. All the northern coaches made a point of stopping at the Peacock, on their way north; though why they did so I have never been able to discover. The fact remains that there were twenty or more drawn up at a time here at seven o'clock in the morning. And such an outcry attending their arrival, such a clattering of hoofs, clanging of bugles, slamming of doors and stamping of feet on splash boards, as never was heard, well, out of Islington; and through all this din the raucous voice of the ostler continuously sounds, like the cry of a mediæval herald with a cold in his head announcing the entry of distinguished competitors to a tournament.

And he announces famous names, though they are recognized as such no longer. They make our fathers' blood boil at times if we are to believe De Quincey. These names—the York Highflyer, the Leeds Union, the York Express, the Stamford Regent, the Rockingham, the Truth and Daylight—made our fathers' blood boil as these famed coaches carried northwards the heart-stirring news of Vittoria, or of Waterloo! But times are changed—such national telegrams (when we have them to transmit) are transmitted silently and decorously by the telegraph. There is no advertisement possible in the way we travel now, except on the walls of railway stations—and of this latter form I regret to say Mr. Ruskin does not approve.

IF cayenne pepper will drive ants away, will pepper sauce get rid of four hired girl's cousins?

MR. C. S. GLASSCO.

A Gentleman Who Sets Type with His Left Hand and Does It Well, Too.

How many readers of the Inland Printer, asks a writer in that paper, ever saw a left-handed typesetter? By this I mean a typesetter who picks up the type, places them in the composing stick and spaces out the lines, all with his "sinister paw." How many are there who have not had it demonstrated to them to be mechanically impossible to set type with the left hand, without having a left-handed stick, "and then the matter would read backward," or from right to left! I have many times had it so demonstrated to me by old printers, who "had traveled this wide world over." To me these demonstrations were conclusive, because I took them without giving the subject any thought, or making any endeavor to test the thing practically. Every printer knows that distributing with the left hand can be accomplished easily, simply by turning the matter "other end up," in the right hand. That type can be set and lines spaced out in the ordinary stick with the left hand was demonstrated to me first in Sherman, Tex., by witnessing Mr. Dick Hopson, of the Courier office, performing the feat at a rate of speed equal to, if not above, that of the average compositor. Mr. Hopson sets type no other way than with his left hand. He does all kinds of work included in the work of a book, newspaper and a job compositor.

MR. GLASSCO.

But the greatest surprise yet remained for me, in the person of Mr. C. S. Glassco, of Tuscola, Ill., whose portrait is herewith given. Mr. Glassco not only sets type left-handed, but has only the left hand to set with, for by accident, when five years old, he was deprived of his right hand. The cut is a good picture of the gentleman, and represents him with his stick in the position in which he holds it when setting type.

In distributing Mr. Glassco lifts the matter with his left hand, and places it in the elbow of his short arm, head up, or in exactly an inverse order from that of one who distributes with his right hand; that is, he distributes the matter in exactly the order of its composition, beginning at the head of the article and following down. The feat of holding the matter in the elbow joint of his short arm Mr. Glassco performs with ease, and holds all the matter he can lift with his hand. His method of distributing job-work is the same as in reading or newspaper matter. He can pick up any width of matter and get it in position on his arm that any two-handed printer can get up and hold in his hand, and he [illegible] himself in the fact that he makes as little pi as the average typesetter or foreman. The appearance of his office when I saw it substantiated this fact.

Mr. Glassco was born in Coles County, Ill., July 29, 1856. He was raised on a farm, and after becoming old enough always made a hand at any thing and every thing, from chopping wood to binding grain, notwithstanding he lost his hand at five years of age, as above stated, by an accident in a sorghum mill. He attended college at Greencastle, Ind., and Ann Arbor, Mich. He began learning to set type in the Journal office, Tuscola, Ill., in 1874, being then eighteen years of age. He worked in both the Journal and Review offices, of that town, and assisted in "laying" the material of the Decatur (Ill.) Herald, and was foreman of the Review-Democrat office, Anderson, Ind., for two years. He can and does do "any and all kinds of job work in a country office" (as he expressed it himself in conversation with me), can set an average of 7,000 ems per day, and has set 13,500 ems in ten hours. Mr. Glassco is at present foreman in the Tuscola Saturday Journal office. He is a robust and intelligent, genial gentleman, as his picture indicates, and writes a splendid hand, as was proven to me by a letter received since seeing him. He takes a deep interest in all things pertaining to the art of printing, and "catches on" to the new things as readily as the best two-handed printer anywhere. It affords me great pleasure in introducing Mr. Glassco to the craft in general, through the pages of the Inland Printer, and extending to him the hearty wish that his days in the land may be many, and happy and prosperous ones.

Genuine Sympathy.

The other day a man stood holding to a post on Miami avenue. He was tight. He had to make his winding way from post to post and tree to tree. As he stood for a moment to get his bearings, a woman came along with a great load of boards on her back and halted for a rest.

"Shoo here, ma'am," said the man after looking at her in a cross-eyed way for some time, "that's dog-gone hard, that is. That 'peals to my sympathies, that does. I haven't a cent of money, and I can't spare any of my clothes, but I'll divide my drunk with you if you'll accept, and it's a drunk that cost me s-s-sixty-five cents!"—Detroit Free Press.

Postponement Inevitable.

Miss Gushly (pausing on the ladder while the moon modestly hides its face behind a cloud)—Stop, Jack! We must postpone the elopement until to-morrow. I have forgotten to write to my mother.

Jack Borrowitt—No matter, darling—hurry! You can send the letter by mail.

Miss Gushly—How absurd you are! It must be left on the dressing-case or the romance of the whole thing is spoiled. I shan't move a step!—Judge.

She Won.

Mrs. McFlimsy—You know I can't go to the theater with you to-night. I have positively nothing to wear but that old hat I made over from last winter.

McFlimsy—What of that? Just take it off when we get there and I'll guarantee you more admiration than fifty dollars' worth of head-gear would evoke!—Puck.

A Prudent Mother.

Clara—Mother, just think of it!

Mother—What is it, my daughter?

"Charles has insured his life for my benefit for $50,000."

"He has! Well, now, my daughter, there is no longer any objection to your making him that angel cake you have been talking about."—Texas Siftings.

A FLAT with a short run may be a loss to the author, but it is certain to pay in the long run.

THE RESTAURANT BEAT.

How He Sometimes Manages to Get a Good Meal for a Dime.

"There are many ways of beating a restaurant," remarked a Pittsburgh man who has had much experience as a caterer, to a Dispatch reporter. "I've learned a good many things in this business, at no slight cost to myself."

"What is the modus operandi of the sharper?"

"Well, it is simple, yet it works well—for him. The larger the restaurant the easier it is to get a meal for almost nothing. Suppose you have only a dime and your appetite demands a 75-cent dinner. You enter a place which is already crowded and seat yourself at the further end of the lunch counter. You then order a sandwich or something else that will cost you but a dime. When you have devoured the provision the waiter hands you a check calling for 10 cents. You take it and saunter towards the door. The cashier is busy making change, and can't see you. You seat yourself at the counter near him, another waiter hands you a bill of fare and you order a substantial dinner. When you have finished you receive a second check, marked 75 cents. Put that in your pocket, take the other one and hand it to the cashier with your dime. See? It's an old game, but it is often worked by men who live by their wits.

"Then there is another scheme, which requires the aid of a confederate. One of the beats comes into the dining-room, seats himself at a table and orders a good square meal. A few minutes later his companion enters and takes a seat at the same table. They do not speak and the waiter thinks them perfect strangers. Number 2 orders a light lunch, costing 15 cents, and is given a check for that amount. The other gets his dollar dinner and departs, taking (by mistake apparently) the 15 cent check, which he cashes at the desk. When the second man has finished he picks up the remaining check, looks surprised, calls the waiter, and says:

"'Here, what do you mean by this? I got but 15 cents worth, yet this check calls for a dollar,' and he raises a kick.

"The proprietor is called and matters explained to him. The fellow puts on a bold front and maintains that he doesn't know the other man from Adam. 'Because you let him swindle you is no reason why I should pay for his dinner. I owe you only 15 cents, and that is all I will pay.'

"He gets off, of course, and the two meet at the next corner and then proceed to work the same racket in some other eating house. Only this time No. 2 takes the $1 dinner, while his companion plays the role of injured innocent. In some of the big restaurants in the large cities men are employed solely to keep an eye on all customers, and prevent this species of fraud."

BILL BRAZELTON'S END.

He Was the First and Greatest Highwayman of Tucson, A. T.

A gentleman from Tucson, A. T., in the lobby of the National Hotel, spoke of one of the desperadoes of his town, says the Washington Post:

"I see," said he, "that some fellow out in California has been 'holding up' stage loads of people by himself. The dispatches speak of him as the 'Lone Highwayman.' I want to tell you that the first and greatest lone highwayman in this country lived in Tucson, and his name was Bill Brazleton. It has now been seven or eight years since he was killed. While he lived he was the terror of Southern Arizona, and he did all of his work single-handed. He used to work in a livery-stable in Tucson. He was a young fellow who did not say much, but was all the time practicing with his revolver when he was not at his work. He was the most active, powerful young man I ever saw.

"He got so he could turn a somersault with his pistol in his hand and as he came up hit a fifty-cent piece every time twenty-five yards away. He could shoot in every position, whether standing, running or riding, and every time he 'plumped' the bull's-eye. Suddenly he left town, and it was not long till we heard of his robbing stages all alone. He had nerves of steel, and did not seem to be afraid of any body or any thing. The greatest efforts were made to capture him, but he eluded all of his pursuers. He seemed to be here, there and everywhere at the same time. Finally it was suspected that a hostler working in the stable where Brazleton had been employed knew something of him. He was taken out to the edge of town and hanged up till he was almost dead, when he agreed to confess on condition that Brazleton should be shot on sight, as he would kill any man who betrayed his secret at the first opportunity.

"The hostler said he was to go out to meet Brazleton that very night and take him something to eat. He was to wait behind a log in a certain piece of woods. A party of six well-armed men took the hostler and went with him to the place of rendezvous. They all lay down behind the log and waited for Brazleton. By and by he rode out of a thicket into an open space and came slowly toward the unsuspected ambush. He carried his pistol in his hand as if suspecting that things were not all right. When within thirty yards of the log the whole party rose and fired, killing the horse and rider in an instant. It was one of the most dramatic incidents that ever occurred about Tucson in those troublesome days. Brazleton's body was riddled with balls. He was brought to town and the next morning he was propped up against the adobe wall and his photograph taken, and the local photographer has to-day in his show-case a ghastly illustration of the triumph of his art."

A Tough Rat Story.

A naval officer says: I have always felt some regard for a rat since my cruise in the Constellation. We were fitting for sea at Norfolk, and taking in water and provisions; a plank was resting on the sill of one of the ports which communicated with the wharf. On a bright moonlight evening we discovered two rats on the plank coming into the ship. The foremost was leading the other by a straw, one end of which each held in his mouth. We managed to capture them both, and found, to our surprise, that the one led by the other was stone blind. His faithful friend was trying to get him on board where he would have comfortable quarters during a three years' cruise. We felt no disposition to kill either, and landed them on the wharf. How many there are in this world to whom the fidelity of that rat readeth a lesson!

Frailty, Thy Name Is Woman.

A middle-aged woman went to a prominent physician in San Diego not long ago, and asked him to amputate her two great toes. He examined them, assured her that there was nothing wrong with them, and said that he wouldn't cut them off. She begged him to, saying that if they were off she could wear No. 2 shoes instead of 4's, as then. Her toes were her own, she said, to do what she pleased with, and she would give $300 to have them off. The doctor refused and the woman went in quest of some one with less conscience. A San Diego newspaper says that she found someone to do the job successfully, for two weeks later she went to San Francisco wearing the best pair of No. 2s that could be bought in San Diego.

TWAIN IN NEVADA.

Origin of Two Stories on Which His Reputation Was Founded.

"No man ever led a more peculiar career anywhere than Mark Twain did in Nevada," said Hon. T. C. Bates, of the Sage-brush State, to a San Francisco Examiner reporter. "I remember well when, in 1861, he came to Carson with his brother, Orion Clemens, the new Secretary of the Territory. Mark came along, not as a secretary to him as is popularly supposed, but as a mere sight-seer. Mark was not disposed to work, and never did work to amount to any thing, except when he went to the Virginia Enterprise as a reporter. He put in the whole of his first winter looking around Carson, and the next winter he went over to Humboldt County and did some more of it there.

"I always held that circumstances made him. The two best stories he ever published, and upon which he made his reputation as a humorist, he was not the original author of at all. These, the 'Jumping Frog of Calaveras County,' and the 'Pie-Biter of Mariposa,' were published years and years before in a Stockton paper by Sam Seabough, the old California editor.

"Seabough was editor of the Stockton Independent, and some miners came down from Calaveras and told him about the miners there loading a frog up with shot. And it was a fact. In those days the men in those camps would bet about any thing, and one day they got to betting how far some frogs could jump that they had found. One miner conceived the idea of filling one of the rival frogs with shot, and he did it, and the frog couldn't jump.

"Seabough printed this as news, which it was, and it was copied all around, and long afterward it came out in Mark Twain's book.

"In like manner the story of the 'Pie-Biter of Mariposa' was printed by Seabough. A gang of men had gathered one night in the saloon below Seabough's office. There was among them a man with the awfullest mouth you ever saw. It was very big and curious-looking, and out of his ponderous lower jaw two teeth were missing. Somebody came in and asked Seabough to go down and take a look at him. Seabough did so and somebody then asked the man what had happened to his teeth. He said he was a pie-biter from Mariposa, and had bitten through as many as thirteen pies at one time, on several occasions, but that the last time somebody rung in a plate on him, and that was what did it.

"It struck Seabough as an unusually funny thing, and he fixed it up and published it. Years after, as I have said, after the 'Pie-Biter of Mariposa' had gone the rounds of the press, it turned up in Mark Twain's book."

A Monarch's Reflection.

When Charles V., after a long and turbulent reign, resigned the crown of Spain and other dominions to his son Philip, reserving to himself merely a small pension, he retired to St. Just, near Placentia, where he amused himself with mechanics. One day he placed before him upon a table a number of watches, which he had vainly endeavored to make agree exactly in their time. Having looked at them for some minutes, he said: "How foolish was I to endeavor to make religious sects all agree as one doctrine. I might as well expect this as suppose that these watches would all move with the same regularity."

DOGS IN WARFARE.

How They Are Taught to Detect the Presence of the Enemy.

Among the various uses to which the intelligence of dogs has been put is that of scouts in military affairs, says Blackwood's Magazine. Here the well-trained dog does such services as to become well nigh invaluable.

That Napoleon fully realized how important a role might be assigned to dogs is well known. In 1799 he wrote to Marmont: "There should be at Alexandria a large number of dogs, which you ought to be able to employ by massing them in groups at a short distance from the walls." The marvel is that, after so plain an expression on the subject from such an authority in the art of war, the employment of dogs should not have become a matter of course, instead of which, eighty-nine years later, it is still regarded as a tentative measure.

Recent experiments prove that the well-trained dog will give notice of the presence of a man, dressed in the uniform of a foe, at a distance of one thousand feet. Yet just as the custom-house dog passes quietly by honest peasants and only calls the attention of their masters to law-breakers, so these wise regimental dogs ignore the movements of unattached civilians, and seem to develop a strong personal antipathy to any person whom they intuitively recognize as being in the service of the enemy. Probably, however, no dog has ever rendered such signal military service, or has been so honorably recognized, as the celebrated poodle Mustache, who shared the victorious fortunes of the French army through most of the wars of the Consulate and the French empire. He won special honor at Marengo, and was decorated on the battlefield of Austerlitz by Marshal Lannes as a reward for having rescued his regimental standard from an Austrian soldier when in the act of snatching it from the grasp of the standard-bearer as he fell mortally wounded. The plucky poodle drove off the assailant, and then seizing the tattered colors in his teeth, dragged them triumphantly till he reached his own company.

It is evident that were military dogs to be exclusively chosen from any special breed, all animals of that race would become targets for the foe, whenever seen; therefore dogs are to be settled on account of individual merit—or rather promise of merit, as it is necessary to begin their education in early youth, and canine education should be commenced in good earnest at six months of age. So the dogs now to be seen in training at certain German and French military stations are of all sorts and sizes—"dachshunds" and poodles, retrievers and collies, greyhounds, foxhounds, fox terriers and others, male and female. The Italians prefer the latter as possessing keener senses of hearing and scent. All are trained to rigid silence—a result only to be obtained after long and patient tuition. Indeed it is at all times difficult to secure obedience when music strikes up, so great is the temptation to give vocal accompaniment.

REAL SCOTCH HUMOR.

Bright Flashes Gathered Here and There by a Highland Editor.

Dr. Scott, of Greenock, says the Scottish World, used to tell of a sailor who came to be married, but when asked if he would take the woman to be his wife, looked blank and said: "I would like to know first what you are going to say to she." At a later time when the woman was asked if she would obey, but did not answer, the man—also a sailor—explained: "Leave that to me, sir."

In those days people that felt sleepy during the sermon used, as now in Germany, to shake off drowsiness by standing up; but poor human nature made this at times an occasion of display. At Old Monkland a man who had on a rather gaudy vest stood up more than once and threw back his coat, apparently to let his vest be seen. Mr. Bower, the minister, at length said: "Noo, John, ye had better sit doon. We have a' seen your braw waistcoat."

It was to Mr. Bower that the grave-digger once said: "Trade's very dull the noo. I've no buried a leevin' cratur for three weeks."

The people seem to have had a dislike to sermons being read. They used to say: "Hoo could we mind the minister's sermon if he canna mind it himsel'?"

What are we to think of the lady who sent to her minister, Mr. Risk, of Dalserf, a polite message that "he should clean his teeth," and received the answer that "she should scrape her tongue?"

When his people sent a deputation, requesting him to tell them more in his sermons about renouncing their own righteousness, he tartly replied: "It is the first time I heard that you had any righteousness to renounce."

Mr. Thom of Govan, maintained a great warfare against the Glasgow magistrates. One day, while he was standing with the provost in the street, a ragged urchin came up begging, and was sternly driven away by the provost, who had himself risen from nothing. Mr. Thom interposed, and said: "Hey, laddie, there's a penny for you. Ye'll may be provost of Glasgow yourself yet."

One of the magistrates saw him one day riding a good horse, and said: "You're better than your master, Mr. Thom, for he rode on an ass." Mr. Thom retorted: "We would be willing enough to ride on asses, but they're no to be got noo days, they've made them all magistrates."

An Amusing Imbroglio.

"A somewhat amusing imbroglio connected with forged bank-notes is making the Hungarians merry," says the Vienna correspondent of the London Times. "A short time ago a gang of men, supposed to be forgers of bank-notes, was arrested at Stuhlweissenburg, and the tribunal of the town sent a bundle of their false notes to the court of justice at Budapest, before which the prisoners were to be tried. By some blunder the notes were forwarded to the tax office as genuine, and the tax office put them in circulation. As a consequence the prisoners had to be acquitted on their trial for want of proof. They now intend, it is said, to sue the Hungarian Government for their money, arguing that the genuineness of the notes has been sufficiently established by their circulation through the tax office. It ought to be explained that in this country, where the currency is paper, nobody ever thinks of taking the number of a bank-note."

Show-Window Displays.

A well-known Boston detective says of the displays in our show-windows: "It may look queer, but it is true, that the stores which have large exhibitions in their show windows do more toward educating young boys to steal than any thing else. The reason of this is that large crowds, mostly women, gather about the windows to look at the displays. Well, a young gamin comes along and sees a pocket-book protruding out of a woman's pocket, and the temptation is so great that he sneaks up behind her and steals the wallet. Maybe this is his first time, but when once given a start in this direction there seems to be a kind of infatuation about it which leads him to follow it up, and oftentimes results in his becoming a professional house-breaker."

THE SALVATION ARMY.

Good Words for the Organization from a London Newspaper.

Those who sneered when they were told in these columns some six years ago that the strange expression of the deep inborn character of the English race was one of the most remarkable religious phenomena of our generation, says the Pall Mall Gazette, are in a much less contemptuous mood to-day. The foreign work of the army has contributed much to compel a change in the attitude of its critics. It is the only English religious body of our time that has made the impact of a religious idea felt within a few years throughout the world. Since Loyola founded the Society of Jesus there has been nothing like it in modern times. A whole library of books upon the origin and diffusion of Christianity will teach, no less of the vital realities of that great world-event in the distant past than a month's study of the actual daily work of the Salvation Army. This is very strikingly illustrated by the application made by General Booth to the Home Secretary for a State grant for the carrying out of its secular activities. It seems as if even the mistakes of the early church were to be repeated by its latest off-shoot. The application sheds much light upon the origin of our State churches. The colony of Victoria, which has no State Church, and which is perhaps the most democratic community on the planet, has voted sums of money to the Salvation Army, and has made over to it an old detective barracks and an old law court. It has done this not because of the religious teaching of the army, but solely because, in its rescue and reformatory work, out of the waste and debris of society these people manufactured good citizens. Therefore the Colonial Government granted them buildings and cash, in order to enable them to carry on their benevolent and useful labors. The Cape Government, we hear, is likely to follow suit, and it was perhaps only natural that Mr. Booth should have thought that it would be well if the mother country followed the example of her colonies. There is an admitted void in our social organization which the Salvation Army has shown itself better able to fill than any other body, secular or religious. Its homes and refuges are crowded with voluntary inmates, and every night two score unfortunates pleading for a chance to earn a decent livelihood have to be thrust back in the abyss. Its food and shelter depot at the West India docks has been a great success.

A BELATED LETTER.

It Lost John Miller a Wife, and Turned the Current of Two Lives.

Janet Russell was the belle of the village, a Canadian village on the St. Lawrence, and was admired by all the swains who dwelt in those parts, but her "steady company" was a handsome young fellow, John Miller, son of the village postmaster, who also kept a general store. John and Janet, says the Detroit Free Press, went together to a rustic frolic one night, and on the road John asked the old question, which was answered in the affirmative. Things went nicely, but at last, Janet dancing twice in succession with a young fellow whom he had looked upon as a rival, John felt bad, and on the way home sharp words passed between them. The girl told him she wished it had been Charley Hall (the rival) who had asked her the question before mentioned, whereat John said he would give her a day to take that back, and if not—why, all was over between them. Janet relented when she had time to think about it, and the next morning wrote a note to John and dropped it into the letter-box at old Mr. Miller's store.

Time passed on. A year or so after that Charley Hall and Janet Russell were married, and John Miller was wedded to another girl. Some five years passed and old Mr. Miller died, leaving his property and his store to his son, who at once set about making improvements. And it so happened that, the day the old letter-box was broken up, Mrs. Hall, accompanied by her eldest daughter, four years old, was in the store. A letter dropped to the floor; a workman picked it up, and with the remark: "Here's an old letter addressed to you, Mr. Miller," passed it to John. At that moment he was talking to his old sweetheart.

He took the letter and turned it over and over in his hand. As Janet's eyes fell on it she blushed. John opened the note and read it, then he handed it to Janet with a bow and the words: "That has been in the box ever since the day after we went to the dance at Turner's. Ah, Janet, if I had only known!" Mrs. Hall took her child by the hand and went home without a word. Janet's poor little note had been caught and concealed for nearly six years, and had changed the current of two lives, it is for better or worse who can tell?

A Model American Isle.

A correspondent writing from Gotts Island, Me., claims that this favored isle harbors neither trampal rats nor mosquitoes. No rum is ever sold there, neither is there any mud. He has never seen an intoxicated person on the island, and but one house was ever burned for over one hundred years. The people are not afraid of thieves and seldom fasten their doors at night, except in cases of gales of wind. And there is not a dog on the island.

An Immense Turtle.

A Key West fisherman has captured a turtle weighing 1,600 pounds, the largest ever seen. The old fellow was broad enough on the back for six men to stand on him and he could have floated off with a ton of coal.

PROTECT THE FLAG.

When an indignity is offered to the American flag by any foreign power, whether strong or weak, great is the outcry for redress.

So should popular sentiment be, because the flag is the emblem of our [illegible] nationality and deserves respectful consideration everywhere.

"Peace hath victories no less renowned than war."

The stars and stripes have won signal triumphs amid the smoke and flame of war.

But where is their sovereign sway and glory beneath the radiant skies of peace?

True, throughout our vast territorial domain, stretching from the borderline of frigid Canada to that of tropical Mexico, and from ocean to ocean, they float in honored majesty over a peaceful and firmly united country, yet peace has a legitimate arena for conquests far more extended.

Commerce is the ally of peace, and the trophies won through commercial supremacy are the richest of earthly treasures.

The United States once possessed the proud reputation of world-wide commercial greatness and enjoyed a full share of its inflowing wealth.

Then the American flag gaily fluttered in the breezes of every sea and greeted the denizens of every shore.

Then peace was victorious and the flag of American commerce justly protected.

Where is that flag now?

Driven almost entirely from the ocean, not by the rude hand of war, but folded in disgrace by vicious legislation.

It is a criminal disgrace.

What can possibly be named more worthy of protection than the American commercial flag?

What is at present more shamefully discarded?

THE DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM.

Hon. Chauncey F. Black, of Pennsylvania, President of the National Association of Democratic Clubs, truthfully declares the pledged action of the Democratic party to be as follows:

"To oppose the imposition of taxes beyond the necessities of government economically administered.

To promote economy in all branches of the public service.

To oppose unnecessary commercial restrictions for the benefit of the few at the cost of the many.

To oppose class legislation, which despoils labor and builds up monopoly.

To maintain inviolate the fundamental principles of Democracy, "equality before the law;" and

To co-operate with the regular organization of the Democratic party in support of Democratic men and Democratic measures.

That covers the ground completely, and if carried into sovereign effect would promote the best interests of an overwhelming majority of the people of the United States.

The Democratic party will not rest content until the tyranny of unjust taxation is overthrown, the mercenary designs of monopolists effectually blocked, and every honest citizen be guaranteed the free opportunity of receiving and enjoying unabridged recompense for his individual industry, skill and enterprise."

Such is the platform of Democracy.

WHY NOT?

The Senate have passed a bill giving a bounty to the producers of sugar. Good! But why stop with sugar?

The nation needs good education a great deal more than good sugar. And our teachers are the poorest paid workers in America. Why not a bounty to teachers?

The critics say that the theatre is demoralized, because managers have to cater to a sensation-loving public. They would give us moral dramas if they could afford to. Why not a bounty to properly regulated theatres?

Laughter produces adipose tissue as well as sugar. "Laugh and grow fat" is an old motto. Why not a bounty to Puck, Judge, and Life?

American literature needs encouragement. There is good precedent for a pension to writers. Why not a bounty to American authors?

The price of wheat is very low. The farmers in the Northwest, it is said, find it very difficult to keep out of debt. We can live without sugar, but not without wheat. Why not a bounty to the wheat-growers of Minnesota and Iowa and Dakota as well as to the sugar-growers of Louisiana?

Religion is more important than sugar. Churches have hard work to make both ends meet, and ministers have harder work. Why not an established church, or at least a bounty to the churches?

In short, why not all of us stop earning an honest livelihood by hard work and be supported by the bounty of the Government.—Christian Union.

A meeting under the auspices of the Friends' Temperance and Literary Society, was held at the residence of Mr. Robinson Pound, the President, on East Second street, evening January 30. Interesting papers on temperance were read by Mrs. H. C. Adams, Miss Cecilia Vail and others. The next meeting will be held at the residence of Mr. Adelbert Vail, on West Fourth street.

Doesn't Want Any Poles on His Property.

Mr. Henry Winter who owns the vacant corner lot at 55 West Seventh street, had the telephone poles along the line of the property cut down, Monday, by the advice of his lawyer.

The out-of-town connections were not disturbed, however. Next day all the local subscribers who were interfered with have been fixed up again. The action of Mr. Winter will be settled in Court.

The Boy Went Shopping.

The following order was received at F. C. Bostwick's meat market in Dunellen a few days ago:

1 pair stockings, ladies' size, 1 yard thick, strong elastic, black, about 1 inch wide, for boys' garters; 1½ doz. sausages strings; 1 bottle catsup, 15c. size.

The boy was given a pound of link sausage and sent home rejoicing, that being as near as the proprietor could come to filling the order.

When Somerville Will Boom.

(From the Somerset Democrat.)

There was a perfect jam of carriages on Park avenue, Plainfield, one recent morning, and several collisions resulted from the blockade. An officer was obliged to guard the crossing so as to allow pedestrians to cross in safety.—Somerset Democrat.

The policemen of Somerville are busy just now trying to find the crossings for pedestrians. When the tracks are laid for our electric road, and the streets are paved, then our policemen will be kept busy keeping the crossing cleared so that vehicles can pass, as pedestrians will be so glad to discover a good crosswalk they will be going backward and forward all the time.

And Now They Beat New York.

An Obstreperous Servant.

A family residing on Broadway east of the Crescent Avenue church, had a rather unpleasant experience with their hired girl on Saturday evening. The girl was obtained from an employment bureau in New York, and brought to Plainfield on Wednesday of last week. On Saturday evening she became intoxicated, and attempted to clean house by throwing her mistress out of doors. The woman broke up things in general, until an officer was called in to eject her. The officer experienced great difficulty in dragging the woman from her room in the upper story of the house, as she clung to the banisters, and fought and scratched in a desperate manner.

Finally the obstreperous female was landed on the ground, and after her scanty baggage was gathered up, she was taken to the railroad station and sent to New York on a late train.

The Assembly Chamber at Trenton was crammed uncomfortably full Monday P. M. during the ceremonies of presentation to the State of the portrait of the late ex-Governor Joel Parker, painted by Mr. Julian Scott of this city and presented in a glowing and eloquent speech by the Hon. John Ulrich.

The members of the Senate were the guests of the Assembly and occupied seats of honor "on the floor" of the House. The ladies' gallery was also crowded, and the lobbies and cloak rooms overflowed. Among those present from Plainfield were Councillor W. K. McClure, Messrs J. P. MacDonald, E. C. Dinges, John Johnston, R. Merritt, and ex-Councilman F. M. Slater and Mr. E. C. Morse of the Borough.

After the opening prayer, the routine business interested the strangers for a while by its novelty. A resolution was subsequently presented and adopted, "giving the privileges of the floor of the Assembly to Julian Scott, the painter of the Parker portrait," and an adjournment was made at nine o'clock to allow for the joint meeting with the Senate, and the presentation and reception of the picture.

The Hon. Geo. T. Werts acted as Chairman, and appointed a Committee who escorted the Governor to a seat on his right. The Hon. John Ulrich then arose in his place and in a most eloquent and impressive manner made the speech of presentation.

He told of the appointment of a Committee with power to procure a picture of the late Hon. Joel Parker, and that after seeking out the paintings of several artists, the work was given after due deliberation to Julian Scott. The speaker reviewed the life of the dead statesman; told of the acts that gave him the honorable notoriety he so greatly deserved; and closed with a beautiful eulogy of his character as without parallel and without reproach. Judge Ulrich's concluding words were:

"In the absence of the Chairman of the House Committee, it becomes my duty to now formally present this portrait, which portrays ex-Governor Parker during his term as War Governor, to the House, sincerely trusting that it shall not hang upon the walls of the Assembly Chamber as an ornament, nor to be solely inspected as an elegant work of art, but that under its shadow the members of this House, and future Houses, will recall the real life of one whose noble heart always beat with pride for having been a true and loyal Jerseyman—and looking up into his manly, dignified and open countenance, may many generations catch the poetical song:

"Lives of great men all remind us,
We can make our lives sublime,
And departing leave behind us,
Footprints on the sands of time."

—The irrepressible Charles Smith, one of the Middlesex Gun Club's champion shots, contested with Mr. Frank Klein, of Philadelphia, at live birds on January 30, and Charley came out victor by a score of 48 out of fifty to his opponent's 45. The Dutch were in high glory and had shooting clothes on.

A CHAPTER FROM THE CITY RECORDS.

One More Plea for the Protection of Our Homes Against the Saloons.

The following is an extract from a paper prepared at the request of the Plainfield W. C. T. U., read before them and their guests on New Year's day, by Mrs. Dr. Kimball, President of the Children's Home, and published by request in THE PRESS.

Having taken this broad, sad outlook at different parts of the country, let us turn our eyes and our thoughts to this city of our homes. Shall we hope to find here a brighter or more cheerful picture? Alas! the same wail of poverty, wretchedness and crime meets us on every hand. From a personal knowledge covering twelve years of constant work in Plainfield, I can bring you no more hopeful record. The Secretary of the Relief Association says, "One-half the cases seeking aid are caused by intemperance." Through the courtesy of the City Judge, the Overseer of the Poor, and the Chairman of the Alms Committee, I bring you this sad story of poverty, crime and sorrow in our city. Remember these must necessarily cover but a small part of the actual case. These are largely the abject poor and the openly wicked. These give you no hint of the multitude of homes where the drink habit is firmly intrenched doing its deadly work steadily and surely on bodies and souls. These are no "guesses at truth." These are matters of actual record. There have been helped during the past year fifty families averaging three children to each, or about one hundred and fifty persons. The need in more than half the cases comes directly from drink! Our city officers appropriated at the beginning of the year four thousand dollars, and the amount had already been over drawn nearly fifteen hundred dollars. If these sums were doing the good that alms giving ought to do, no one need complain; but under our present city system—or want of system—of caring for the poor, our officers are constantly harassed, and much money is paid for idle, shiftless drunken men and women, who do not care to work, but have always plenty of money for rum and tobacco. I believe that our poor-officers do all that is possible under present arrangements for caring for the poor. If the city could plan for one of its most urgent needs, a properly conducted poor house, where these wretched men and women, away from the temptations of the liquor shops which infest the best business streets of our city as well as the poorest, and apart from the inducements of vice they offer each other, could be made to do honest work, a large part of this poor fund might be used for other purposes. The able-bodied men and women could then earn their living and their wretched children be saved from the evil influences and companionships which are now cursing their lives and casting their black shadows far down the years to early manhood and womanhood.

Then there need be no such heart sickening report as this of our City Judge: Whole number of persons arrested in eleven months, 234. Arrested for drunkenness and disorderly conduct, 130; for selling without a license and selling on Sunday, 5—making 135; leaving 29 only on other charges. The larger part of the 29, however, were for assault and disorderly conduct while drunk, or of persons habitually drunken. By far the larger part of these were men and women under forty years old. Practically, one might say the entire cost of our city court for 1888 has been for drunkenness.

As I said of the poverty, this record gives only a small part of the actual truth. It does not lift the curtain on the ruin of homes, on the waste of young hearts and lives going on right here in our midst. It does not tell of the young feet that are going down to dishonor and death by way of the saloons of this city, licensed with the positive understanding that no liquor is to be sold to minors. It is a matter of common report that many times during the past Autumn our Plainfield boys and their visiting friends have, after their ball games were over, gone to these saloons and drank there! It is also said that on the evenings of our late political parades some of our school boys left the procession and drank in Front street saloons! How long shall this be? Is there no one to lend a helping hand to our boys? Must we mothers, after doing all we can for them in our homes, feel that when they go out on our streets neither their honor nor their morals are safe? From the saloon the path is short and easy to profligacy, disease and death. One of the best known city physicians said not long since to a mother, "If the mothers of Plainfield could know the terrible condition of their young sons who come to me privately for treatment, they would rise as one woman and demand immediate protection of their boys and their homes." There is at least one woman now receiving aid from the city who is a drunken profligate, and her house is the resort of the vile and abandoned of both sexes. How long shall our city even seem to offer its protection to such persons?

Members of our Union, as today we look in each other's faces with the glad wish for a "Happy New Year," shall not our earnest prayer be for yet more consecration to higher and truer work than ever before for "God and Home and our Native Land!" Fathers and brothers, will you not help us to answer our own prayers, and save our homes from the power of the saloon?

M. E. KIMBALL.

Found a 'Possum in His Dog House.

Early on Saturday morning the family of Mr. A. M. France, of Peace and Second streets, were rudely awakened by hearing a great commotion in the door-yard. Hastily dressing Mr. France went into the yard, and surrounding a dog-house, which stood near the house, another member of the family dragged from the coop a full-grown 'possum. The animal was given to a friend of Mr. France's.

The capture was something unusual, located as the place is, right in the centre of the city.

Mr Schenck's Sermon to Young Mechanics.

The young men members of Franklin Council, No. 41, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, to the number of thirty-five, were present at Trinity Reformed church Sunday night and the pastor, the Rev. Cornelius Schenck, preached them a sermon by request.

The church was crowded. The Council members occupied seats in a body in the centre aisle and front of the church, and were very attentive listeners to the excellent advice given them. Mr. Schenck's able discourse was of "A young man who succeeded," and his subject was the life and character of Daniel—taking for his text a part of the 3d verse of the 6th chapter of Daniel: "Then this Daniel was preferred above the presidents and princes; because an excellent spirit was in him."

The speaker treated the subject in an intensely interesting manner that at once attracted the attention of his hearers and held it throughout the sermon. His exposition of Daniel's character was clear and eloquent, and his review of Daniel's life was such as to bring prominently forth the admirable nature of the man and the qualities that brought him success and esteem above princes.

—An action brought by John T. Odam vs. Joel Pennington, to recover a sum of money loaned came up for trial before Justice Nash on 29th ult. It appearing that the defendant was a minor, Hon. John Ulrich, counsel for the plaintiff moved to dismiss the suit, which Justice Nash did. Mr. W. A. Coddington represented the defendant.

A LONG SESSION AND MUCH BUSINESS TRANSACTED.

President Dumont called the City Council to order, in regular session at 8:15 P. M. Monday, all the members being present. Clerk Leonard read the minutes of the previous meeting, and they were approved as read.

PETITIONS AND COMMUNICATIONS.

From C. P. Boyer of Philadelphia, asking for a fifty year's franchise for a water supply system. Referred.

From Putnam street residents, stating that some of the sign boards at the intersection of street corners read "Putnam street," others were marked "Putnam avenue." The petitioners requested that all the boards be marked "Putnam avenue." Referred.

From property owners on Woodland avenue, asking for an extra light. Referred and subsequently granted.

From Mary V. Sickel for permission to erect a frame house on East Fifth street. Referred, and later returned, as the dimensions were not specified.

From H. K. Miller for an additional light on LeGrande avenue. Referred.

From the Grocer's Protective Union asking for protection from unscrupulous peddlers, and requesting that the peddler's license fee be raised to $25. The union also asked that the kerosene ordinance be amended so as to allow keeping in stock ten barrels instead of five, and at a later stage in the proceedings Mr. Erickson introduced an ordinance to that effect, which was read twice and ordered engrossed and advertised.

From the hotel keepers, stating that the entire business community would suffer by raising the hotel license fee on the same footing with saloons. The document stated that the hotels are a necessity, and intended for both permanent and transient guests. Furthermore, the proprietors spend about $75,000 annually in the city, and by cutting off this revenue would be disastrous to the city; families have permanently located here, by first putting up at hotels. The communication was signed by all of the hotel keepers. It was received and filed.

From Messrs J. H. Mooney, J. Haywood, T. A. VanZandt, A. W. Platt, S. G. Smith and J. T. Fritts, asking for a franchise to operate a street railway, under the name of the "Plainfield Street Railway Company." The Company agrees to place concrete pavement inside the rails and for a distance of one foot on the outside; also to run well equipped and convenient cars. The proposed route of the company is as follows, and over fifty per cent of the signatures of the property-owners along the proposed route have already been obtained: Beginning on West Seventh street at Grant avenue, thence West to Clinton avenue, to Front street, to Richmond street, to Putnam street, and perhaps through Broadway to Front. The matter was referred to the Street Committee.

From the physicians of the city, asking Council to take immediate steps toward providing a system of water works and sewerage, claiming that the city's health demanded it. Referred to the Committee on Water, etc.

From Messrs L. V. F. Randolph and W. R. Clarkson, residents of East Front street, asking for an opportunity to express their views before the Council grants a street railway franchise. Referred to Street Committee.

From Otto Arend, an application to sell liquor by the quart. Tabled.

From Asa Collier, for permission to erect a frame bowling alley, adjoining the Bicycle club house, one story high, covered with tin roof, and 90 feet long. Referred to Committee on Fire and Buildings, and later returned so as to have dimensions included.

From the W. C. T. U., asking for a few minutes hearing with the Council, on the evening final action is taken on the license applications. Granted.

Mr. Marsh submitted a communication with accompanying affidavit from the N. Y. and N. J. Telephone company, with reference to establishing, by ordinance, the company's route in this city. The affidavit only was read, and all the papers were referred to the Street Committee.

LIQUOR LICENSE APPLICATIONS.

License applications were presented and referred as follows: Otto Arend, 13 East Second street; P. Day, 97 West Third street; Chas. Bock, 15 and 17 East Second street; Jas. Connoly, 34 Park avenue; Jas. O'Neill, 178 South Second street; Jno. Rafferty, 29 Park avenue; Chas. Smith, Front and Somerset streets; J. T. Sullivan, 66 West Third street; E. P. Thorn, 17 Park avenue.

Hotels—Jacob Blimm, 17 and 19 Somerset street; John E. Beerbower, City Hotel; James H. Force, Force's Hotel, 1 to 9 North Avenue; Fred Caspar, 24 and 26 East Front street; J. H. Miller, (Laing's Hotel) 48 to 54 West Front street. All of the above applications were ordered printed according to law.

Sliter, 8; T. McCue, 60; F. D. Fine, 3; S. R. Hope, 4; T. J. Carey, 75; J. Johnson, 125; G. M. Angleman, 70 50, and 254 94; L. F. Wadsworth, 6; Eng. Co. No. 2, 20; J. Manning, 9; E. MacDonald, 9; Times, 49 20; S. H. Slaughter, 18; Jno. Johnson, 8 48, and 19 81; M. Powers, 79 30; Electric Light Co., 478 06; A. L. Jimerson, 145 28; R. F. M. Chase, 345 35.

Fire Department—First National Bank, $105; Julia A. Rogers, 68 75; J. C. Pierson, Jr., 5; C. J. Braxmar, 86; Plainfield Gas Co., 34 88; Engine Co., No. 2, 25.

Poor—J. O. Nodyne, $75; J. A. Thickstun, 79 45; Relief Association, 72 50; Jas. Hanahan, 10; Mary Conway, 4; B. Guttman, agt., $16; Jas. Cannon, 4; Chas. McCarthy, 4; Kate Conway, 4; Lewis Webster, 3 50; Jos. Newman, 15; C. S. Guion, 42 56; M. A. Cooper, $24; B. Flemming, 10; Kate Ettinger, 4; Elias Cole, 14; Jas. McGinley, 3; Ellen Bergen, 4; Mary Moran, 13 50; M. J. Roll, 2; A. M. Runyon & Son, 15; A. Manning, 62 50.

The Collector's report for January showed that $8,231 90 had been collected, of which $2,397 66 has been credited to the Board of Education, and the balance divided among the various funds. This report, together with that of the City Treasurer, was referred to the Finance Committee. The quarterly report of the City Physician was received and filed.

Chief Doane of the Fire Department, reported the department apparatus in good working order; he also made some timely suggestions which the Council will consider; as Fire Marshal, the Chief stated that during the year he had personally inspected over 200 buildings, furnaces, etc., and in but few instances he had found it necessary to serve written notices, as the property owners almost invariably were willing to make the repairs demanded. The report was referred to the Committee on Fire and Buildings.

The Chief also reported the need of a better supply of water in the vicinity of Netherwood, and of the Pond Tool Works. In the former neighborhood water can only be obtained from the Hotel cisterns, and in the latter from hydrants in the Works and from one well that in dry weather would soon be exhausted.

The Board of Engineers of the Fire Department recommended the confirmation of Wm. H. Bachman and Patrick Moran as members of the department, and it was so ordered.

NOMINATIONS BY THE MAYOR.

Mayor Male sent in the following nominations, all of which were confirmed by the Council:

Corporation Counsel—C. A. Marsh.
Board of Health, (two years)—Geo. W. Rockfellow, O. B. Leonard.
City Physician—Andrew Manning.
Overseer of the Poor—J. Oakley Nodyne.
Pound Masters—D. Hisel, T. Barrett.
Street Commissioner—Geo. M. Angleman.
Special Police—P. Gleise, J. S. Sillory, W. S. Sliter, C. Jones, J. Cooney, W. R. Mattox, T. J. Clarkson, N. R. Hope, M. Higgins, J. Babbitt, R. Marsh, J. Kriney, Wm. Washington. [The special police were tabled for the time being, but acted upon later on.]
Chief of the Fire Department—T. O. Doane.
First Assistant—Eugene A. Laine.
Second Assistant—James A. Martin.

The several committees returned as correct the bills referred to them during the evening, and the claims went into the hands of the Auditing Committee.

The Finance Committee returned as correct the bond of the City Treasurer and it was filed.

Mr. Dunham submitted the following list of salaries for the city officers per annum: Corporation Counsel, $750; City Clerk, $750; Street Commissioner, $1,080; Chief of Police, $1,082; regular police, $725; special police, 25 cents an hour when on duty; City Judge, $300; City Physician, $250; Overseer of the Poor, $350; Assessor, $800; Treasurer, $450; Chief Engineer, $500; First and Second Assistants $75 each; Janitor $50, and $3 for every extra occasion. Mr. Dunham's resolution prevailed.

The Committee on Lights submitted the bond of the Electric Light Company, and it was filed.

Upon resolution by Mr. Squires an additional lamp was granted on West Fourth street, between Plainfield and Spooner avenues.

Mr. Marsh reported progress in the matter of a street railway. He said the Committee had hoped to report during the evening, but the members failed to connect.

NEW BUSINESS.

A resolution was introduced naming the Central Times and Constitutionalist as the official organs of the city, but upon motion of Mr. Newhall it was referred to the Committee on Water, Printing and Stationery.

Mr. Marsh spoke of the necessity of an office for the Street Commissioner, Chief of Police and Chief of the Fire Department, and the Street Committee was authorized to lease, for $74 a year, a room in the Schwed building on East Front street.

The Street Committee was also empowered to furnish the room, at a cost not exceeding $200.

An ordinance was introduced, amending the ordinance providing for the relief and support of the poor. It was read twice and ordered engrossed and advertised.

Mr. Marsh offered a resolution providing for the laying of a single stone crosswalk at the intersection of Ninth street and Madison avenue. Adopted.

He also offered a resolution, which prevailed, defining the duties of the special police; hereafter any special police, who act as night watchman, for private residences or otherwise, must report when going on and off duty; furthermore they will be subject to the Chief's instructions, and will not be allowed to hire out for balls, etc., without the Chief's consent.

The above nominations of special policemen were then called from the table and confirmed.

Mr. Marsh made a motion that the offices of special policemen, except those just confirmed, be declared vacant. The motion was carried, and Chief Carey was requested to call in the badges.

Mr. Squires called to its third reading the ordinance introduced on January 14, relating to closing saloon and hotel barrooms at 11 P. M., and raising the license fee to $700. A motion by Mr. Erickson to lay the ordinance on the table, was lost by a vote of 6 to 5. Messrs. Dumont, Erickson, Gallup, Moffett and Watson voting in the affirmative. The ordinance was then read for the third time and adopted, Messrs. Dumont, Erickson, Gallup, Moffett and Watson voting "no."

The same Councilman called up the ordinance prohibiting women from signing liquor license applications, and it was adopted on its third reading by a vote of 8 to 3—Messrs. Gallup, Moffett and Watson voting "no."

Mr. Marsh spoke of the matter of improving the county roads, and offered the following resolutions, which were adopted.

Resolved, The Common Council of the City of Plainfield, favor proper legislation for the improvement of the roads throughout the county of Union on some fair and equitable basis, that will throw a fair proportion of the costs thereof upon that section through which the roads so improved may run, and whereas a movement is now on foot looking to such legislation, and it is important that the provisions thereof shall be made that the interest of the city of Plainfield should be fully protected.

Resolved That a Committee of three of the Council be appointed to look after the interest of the city in the premises, and any other legislation that may come up affecting the interests of the city of Plainfield.

The chair appointed the Committee on Streets as such Committee.

Councilman Dunham moved that when the Council adjourn it be to meet again on the 25th instant. Carried.

The Auditing Committee made a report on the claims presented during the evening, and they were ordered paid.

Council then adjourned.

A Big Real Estate Transfer.

An extensive purchase of land it is reported has been made by the Baltimore and Ohio Company at Elizabethport. The company has bought all the land lying between Cook's Lard Oil Works and the Bowker Fertilizing Works, on which to build repair shops for rolling stock. The building of eight immense scows to be used in transporting freight cars from St. George to New York will begin soon. Four scows are to be built at a time. They will carry from twelve to fourteen cars.

PLAINFIELD'S STREET RAILWAY.

[From THE PRESS of Feb. 1.]

As stated in THE PRESS, the Committee on Streets, Messrs Marsh, Dunham and Jenkins, will report to the Council at its regular meeting of next Monday evening, regarding the matter of a street railway; and in the interests of the city and the best convenience of the people, THE PRESS trusts that the Committee will recommend the granting of the franchise to the Daft Electric Co.

The system proposed by such petitioner provides for the propulsion of cars by electric motors placed over the trucks beneath the floor of the car and receiving their power from storage batteries under the seats. This absence of currents carried through metallic circuits overhead or along the rails, does away entirely with all danger. The cells can be charged at the Electric Light station, and it is claimed they will store each time sufficient power to run a car forty miles.

A number of meetings have been held by the Committee during which not only have the different systems proposed been thoroughly investigated, but the probable route has been discussed. The views of the Council in such particular will eventually be presented to the public for its consideration, with requests for suggestions.

Honestly impressed after careful inquiry into and study of the efficiency, service and desirability of the several systems offered, THE PRESS can assure the people that they will be the better satisfied and the City the greater benefitted, by the granting of a street railway franchise to the Daft Electric Co.

—Valentine's Day will be celebrated with the usual ceremony on the 14th inst. Some of the designs in valentines for this season are very pretty, and the present indications are that the custom will be observed as in former years.

A Short Session and But Little Business Transacted.

Mayor Cooley, and Messrs Emmons, McGee, McCutchen, Hegeman and Needham, constituting a quorum of the Borough Council, met in regular session, Friday. Clerk Arnold read the minutes of the previous meeting and they were approved as read.

Justice Crossley petitioned the Council for permission to hold jury trials in the Council Chamber. Referred.

Mayor Cooley reported that $24 had been received by him for fines during the year.

A petition for a sidewalk on Somerset street, between Mountain and Summit avenues, was referred to the Street Committee, as was also a petition for a walk in front of property owned by Samuel Hudson, at Somerset street and Grandview avenue.

Two petitions for peddler's license were received, referred and subsequently granted.

Clerk Arnold reported a balance of $57.-94 in his hands.

Tax Collector, H. N. Spencer made a report on the taxes collected, as follows: 1888—$6,832.33; 1886—$22.22; 1887—$10.-08.

The following claims were read, referred and ordered paid: F. Wooden, $20; J. P. Homan, $6.20; J. Coddington, $37.-50; I. Brokaw. $28.73; H. N. Spencer, $341.62; A. D. Cook & Bro., $5.37 and $11; Chas. A. Reed, $15; C. H. Gill, $42.42 and $56; M. Powers, $44.54.

Mayor Cooley made a report with reference to the polling places, and recommended no change at present.

Mr. McGee, from the Fire, Water and Lamps Committee, recommended the location of street lamps as follows: One on Manning avenue; one on Emily street, and three on Washington avenue, North of Green Brook road.

Mr. Hegeman, from the Street Committee, reported that the condition of Green Brook road had been examined, and found to be in a very bad condition; there was, however, no ready money to make the necessary repairs.

The Committee also reported that the petition for sidewalks, grading and lamps from Summit avenue property owners, had been considered. The Clerk was authorized to notify certain property holders to lay sidewalks in compliance with the petitioner's demands.

The petition of T. E. Warman for a crosswalk was refused because the appropriation is exhausted.

The Street Committee made a report, not recommending the acceptance of Belmont avenue. The report was received and recommendation adopted.

Upon motion of Mr. McGee, it was agreed that when the Council adjourn it be to meet again on the 15th instant.

Mr. Needham made a motion which prevailed to the effect that the reports of the Clerk and Collector be examined by the Auditing Committee, said Committee to report at the next meeting.

Upon motion adopted the Clerk was authorized to procure Vosselman's shop for election purposes.

Sidewalks were ordered laid on Chatham street in front of property owned by Richard Coriell and John Hughes.

Clerk Arnold was authorized to issue a note for $300 chargeable to the road fund, to be used for street purposes.

Council then adjourned.

—Oh! for a Y. M. C. A. building.

—G. Park & Son, Park avenue, have a large assortment of Valentines, and are selling them at a very small profit. Call while the assortment is complete.

—A lad whose name could not be ascertained, broke through the ice on Coddington's lake, at "The Notch," Saturday afternoon, and narrowly escaped drowning.

—Can't something be done to stop the intolerable nuisance of able-bodied tramps ringing the front door bells of city residences all day long, and asking for clothing?

—Judge McCormick in the Union County Court of Common Pleas at Elizabeth, on Tuesday, fined a spectator $5 for applauding a verdict of acquittal. The fine was paid.

—The members of the Plainfield Cornet Band have accepted an invitation from the Phil Kearney Post Fife and Drum Corps of Newark, to attend the latter's ball on Feb. 19.

—A tramp visited several residences on East Front street, last evening, soliciting money. The fellow claimed to be looking for work, and wanted assistance so as to get a bed for the night.

—There was an increased demand for THE PRESS, on Saturday. After the regular edition was exhausted, our presses were again started up, and several hundred extra copies were printed.

—Work is progressing favorably on the new McIntyre building on North avenue. The foundations walls are up, and the building will be pushed forward to completion as fast as the weather will permit.

—The New Jersey Legislative Manual for 1889 exceeds even those of the past in both its completeness and conciseness. It is compiled as usual by Mr. T. F. Fitzgerald, by authority of the Legislature, and evidences his thorough acquaintance with the public officers, public buildings and public acts of New Jersey.

Sewing, Supper and Sociability.

The Mah Myah Mission Band of the First Baptist church, met at the home of Mrs. D. J. Yerkes, the pastor's wife, Tuesday afternoon for sewing.

A supper was subsequently served to the score of guests followed by an evening of social pleasures in which about forty took part.

A Bargain in Borough Real Estate.

The very desirable corner lot, 50 by 125 feet, at Emily and Duer streets, North Plainfield, adjoining the residence of Mr. Wm. Schutt, has been purchased by Messrs R. W. Rice & Co., the grocers.

The price paid was $1,400 which is remarkably low. The new owners will probably very soon erect a fine building thereon.

Y. M. C. A. Members' Tea.

Prof. F. A. Wilber of New Brunswick, and Mr. George B. Voorhees, of Morristown, members of the State Y. M. C. A. Committee, will be present at the Members' Tea at the Association rooms, 8 and 10 East Front street, Friday evening of this week at 8 o'clock. Let every member arrange to attend.

A Talk to the Y's.

Tuesday afternoon at two o'clock, the "Y" rooms were open for the Sewing Circle, and a number of the members gathered and worked until four o'clock, when the devotional meeting was called to order by the leader.

Dr. Ketcham gave the young women one of his pleasing and instructive talks, which all who did not hear will regret. After which one of the members sang a solo which was much enjoyed.

Buy Nothing From Pedlers.

Housekeepers should buy nothing from the peddlers and fakirs who are constantly ringing door bells, or sticking circulars under the door threatening to call some other day. There is nothing needed in the family which cannot be bought quite as cheap and much more reliable from the regular dealers, who are our fellow citizens and who pay taxes to help support the town. Their names also being found in the advertising columns of this paper.

Testing the Train Men's Sight.

Examination of the train hands of the Central railroad as to color blindness, and their ability to read fine and coarse print at different distances, began Monday.

An examining board of experts from Philadelphia travel the road in a special car, and put the engineers, firemen, brakemen and conductors, through a certain course. Among other tests a number of pieces of different colored worsteds are mixed together, and the one who is being examined is expected to distinguish each from the other.

Evening Sociable.

A very pleasant time was had Tuesday night at the residence of Mr. John Rafferty, No. 29 Park avenue, about fifty being present from this city, Elizabeth and New Brunswick. Dancing, interspersed with singing, recitations, etc., occupied the time until supper was announced at about 12 o'clock. The guests did ample justice to the many good things spread before them, and when all had satisfied themselves, dancing was again indulged in. Prof. Reilley furnished the music for the occasion. "Pop" in his usual happy manner, did his share toward making the evening a pleasant one for all. It was in the small hours of the morning before all left for their homes, with memories of the pleasant evening passed, and well wishes for their host and hostess.

A [illegible] Neighborhood.

Just at present there is an absence of the masculine element on Rock View avenue, North Plainfield, and feminine beauty reigns supreme in that locality.

For instance, Mr. A. W. Haviland, has gone to New York.

Next door, Mr. Geo. P. Dupee has gone to Massachusetts.

Next door, Mr. J. H. Henderson, is in Philadelphia.

Next door, Mr. E. A. Faber, has gone to Havana, in the West Indies.

Next door, Mr. Martin I. Cooley, has gone to New York, for the Winter.

Next door, Mr. Morgan Taylor, has gone to Havana.

Thus it will be seen that six of the residents on that avenue, whose property adjoins one another, are at present absent from home, an incident which perhaps has never before occurred in this city or North Plainfield.

Personals.

Mrs. Edward Winter, of East Fifth street, is visiting friends in Brooklyn.

Mr. O. Hemanon, of Netherwood, left Friday last to join her husband for an extended trip South.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. E. Brown of North Plainfield, started 31st ult. for an extended trip through Florida.

The death of Mrs. Josephine C. Bovey, yesterday morning, occurred from heart failure caused by general debility.

One of our young East Front street merchants is contemplating leading a Brooklyn lady to the altar, during next month.

Mrs. Louisa Worthington, formerly of East Ninth street, has left Plainfield and is now with her daughter living at Trenton, N. J.

Mr. L. V. F. Randolph of East Front street, returned last week from a trip through Colorado and Texas, where he has extended ranch interests.

Mr. and Mrs. B. A. Hegeman will be At Home, Tuesday evening of next week, from eight till eleven o'clock, at their residence on Sycamore avenue.

Mrs. Charles Hyde, son and daughter, of East Front street, have started on an extended trip through the South, the objective point being Nassau, N. P.

Miss Grace T. Brown of Grove street, North Plainfield, returned 31st ult. from Boston, where she had enjoyed a delightful visit with friends for two weeks.

Mr. Walter Scott, the printing press manufacturer of this city, has been granted a patent within the past week, for a sheet-delivery apparatus for printing machines.

Mr. Harry Yarnal, who was connected with the Electric Light Co., when its system was first introduced here, made a flying visit to friends in this city Saturday and Sunday.

Mr. F. M. Theriott, formerly of Washington Park, North Plainfield, was on a visit Sunday with friends in Mercer avenue. Mr. Theriott may take up his abode here again.

Mrs. C. E. Brooks of Crescent avenue, entertained a select few of her friends at her residence Friday. The evening's programme included private theatricals and a sumptuous collation.

Mr. Bert Brooks, of West Seventh street, and Miss Mary Hickling, were married at the bride's home, 30th ult., by the Rev. T. Logan Murphy, of the Church of the Holy Cross, North Plainfield.

Edward McCann, a youth residing with his parents on W. Third street, died during Friday night, after a prolonged illness. His funeral took place from St. Mary's church, Sunday afternoon at three o'clock.

Mrs. McClure and daughter, Miss Mary Elsie McClure, with Miss Elsie VanZandt, of Crescent avenue—a friend of Miss McClure and her invited guest—left for Montreal, Friday, to remain during the carnival.

The children of Mr. and Mrs. Ferdinand Fish of Madison ave., gave their friends a party, 30th ult. Prof. Guttman furnished the music for dancing, which with games and supper made up the evening's enjoyment.

The funeral of the late Pauline D. Thompson who died on Thursday last, took place from the late residence of the deceased on Peace street, on Saturday. Interment was made in the Presbyterian cemetery at New Providence.

At the first regular meeting of the newly-elected directors of the New York Coffee Exchange, held in New York on Monday, Mr. Otto Arens of this city, was appointed a member of the Finance Committee for the ensuing year.

The Misses Winckler of Park place, North Plainfield, were tendered a surprise party, Tuesday night. About twenty-five couple were present and enjoyed an evening of real amusement. Prof. Franse furnished the music for dancing.

Mr. Andrew Lotkins is hereby tendered the thanks of THE PRESS office for his gift of some very fine Naval oranges picked from the Florida groves of his friend, Mr. J. Greenwood. Some of the fruit measure eleven inches in circumference.

January 30 John L. Book and Miss Williana Apgar were married at Dunellen by the Rev. Mr. Shellenger of the Presbyterian church. Mr. and Mrs. Book left on an evening train for short a trip and on their return will reside permanently in South Orange, N. J.

Mr. James Hardy, the architect, of Duer street, North Plainfield, has leased from Mr. P. M. French a plot of ground on Somerset, upon which he is erecting a frame building. Mr. Hardy will occupy the ground floor himself, but the upper story will be rented.

Mrs. Sarah Lattimer's total contribution toward the erection of the new First Presbyterian church, amounts to $37,000. Only a day or two before she was stricken down with paralysis she made an additional contribution of $6,000 toward the cost of furnishing the new edifice.

The children of ex-Chief A. D. Jennings of the Plainfield Fire Department, held a birthday party at their parents' residence on West Fourth street, January 30. A few of the neighbors' children were invited in, and some hours were passed pleasantly by the little ones.

Cards are out announcing the marriage of Mr. Louis Irving VanAlstyne of this city, to Miss Mary Burton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John M. Vreeland of East Millstone, N. J. The ceremony will take place at the residence of the bride's parents, on Wednesday evening, February 13, at 7 o'clock.

At her residence on Peace street, 31st ult., after many months' sickness, the death occurred of Mrs. Pauline D. Thompson, widow of Joel D. Thompson. She was the mother of Mr. A. D. Thompson, owner of the Riverside stock farms, and proprietor of stables at New Brunswick, Findorne and Netherwood.

Mr. Theo. Gray called at THE PRESS office Saturday and informed a reporter that the burning of his father's hay-stack on Wednesday evening, was not due to tramps, as another paper stated it was. The crime was traced directly to a lot of boys, who are likely to get themselves into trouble if the practice continues.

Miss Annie Murphy, the accomplished daughter of Mrs. and Rev. T. Logan Murphy, of Washington avenue, North Plainfield, has been visiting friends at Cleveland, Ohio, for the past two months. Her visit has been thoroughly enjoyed, having attended many social events given among the leading society people of that city. Miss Murphy left Cleveland last Saturday for Buffalo, where she will visit friends before returning home.

Principal C. E. Ross, of the North Plainfield public school, was appointed Superintendent for Somerset and Hunterdon counties, and member of the committees on Finance and Legal Management, at the semi-annual meeting of the Board of Control of the New Jersey Teachers' Reading Circle, held at Trenton on Saturday. The duties of the county superintendents are to supervise the work of the Reading Circles and to carry on a correspondence with the teachers and keep up their interest in the matter.

Death of Mr. George Goodman.

Mr. George Goodman, perhaps the oldest resident in Washington Valley, died last Thursday night from old age. The deceased was eighty years of age, and for the past forty years he has resided in the "Valley." The funeral took place from the house, on the road leading to Washington Rock, on Sunday afternoon. Interment was made in the Presbyterian cemetery in North Plainfield.

Declaring a Dividend.

The Board of Directors of the City National Bank have declared a dividend of three and one-half per cent upon its capital stock, out of the bank's earnings for the past six months. The dividend is made payable on an after Tuesday, February 5, 1889.

Ministers' Meeting.

The regular monthly meeting of the city clergymen was held at the residence of Rev. C. L. Goodrich, on West Seventh street, Monday afternoon, and about a dozen of the ministers of the city were present. Rev. Dr. Lowry gave an informal talk on "Church Music," which was both instructive and entertaining.

A Children's Party.

One of the most enjoyable children's parties of the season, was given at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Meade, No. 90 Mercer avenue, North Plainfield, Friday night.

Some twenty couple of young people participated, ranging from 10 to 15 years of age, and enjoyed themselves in dancing until 9 o'clock. Refreshments were served during the evening, and the young people voted the affair one of enjoyment, and Prof. Franse's music enchanting.

To Study "Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress."

The Young People's Association of the Crescent Avenue church propose to hold a series of Friday evening services upon "Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress."

An introductory one was held Friday night, the subject being the life and condition of Bunyan, and the introduction of his book to the public. The subject this Friday will be the first chapter of the book. Service at 8 o'clock. All are invited.

Now for a Champion Club From Plainfield!

This city is at last to have a first-class, public bowling alley.

Mr. Asa Collier has just purchased the available and convenient site adjoining the Plainfield Bicycle Club House, on Sycamore street, where he will begin the erection at once of a building to contain four fine alleys equipped with the very best apparatus obtainable.

No expense will be spared in the construction of the alleys, and their completion will be pushed forward as rapidly as possible.

The M. E. Church Sociable.

The congregation of the M. E. church in this city, held a sociable in Vincent chapel Friday evening at which there was a large attendance. Rev. C. E. Mitchell, the pastor, led in prayer, after which an informal programme of music, recitations, etc., was rendered. The Misses McGee gave some delightful vocal and instrumental music, and Miss Widden of Brooklyn contributed several recitations in a highly commendable manner. Mr. J. H. Carney also rendered some humorous recitations. Refreshments were served in abundance.

Celebrating His 21st Birthday.

Mr. Wm. Moffett, son of Councilman Elmore D. Moffett, of Orchard place, entertained a few of his friends at his parents' residence, Sunday afternoon, the occasion being the 21st anniversary of his birth. Guests were present from this city, Elizabeth and Somerville, and the afternoon was passed in a social way.

Among those present were: Miss Carrie Wilcox of Elizabeth; Mr. Geo. VanNortrick of Somerville; Mr. and Mrs. Moffett, "Uncle" Amos Moffett, Miss Minnie Force, Miss Ella Moffett, Messrs. James Blair, Frank Putnam, T. Howard Smith and others.

The Night School.

The largest number of pupils who have yet been present at the night school for men, is 116, that being the number present on evening January 30. Next night 114 attended the evening session. Mr. Rush Rhees, who has acted in the capacity of Superintendent since the opening night, has been called away, and Mr. Townsend Rushmore is appointed in his place. Mr. Rhees has taken a great interest in the night school from the start, and his absence will be severely felt by the scholars, who have learned to love and respect him.

Mr. Rhees said when enrolling the scholars on the opening night: "Scholars I want to know you, and I want you to know me; I want to know your wants, and so far as I can I will supply them."

DR. KETCHAM BROKE THE JUGS.

Tuesday afternoon in the First Presbyterian chapel, took place the annual jug breaking of the Mission Band composed of young women of the Presbyterian churches. The Rev. K. P. Ketcham broke the jugs. The largest amount in any one jug was $12, and the total reached the very satisfactory sum of $95; but all the jugs are not yet in, and it is believed that the amount will finally exceed $100.

The Band has heretofore raised $100 each year in support of a scholarship in a school at San Paulo, Brazil. This year, however, these charitable and earnest workers have raised about $300 in money, besides sending a Christmas box valued at $60, to Tripoli.

The annual meeting and election of officers of the Band, will be held next month.

A Family Reunion.

Friday night there was a happy gathering at the residence of Mrs. Lizzie Prescott, No. 31 West Second street, in commemoration of the 74th birthday of Mrs. Prescott's mother, Mrs. Mary L. Force. A number of old family friends were numbered among the guests, besides the score of children, grandchildren, nieces, nephews, grand-aunts and uncles. Grandma Force was the recipient of hearty congratulations and presents from all. A bountiful dinner was served and Prof. Franse enlivened the occasion with music and song.

The children present were Mrs. Lizzie Prescott, Messrs James. H. Force, proprietor of Force's Hotel, Postmaster W. L. Force and A. L. Force, editors and proprietors of THE CONSTITUTIONALIST and THE PRESS, with their wives. The grandchildren were Misses Emma U. King, Lillian Force, Minnie Force, Mabel Force, John L. Force, Willie Dunn, and Fred S. Dunn and wife; son-in-law L. A. Dunn, wife and L. A. Dunn, Jr., "Uncle" Isaac Laing and "Aunt" Mary Laing. "Aunt" Avis Laing and daughter, Miss Fannie Mosher, and Mother Bradshaw.

AN ALLEGED SWINDLER.

A short, thick-set man, apparently about thirty years of age, with dark complexion, black mustache, and wearing a pea-jacket, walked into Henry Voehl's bakery on Somerset street Tuesday and asked the proprietor for a loaf of bread. The bread was tied up and a ten dollar note was offered in payment for it. Mr. Voehl counted out a five dollar bill and some smaller bills in change which he placed on the counter. "Oh! interrupted the stranger, only ten cents." "That's all," remarked Mr. Voehl. "Well" said the man, "I've just got a dime in my pocket," producing the coin. The stranger called Mr. Voehl's attention from the subject, for a moment, and gathering up the ten and the five dollar bills hastened out of the store, remarking that he would return for the bread in a few minutes.

The same game was played upon an East Front street business man and upon several other merchants in the city. The fellow pretended to be an eye-glass peddler, and he made his escape. The police have been notified, and an effort will be made to hunt the rascal down.

—Twenty-five dollars apiece have been paid within the last few weeks for signers to liquor license applications in this city.

A Wedding Anniversary.

January 31 Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Stevens celebrated the tenth anniversary of their wedding at their residence, cor. of Peace and Second streets. They were recipients of many beautiful gifts from the seventy-five guests present, who enjoyed the strains of Prof. Franse's music.

After all had satisfied themselves with the many good things served at the collation, dancing was indulged in until it was time to say "good morning."

The Death Record.

George, the four-months-old son of Fred and Anna Habermann of West Third street, died very suddenly at his parents' residence, early January 31. The child seemed in good health the night previous. When Mrs. Habermann awoke that morning there was a death-like pallor on the child's face. She aroused her husband, who hastened for a physician, but the child was dead when the doctor arrived.

A six-year-old son of Fred and Sarah Hickson of East Third street, died 29th ult., from disease of the liver.

The King's Daughters Hold a Reception in Washington Park.

An afternoon tea and reception was held at the residence of Mrs. George P. Dupee, Rock View avenue, 30th ult., under the auspices of the "King's Daughters" of that vicinity. About 200 ladies and gentlemen patronized the very enjoyable affair and a brilliant success resulted.

An admission fee of twenty-five cents was charged for the good of the cause, and that with the receipts from the bountiful supply of edibles furnished, netted a profit to the treasury of these young women—who are veritable Princesses of charity—of almost fifty dollars.

An Entertaining and Instructive Visit.

The brass-buttoned middies and junior officers about the Brooklyn Navy Yard and aboard its war ships, were thrown into spasms of palpitation of the heart, last Saturday afternoon, by the sight of a bevy of beautiful young women accompanied mainly by a trio of Plainfield men, which party was being shown the sights by P. A. Engineer, George S. Willits, of the man-of-war "Boston."

The tour of inspection was a most instructive and entertaining one, long to be remembered by the guests of the genial and gallant officer, together with their never-to-be-forgotten appreciation of his courtesy and the affability of his wife.

'Twas Only a Scare.

A crowd of people gathered on the sidewalk on Park avenue near Front street, about 10 o'clock 31st ult., and watched a column of smoke curling upward over the Corey building on the south corner of Front street and Park avenue. The odor of burning rags was easily detected, and the general impression prevailed that the building was on fire.

The night operator in the District Messenger office, quickly climbed up a telegraph pole and made a survey of the surroundings, but he discovered no fire, and the crowd finally drifted away. A fire once fairly started in that locality, would certainly prove disastrous.

The Death of Mrs. Bovey.

Mrs. Josephine A. Bovey died at her home on Somerset street, at about two o'clock Tuesday A. M. Death occurred from heart failure caused by general debility. She was the relict of the late Eugene Allisson, and was subsequently married on Oct. 9, 1888, to Jules C. Bovey who survives her. Deceased was in the 37th year of her age at the time of her death.

Funeral services will be held at the house on Sunday morning at nine o'clock. The body will then be taken to New York on the 11:03 A. M. train, and additional services held in the same church from which Mrs. Bovey's first husband was buried.

Another Happy Event at Westfield.

In the Presbyterian church at Westfield, afternoon Jan. 31 at 4:30, took place the wedding of Emma Leveridge Pierson, daughter of Mr. S. D. Pierson, and Samuel Arthur Clark, son of ex-Congressman Amos Clark, Jr.

The bride's gown was of ashes-of-rose cashmere and velvet. She wore a most becoming hat to match. There were no bride-maids. The ushers were Messrs Arthur Pierson, Roland Grant and two brothers of the groom. The Rev. N. W. Cadwell, pastor of the church, officiated, and Prof. Baldwin presided at the organ.

It was a quiet and a charming wedding. The altar was banked with flowers, and the church was crowded with the hosts of friends of the bride and groom. After a wedding dinner at the home of the bride's parents, to which were invited only the immediate family connections, Mr. and Mrs. Clark left on the 7:14 P. M., train for New York and the beginning of a wedding tour.

A Very Sudden Death.

Mary McDonough, the ten-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Peter McDonough of No. 153 West Third street, died at her parents' residence about eleven o'clock forenoon January 31, from meningitis. The circumstances surrounding the child's death are particularly distressing to her parents. On Monday she attended St. Mary's Parochial school as usual, and when returning home she slipped and fell on the ice, striking on her head. Tuesday she prevailed upon her parents to allow her to return to school, which request was granted with much reluctance.

During the afternoon the child was taken suddenly ill in school and was removed to her home. A physician treated her, but she continued to grow worse until that morning when she died as above stated. The deceased was the eldest child of Mr. and Mrs. McDonough, and her death is sorely felt by her parents and all who knew her.

CONTINUOUS DRIVES.

THE PRESS has received from the Hon. A. A. Drake, an advance copy of the proposed bill to provide for fine roads and their maintenance throughout the counties of the State. A synopsis of its most particular provisions, is as follows:

It says that it shall be lawful for the boards of county freeholders of any county to acquire, improve, maintain and assume control of any public road in the county. That a map shall be prepared, setting forth what are the said public roads. That it shall be lawful to cause the said roads to be graded and paved twelve feet in the centre with Telford, macadam or other process at the option of the board, to be kept in good condition, to be done by contract, with limitations as to expenditure, due notice to be given thereof in two papers in the county representing different political parties.

That it shall be lawful for the board to cause a special tax or bonds to be issued, the payment on which shall not exceed in any year one-fourth of one per cent. of the assessed value of the taxable property of the county. One-third of the expense of paving to be paid by the cities, towns, townships or boroughs, in or through which said public road shall pass, the remaining two-thirds to be paid by the county at large, not exempting those who have already paid their one-third. It shall be lawful for the county to employ a competent engineer to survey, prepare specifications and supervise the work. After the completion of such roads a sum shall be set apart annually to keep them in good repair. The rest of the bill is made up of legal terms, strictures as to contracting, etc., which do not interfere with the provision set forth above.

—It is now about time the Common Council reduced the membership of the Fire Department to a working force and no more.

A Haystack Burned.

An incendiary set fire to a stack of hay belonging to Mr. Bernard Gray, and located on Hillside avenue, about seven o'clock night 30th ult., and about 3 tons of hay, valued at $70, were consumed. The stack was located in an open field, and was in no immediate danger of setting fire to Mr. Gray's residence, consequently no general alarm was sent out.

For Self-Protection.

In various places in this State storekeepers and retail merchants have formed a protective association. At their monthly meetings every dealer hands in the list of delinquent debtors and the names are published in the county newspapers the first of every month. The grocers and butchers of Somerville have about perfected an organization of the kind.

Plainfield has a well organized protective union, and its constitution and code of by-laws are now in the printers' hands.

Washington's Birthday Eve.

The members of the Park Avenue Social Club, will hold their fourth grand ball at The Crescent, Thursday evening, Feb. 21, (Washington's Birthday Eve.) The Committee of Arrangements are leaving nothing undone to make this the grandest affair of the season, of which Messrs F. R. Haberle, is Chairman, J. C. Blimm, Secretary, J. C. Martin, Treasurer. The music will be furnished by Prof. Sause's full orchestra of New York. Tickets 50 cents, which can be had of the members.

A Great Injustice Done in the Name of the Law.

In a communication elsewhere, Mr. Frederick Baldwin earnestly and sincerely expresses his appreciation of the sympathy and kindnesses extended him during the recent period of great tribulation so unjustly put upon him by the too ready suspicions and accusations of the authorities.

He was denounced by an ex-Chief of Police, proclaimed guilty at a coroner's inquest, and indicted by a grand jury for murder, all of which resulted in a trial and a complete vindication. Yet he has no redress after months of incarceration in the County Jail and the indignity of a public prosecution.

DEATH OF MRS. LATTIMER.

THE PRESS on Saturday told of the critical condition of Mrs. Sarah Lattimer, a widow lady, living on East Front street, this city, and stated at the time that her recovery was impossible. Today it is with extreme sorrow that we record her death, which occurred at her home Sunday at ten minutes past twelve. The deceased was seventy-two years of age, and her illness dated back for a period of about ten days.

The husband of the deceased died a few years ago, leaving an estate moderately estimated at from $500,000 to $600,000, all of which went to the widow, there being no children. About two years ago Mrs. Lattimer became converted and joined with the First Presbyterian church. Previous to and since her husband's death, she lived a retired life—one of seclusion—and was rarely seen on the street, except when going to and returning from church.

Some time since, the congregation of the First Presbyterian church became filled with the idea that a new house of worship was needed, and a fund for that purpose was started. Mrs. Lattimer at once subscribed $10,000, and soon afterward she contributed $10,000 additional. With this amount of available money on hand, the trustees ordered the ancient-looking structure, wherein for many years they had worshipped, torn down, and the erection of the new structure was begun last Summer. The corner stone of the new edifice was laid with appropriate exercises in the Fall, as reported in full in these columns at the time. Meanwhile the congregation met for worship in the chapel, erected in the rear of the church proper a few years ago.

As the work advanced, it became apparent that more funds would be required to complete the new building, and Mrs. Lattimer promptly came forward with contributions, from time to time, aggregating a total of $31,000. A few days before she was stricken down with paralysis, Mrs. Lattimer made her last donation of $6,000 in the name of her neice, Miss Annie Page, toward furnishing the church, making a total contribution of $37,000 in all.

The deceased, during her illness, has often expressed a hope that she might be permitted to live and see the building completed, which will not be before Spring, but the all-abiding decree of the Maker has called her away before granting her request.

During her recent illness, Dr. Jenkins has been a constant visitor, and all that skill and medicine could do to prolong her life, was exerted.

It is estimated by those more or less in the confidence of Mrs. Lattimer, that she has left about $800,000 in government bonds, railroads and bank stocks. She leaves no real estate of any amount. There are a number of relatives mostly residing in Tennessee. Many years ago Mr. and Mrs. Lattimer having no children of their own, adopted a son, but he enlisted when the war broke out and was killed at Bull Run, his first battle.

Residing with Mrs. Lattimer since her husband's death, have been a little niece and nephew, both under seven years of age. One is Annie Page, in whose name was made the gift spoken of above, the other Henry G. Page, named after the late Mr. Lattimer. The parents of these children, Mr. and Mrs. Julian Page, were also living at Mrs. Lattimer's home when she died.

All rumors as to any provisions and bequests in the deceased's will, are, of course, conjecture. It is generally believed, however, that the Rev. Mr. Ketcham, whom Mrs. Lattimer has so deeply esteemed during the past, and especially leaned upon and trusted during the last few months of her life, will be made the executor of the enormous fortune that she leaves behind her.

—The news' attack upon Chief Doane of the Fire Department, recently, doubtless in a measure resulted in his unanimous confirmation last evening.

FRED BALDWIN'S THANKS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—I wish through your columns to express my sincere appreciation of the sympathy and kindly assistance I received from so many good friends during my recent trial and days of worriment.

I feel sure that their help and words of cheer alone enabled me to bear up under the great burden so unjustly placed upon myself and family.

It is my intention to remain a citizen of Westfield as heretofore and prove by my continued endeavor to lead an upright life that I am worthy of the trust and kindness I have been favored with. It has always been my aim to do right by everybody in the past as I shall in the future.

FRED. BALDWIN.

Yet the Police Never Say a Word.

If the pedestrains were as safe from harm on the snow covered sidewalks, as are those from the penalty of the law who permit their property to be so dangerously encumbered, THE PRESS would not say a word.

But probable danger to limb, and possible danger to life, lurks in the ice-bound pathway. After the last—and only—storm of this Winter, the sun came out so hot that the snow and ice could have been swept away with a broom, yet many of the residents permitted it to freeze up again to the great intimidation and annoyance of the pedestrian.

Make an example of some of them, Chief Carey. That's the only way you can enforce your orders; and the people at large will rise up and call you blessed.

—There is said to be a movement on foot to organize a base ball league, including clubs from this city, Elizabeth, Somerville, Flemington and Pennington.

I have not used all of one bottle yet. I suffered from catarrh for twelve years, experiencing the nauseating dropping in the throat peculiar to that disease, and nose bleed almost daily. I tried various remedies without benefit until last April, when I saw Ely's Cream Balm advertised in the Boston Budget. I procured a bottle, and since the first day's use have had no more bleeding—the soreness is entirely gone.—D. G. Davidson, with the Boston Budget, formerly with Boston Journal.

Just time enough since the Holidays to take breath and settle down to business. We have been looking about a bit to see what others engaged in the same line of business as ourselves are saying and doing.

It's funny, to say the least, to read the announcements. Here's one who thinks he has a monopoly of all the good clothing made in the world; no clothing but his is fit to wear. Here's another who thinks his method of business the only proper one; all others are "dead" wrong. A third says his clothing is 30 per cent. cheaper than any other. All sorts of inducements are offered, on paper, to attract buyers.

What are we doing? Well we find that the old method of giving an honest dollar's worth for a dollar, without bragging, to be more popular than ever, judged by the growth of our business during 1888. We say this and know it to be true: Not a real point of advantage to be obtained anywhere will be forfeited by dealing with us. Our bid for your patronage for 1889 is the same which we have made for a quarter of a century.

Honest statements about our goods; garments perfect in fit; minute attention to all details connected with the manufacture; and prices which, comparing the goods, cannot be beaten. It will pay you to watch our announcements during the present year. It will save you not a little uncertainty and a good deal of time and money to patronize us when in need of clothes for self or children.

[illegible]

HON. NATHAN GOFF.

A Gentleman Who Is Prominent in West Virginia Politics.

The prominence of Nathan Goff, of West Virginia, [illegible] for his record for maintaining through a long series of years an unfaltering allegiance to the minority party in his State. For months he has had [illegible] of any one of three high and honorable stations—to be either Governor of the State, United States Senator or a member of General Harrison's Cabinet. He was born in West Virginia in [illegible] and received his education in Georgetown College and the University of the city of New York. He was a student at Georgetown when the war began, and at the age of [illegible] he enlisted as a private in the Third Virginia Infantry.

Before he was twenty-two he had risen to the rank of Major. He was captured in 1864 by General [illegible] cavalry, after having his horse shot under him. There was great danger to all Virginians in capture, as they might be charged with having deserted from the Confederate ranks. [illegible] was thoroughly a Virginian. He was sent to Libby prison, and it was not long before he actually fell under suspicion, was placed under the death watch and in close confinement with a number of other men as hostages for a number of Confederates who had been tried and condemned in the Union lines as spies. Major Goff's friends learned that he was held as hostage for a Confederate named Armsey, also a Major, and they proposed to President Lincoln to make an exchange of the two Majors.

The application being favored finally Major Goff heard of it. There is a letter on file now in the War Department which shows his [illegible] under these trying circumstances. He wrote: "If Major Armsey is guilty he should be executed, regardless of consequences to me. The life of a single soldier, no matter who he might be, should not stand in the way of adherence to a great principle." The exchange was made some time later. Major Goff went to Washington and urged President Lincoln to adopt a more liberal exchange policy so that Union soldiers would suffer less in Southern prisons. It was not long before his advice was followed. Some time afterwards Major Armsey was captured by the Union troops, and was put in jail at Clarksburg, Goff's native town.

When Goff's friends learned of the fact a mob gathered to hang Armsey, and it was only upon the intercession of Major Goff that his life was spared. While he was in Libby prison Goff somehow got hold of law books and began to read. After the war he went to the New York University and in [illegible] to West Virginia to practice law. Andrew Johnson appointed him [illegible] in 1868, and he was reappointed four times by Grant, Hayes and Garfield. In 1870 he ran for Congress but was beaten. In 1876 he ran for Governor, and was again beaten. In 1881 President Hayes called him into his Cabinet as Secretary of the Navy. In 1882 he was elected to Congress, and in 1884 was re-elected. General Goff is a strong speaker, and has been heard in campaigns all over the country.

RT. REV. JOHN S. FOLEY.

The New Roman Catholic Bishop of Detroit, Mich.

Rt. Rev. John F. Foley, D.D., lately raised to the Bishopric of Detroit, Mich., and entering upon the functions of his holy office, is a native of Maryland, having been born in Baltimore, November 5, 1833. He is the son of the late Matthew Foley, a reputable merchant of fifty years standing. When [illegible] years old he entered St. Mary's College, North Paca street, this city. In 1850 he was graduated with a degree of Bachelor of Arts, and entered the Seminary of St. Mary, Almost [illegible] to commence his course for the priesthood.

Three years later, says Leslie's, he received [illegible] from Archbishop Kenrick, and then went to Rome, where he was ordained by Cardinal Patrizzi in the Church of St. John of Lateran, in November, 1856. The young priest decided to devote another year to a more perfect completion of his studies and at the end of that period received the degree of Doctor of Divinity. On his return home Archbishop Kenrick assigned him to duty as the first pastor of St. Bridget's Church, Canton, Md. When he took this mission, the flourishing and populous suburb had but 400 persons in it. Father Foley also did missionary work at Fort Dearborn and Havre de Grace.

[illegible], 1857, he sought a transfer to Ellicott City, Md., in succession to Rev. Augustus Tuvet, elevated to the Episcopacy of St. Augustine, Fla. Six years later he was appointed assistant to Mgr. McColgan, of St. Peter's Church, Baltimore. The Government had a hospital for its wounded soldiers on Stewart Hill, opposite the church of which he was pastor, and the Father Foley visited daily until the close of the civil war. It is estimated that he had under his care during this period fully 5,000 men. The late Archbishop Spalding [illegible] him, after five years' service in St. Peter's, to establish a new congregation in the western section, which the young priest did so promptly and successfully that the Archbishop determined to dedicate the new church to be erected, corner of Fulton and Fayette streets, after his patron, St. Martin, his own name being Martin John Spalding. The corner-stone was laid July 19, 1867.

Though the number of worshipers in the beginning was only 400, Dr. Foley extended the work of the congregation steadily. [illegible] the parishioners. He [illegible] the Sisters of Charity and the Brothers of St. Mary, for whom he erected large school-houses. To his efforts was due the opening of St. Joseph's House of Industry, at the corner of Cary and Lexington streets, Baltimore, which property he secured for the Sisters of Charity that orphan girls might have a comfortable home. The Nuns of the Good Shepherd were struggling in their sphere, having nothing but an unpretentious building. Dr. Foley assisted his brother, when the latter was appointed Bishop of Chicago, to [illegible] the order, and started immediately to give them impetus. A piece of property, bounded by Mount, Hollins, Gilmor and Lombard streets, with those large buildings on it, are evidences of his energy. Besides, he [illegible] a house of the community in Washington, D. C., of which he is the [illegible]. When Cardinal Gibbons introduced the Little Sisters [illegible] in care of Dr. Foley. A hall, in which [illegible] Literary, [illegible] social organizations meet, was also [illegible] three benevolent associations of gentlemen, and as many more of ladies, were [illegible] by him.

For the colored race he has always had a very [illegible] feeling. Among them he was a most earnest worker, seeking out every [illegible], and imparting to them religious instruction. As a result, one hundred colored men, women, and children attend services at St. Martin's, and have their own classes of catechism twice a week. In the beginning Dr. Foley had no helper. The increase of work, however, necessitated the services of an assistant. Rev. [illegible], present pastor of the Immaculate Conception Church, Washington, was first to aid Dr. Foley. Then came Rev. John [illegible], pastor of St. Joseph's, Texas, Md., and Rev. James [illegible], pastor of St. Paul's, Washington, as their respective [illegible] were [illegible], and finally Rev. Thomas J. Broderick.

Bishop Foley is of dignified bearing, with fine physique and face. On terms of close intimacy with Archbishops Spalding and Bayley, and Cardinal Gibbons, he has been complimented by each with the position of [illegible] and intrusted with many important missions.

EDWARD O. WOLCOTT.

Republican United States Senator from Colorado.

After an unusually animated Senatorial party strife, Edward O. Wolcott has received the Republican nomination for United States Senator from Colorado. Mr. Wolcott, whose portrait we give, is a native of Connecticut. He was born at Bedford, being the son of Rev. Samuel Wolcott, who was, forty [illegible] ago, one of the prominent Congregational clergymen of the State. Mr. Wolcott is a lawyer by profession. In 1866 he received the degree of A. M. from Yale College.

Fifteen years ago he removed with his brother, Henry R. Wolcott, to Denver, where he has met with remarkable success. He has been for years the attorney of the Denver & Rio Grande railroad at a salary of fifteen thousand dollars, while the Burlington pays him a like amount to represent that road in a legal capacity in Colorado. He also has other practice, and may be truly said to earn more money than any other lawyer in Colorado. Those who have heard him speak predict that he will take front rank in the Senate as an orator. Last year he delivered a notable address at the New England dinner in New York. He has many friends, and is very favorably known here. Mr. Wolcott is a bachelor and about forty years of age. He is under medium height, of stout build, light complexion, and wears a mustache.—Leslie's.

GOVERNING CRIMINALS.

Stories Told by a Popular Indiana Prison Warden.

Starvation in a Dark Cell Usually the Only Punishment Necessary—Sometimes, However, the Whip Must Be Applied to Obstinate Rebels.

Warden Patten, of the State prison South, at Jeffersonville, sat in the State Treasurer's office at the Indiana Capitol a few days ago talking over prison matters. He is a broad-shouldered old man with a white head, and his slight stoop indicates that his years are beginning to tell on him, but the grip of his hand indicates that he has plenty of physical vitality left, and there is an expression in his resolute gray eyes which gives warning that he would be a bad man to find with under some circumstances.

He was speaking to an Indianapolis Journal reporter of his methods of managing refractory convicts, and some of his experiences as he told them were very interesting. "Of course," he said, "in a prison that contains nearly six hundred inmates there is bound to be considerable variety of character. It is not always the worst criminal that is the worst convict, although the inmates confined for crimes that show a preponderance of the animal nature in a man can be relied upon to furnish the most troublesome prisoners in a penitentiary. Most men, after they get to understand the rules of the prison, settle down to their observance. I do not allow any punishment by guards, and if a convict breaks a rule in such a way as to need their interference, all they are allowed to do is to cage the convict—that is, to lock him in an empty cell—and then report the case to me for action. I always allow the prisoner to tell his own story, and, after full investigation, if I find he is in the wrong, I try to adapt his punishment to the offense in such a way as to keep him from further repetition of it. Ordinary simple punishments answer. If a convict says he will not work, I generally say to him: 'If you won't work you can't eat,' and lock him up by himself. Four ounces of bread a day and nothing but cold water to drink will soon bring most refractory convicts to their senses."

"How long do stubborn convicts hold out under this treatment?" the reporter asked.

"Some of them stick it out for a day and a half, but most of them will within twenty-four hours, and send me word that they are ready to take hold. Where something worse is needed I have a walking track and a bag of sand weighing forty pounds, and when a man is put on the track and made to carry the bag round the required number of laps to make fifteen miles, with a rest of only ten minutes at the end of each three hours' walking, he is generally sore and tired enough to keep him from repeating an offense which merits such punishment."

"How about the cases that require heroic treatment?"

"Well, they grow to some extent out of the fact that there is a classification of criminals in prison as well as out of it, and you can not keep convicts who have been in the same line of crime from finding each other out and sticking together to some extent; the burglars have their pals in the penitentiary as well as out of it, and so on through the whole catalogue. When one of these men gets into trouble his friends rally round him, and there is sometimes danger of a riot when the guard comes to take out the original offender. Still, even in these cases, we usually get along without having to resort to extreme measures. I remember but one case where it looked as though we would have to go the limit, which in this case means the killing of the offender, and I will tell you about that so you may see what means are necessary to preserve authority, without which we could do nothing. It was the case of a man convicted of brutal murder, and when he came to us it was apparent that we were going to have trouble with him. Most convicts have some good [illegible] left in them, of which we can take hold in our management of them. The man seemed to be simply an ungovernable animal. We put him to work in the foundry, and the first week he was there he quarreled with the convict who worked next to him and nearly killed him with a poker. I put him in a dungeon that was absolutely without a ray of light, and kept him there as long as the physician thought he could stay and live. When he came out he blinked like an owl from his long confinement in darkness, but was still unsubdued, and when he went back to work he struck a second convict with a ladle full of hot iron, injuring the man so badly that his life was for some time despaired of. Then the offender ran out of the shop, dodged the guards, and when the case was reported to me he had got into the supper room where most of the convicts had gone, and was seated in the midst of a hard crowd of his own kidney. It looked squally, but it was evident that the time had come to see who was master. I took a tough hickory cane in one hand, went to where he was sitting, touched him on the shoulder and told him to come with me. He raised up and drew off to strike me, but I used the cane vigorously on his head and face, backed him down the aisle into the anteroom and locked him up. As I backed him out a second convict threw a tin-cup at me, and others stood up and seemed inclined to interfere, but I told them to sit down, and there was no further disturbance. When I had my first man caged I went back to the man who had thrown the cup, knocked him down twice with the cane, and gave him a liberal dose of it after he was down. There was no further demonstration of violence, although it had been the boast of many convicts that no warden could take a man out of that room. Now they say: 'When the old man wants you you've got to go.' As to the first offender, I had him stripped, took a whalebone buggy-whip and gave him forty or fifty as smart lashes as could be laid on without breaking the skin. Every blow raised a welt, and I was prepared to give him as many more as he had got when he gave up and said he had enough. Since that time I have had no trouble with him."

"Do you believe in corporal punishment as the best means of enforcing discipline?"

"I do in some cases. There are some offenders whose devilish impulses can not be checked in any other way. I think there is something in the humiliation as well as in the pain inflicted that does the work needed. That is the experience of Dr. Brockway, of the Elmira reformatory, who I think knows more than any of us concerning the treatment of criminals, and I am a believer in his doctrines."

New Variety of Cotton.

Four years ago, walking through his cotton field, Colonel C. A. Alexander, of Wilkes County, Ga., noticed a stalk unlike the others, and unlike any he had ever seen. He saved the seed, and thinks he has developed a new variety of cotton, less liable to rot and mildew than the common plant, and he hopes exempt from the attack of the dreaded caterpillar. The leaf, instead of being solid as in the common plant, is divided nearly to the base, thus letting through the air and sunlight.

Married the Wrong Girl.

A Pittsburgh man is said to have really married a girl under the impression that he was marrying her sister. His courtship of the other girl was brief, and the sisters so closely resembled each other that he proposed and was accepted before he discovered his mistake. He has never confessed that he made this odd error, but the girl who lost a good husband because of it insists to this day that she ought to be in her sister's shoes.

The islands of Samoa, thirteen in number, in the South Pacific—recently acquired by the Germans—are now a center of interest on account of the dismemberment of Americans there and the general disposition to ignore American rights.

FRANK HATTON.

A Prominent Politician and Newspaper Man Who Has Once More Taken Up His Residence in Washington.

The purchase of the Washington Post by ex-Postmaster-General Hatton and Beriah Wilkins promises for the capital at last something like a strong, bright, popular newspaper. Hatton, since his retirement from President Arthur's Cabinet, has engaged in a number of newspaper enterprises, all of which have become great successes not long after he let go of them. He has now settled in Washington to block out for himself a career as a journalist of National proportions. Hatton is a constitutional partisan, incisive and deadly as a carving-knife. There is not a fiber in him that is at all uncertain politically.

A few days before the expiration of Mr. Arthur's term a Virginia postmaster went into his office and proposed to Hatton to resign and have a Democratic friend of his appointed who would have the office in his store, and let him run it. Frank said:

"You are a Republican?"

"Yes."

"You propose to continue to support the party?"

"Yes."

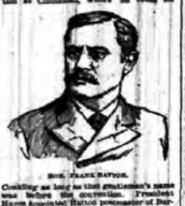
"You opposed Cleveland?"

"Yes."

"Well, you have no right to get office under an administration whose election you opposed, and I would not be a party to the mean trick by which you hope to get it. Stand up like a man and be kicked out with the rest of us!"

This illustrates Mr. Hatton's Republicanism. He is a native of Cadiz, O., forty-four years old. When the war broke out he enlisted, and at nineteen was a Lieutenant. Before he was twenty-one his father moved to Iowa, and there young Hatton engaged in newspaper work.

In 1874 he went to Burlington and bought a half interest in the Hawkeye, which became a great success. In 1876 he was a delegate to the National Republican convention at Cincinnati, where he voted for



HON. FRANK HATTON.

Conkling as long as that gentleman's name was before the convention. President Hayes appointed Hatton postmaster of Burlington in spite of the Hawkeye's criticism of Hayes' Southern policy. He was chairman of the Iowa State Committee through one or two campaigns, and was appointed First-Assistant-Postmaster-General on the indorsement of almost the entire West. When Postmaster-General Howe died he was promoted into the Cabinet.

HOW DO YOU WEAR YOUR HAT?

Judging of Human Character by the Angle of the Headwear.

"I have learned to judge of a man's character by the way and the angle at which he wears his hat," said a Madison street hatter, who is quite noted as an amateur photographer and the possessor of an observing, philosophic mind, to a Chicago News reporter. "Here are some photos which I took in the street during the last few days, by means of my vest-pocket camera," continued the hatter, at the same time exhibiting nine finely developed though minute vignettes.

"No. 1 is a man of strong character, but careless as to details and the opinions of others. The angle at which he wears his hat proves that conclusively. The manner in which No. 2 wears his hat indicates a disposition inclined to arrogance, dissipation, but withal a certain amount of independence and determination which may insure a successful career. I would not like to cross the purpose of a man who wears his hat in that way. No. 3 I would not trust out of my sight. I have known five trusted employes in high positions who embezzled and fled to Canada. They all wore their hats precisely as this one does. Besides, he wears his coat collar turned up, even in this mild weather, which is a sure indication of a humbler instinct; no gentleman ever does it except in extremely cold weather. As to the next one, No. 4, I scarcely like to give a positive opinion. He wears his hat in almost too precise a manner. The chances are that he is a hard, cold, calculating man, a man who is just, but infrangible; in fact, a good man to avoid if you wish to get the best of a bargain.

"No. 5 is a careless man, perhaps capable, but has too little regard for his personal appearance. He invariably buys a hat two sizes too large for his head, and jams it over his ears. A combination of this one and No. 1 produces such a character as Luther Laflin Mills. No. 6 is a queer case, with hardly enough character to be worth considering. He is the extreme of No. 5, and wears a hat too small, which is an abomination. As to No. 7, probably a wetting clerk on the board. I can't say much either. It is to be hoped that he will grow out of himself. For No. 8 I have both pity and consideration. He is a sort of subdued Mark Tapley. His hat is worn on the side of his head to produce an air of jauntiness that he scarcely feels, and is almost commendable. Unlike No. 3, his coat collar is turned up for an obvious reason. He is the very numerous young man out of a job, and, figuratively speaking, his hat whistles to keep up his courage. No. 9 is an odd case. I happen to know him. He is a talented writer, who wears a skull hat and a bald spot on the back of his head. Of the latter he is very proud, and will never wear a hat that conceals it, even in the street."

If we could count on all our wars being as bloodless as that with Hayti, we could go in and lick the world.

COMMISSIONER OBERLY.

An Official Who Is Likely to Retain His Place Under Harrison.

General Harrison's well-known civil-service views give hope to a good many prominent Democrats that they are to remain in office. Whether this will prove true or not nobody can tell at this time from anything that has been said or done. One of the best administrative officers President Cleveland has called into public service, Indian Commissioner Oberly, is said to be sure of retention. He does not himself entertain any opinion one way or the other about the matter, being quite as willing to return to private life as to remain where he is. But his performance of duty in the various positions to which he has been appointed has been so thorough and just that, without his seeking it, leading men interested in Indian affairs are already of one mind in regard to his future after March 4. Commissioner Oberly was born in Cincinnati in 1838. While a boy, after the removal of the family to Wooster, O., he went into a printing office and learned the trade from beginning to end, rising to be president of the National Printers' Union. When the war broke out he lived at Memphis, Tenn., where he and a partner were running a Union paper.

COMMISSIONER OBERLY.

He was driven out of the city in 1861 and moved to Illinois. When President Cleveland was elected Oberly was a reporter for the Chicago Times. He had been chairman of the Democratic State Committee of Illinois, and so had some prominence in his party. The Times sent him to Albany after Governor Cleveland's election to furnish the paper with speculations as to the make-up of the Cabinet. "Bishop" Oberly, as his newspaper friends like to call him on account of his resemblance to a fine, old, well-fed Methodist Bishop, succeeded very well with the President-elect, and was particularly favored in the way of news. When Cleveland's Administration came in Oberly was one of the first men to be remembered. He was first appointed Inspector of Indian Schools. He was then made a member of the Civil-Service Commission, and during the past fall, on the retirement of General Atkins, was appointed Indian Commissioner. He abounds in good stories, is always interesting, and if Illinois should ever become Democratic in its Legislature, he would be one of the first men thought of for the United States Senate. J. A. WHO KNOWS HIM?

The Landlady's Husband—A Useful Fellow Who Knows His Place and Keeps It.

The average boarder thinks the average landlady is a widow, and this impression has spread until it may be said to permeate the community. The boarder, on the other hand, knows that the landlady has a husband, although the discovery was made by occult means. No boarder ever was, or ever will be, introduced to the landlady's husband.

The new boarder at breakfast finds a large woman at the head of the table, which he knows to be the landlady, and the chances are that he fails to notice the little husband at the foot. Yet the landlady's husband is a remarkable man in his way.

No other man possesses the faculty of so completely blotting himself out of existence. No one knows what he does for a living, and no boarder has ever met him outside of the dining-room. He must live somewhere, but where he keeps himself between meals and where he sleeps at night are mysteries known only to the landlady.

The landlady's husband is the best listener in the United States. He has no politics nor religion, and he lends his indorsement to a flying-machine or the Revised version with equal placidity. The inventive boarder, the poet, the sales-gentleman and the itinerant corn doctor ought to like the landlady's husband better than they do. They will never meet another friend like him.

The landlady's husband is an accommodating eater and never betrays an especial liking for any viand. He has been known to make a hearty supper on dried beef and bread, and when he starts on its round the dish of pickled salmon and receives it again empty he betrays none of the emotion that must rack his frame.

What more heroic than the persistence with which he presses the favorite boarder to take the last sardine or bit of cheese when he wants it himself? Who will testify to the devotion of the man who never eats berries until they are a drug on the market and uses milk in his coffee if the cream is short?

His self-abnegation is wonderful and receives no reward. No one defers to him, the waitresses take orders only from the landlady and the new boarder walks on him after the first day. There is no man except the landlady's husband who can see his wife hold the purse without a qualm for receive from her his car fare and tobacco money with a matter-of-fact air.

It has never been discovered why the landlady has a husband or what becomes of him after she dies. It is certain that he does not run the boarding-house, and unless he is buried in the same grave it must be that he hunts up a widow and becomes another landlady's husband.—J. H. Smith, in N. Y. It Makes You Hungry

"I have used Paine's Celery Compound and it has had a salutary effect. It invigorated the system and I feel like a new man. It improves the appetite and facilitates digestion." J. T. COPELAND, Primus, S. C.

Spring medicine means more now-a-days than it did ten years ago. The winter of 1888-89 has left the nerves all fagged out. The nerves must be strengthened, the blood purified, liver and bowels regulated. Paine's Celery Compound—the Spring medicine of to-day—does all this, as nothing else can. Prescribed by Physicians, Recommended by Druggists, Endorsed by Ministers, Guaranteed by the Manufacturers to be

The Best
Spring Medicine.

"In the spring of 1887 I was all run down. I would get up in the morning with so tired a feeling, and was so weak that I could hardly get around. I bought a bottle of Paine's Celery Compound, and before I had taken it a week I felt very much better. I can cheerfully recommend it to all who need a building up and strengthening medicine." Mrs. B. A. Dow, Burlington, Vt.

Paine's
Celery Compound

is a unique tonic and appetizer. Pleasant to the taste, quick in its action, and without any injurious effect, it gives that fagged health which makes everything taste good. It cures dyspepsia and kindred disorders. Physicians prescribe it. $1.00. Six for $5.00. Druggists.

IN CHANCERY OF NEW JERSEY.

To Stevens S. Rowland:

By virtue of an order of the Court of Chancery of New Jersey made on the day of the date hereof in a cause wherein William Bartle is complainant and you and others are defendants, you are required to appear, plead, answer or demur to the bill of said complainant on or before the Ninth day of March next, or the said bill will be taken as confessed against you.

The said bill is filed for partition of certain lands in the village of Scotch Plains, in the Township of Fanwood, in the county of Union and State of New Jersey, of which Sarah Bartle died seized, and you are made defendant because you have recovered and now hold a judgment against Isaac Bartle, one of the tenants in common therein.

ROMANCE IN REAL LIFE

The Wonderful Experiences of an American Girl.

Pretty Stella Vilmer's Checkered Career—Carried by Her Father All Around the World—How She Met the Man She Loves—A Rare Trousseau.

Stella Vilmer—her friends will not know her under this title—is looking her first on Western civilization, writes a Brooklyn correspondent to the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. Twenty-two or twenty-three years ago a fiery Southerner had high words with his brother over some wretched little question involving a fox brush. Both young men were hot-headed; the result was a breach. Stella's father left the rambling old Virginia household and took his bride, six months married, to the Pacific coast. They wandered up and down, in the plenitude of youth and high spirits from Peru to Alaska. Stella was born in the Sandwich Islands, where the adventurous couple made their first essay at housekeeping in the most delightful of climates, provisioned with bread and bananas. As a baby girl of three Stella pattered about in little white sandals tied upon her feet by silk cords, after the fashion of the small Japanese Yum Yums who were her playmates. At seven she had an Indian aya for a nurse, and at ten she was the delight of a broken down Rajah who yet managed to keep some state in spite of British encroachments in the hill countries of India, and who had retained her father as one of his high officials. At eleven her mother died, and her father, thirsting for fresh adventures, took her by the hand and started, like Lord Lovel, to wander a year and a day, strange countries for to see. They lived for months in Persia and other months in Siberia, and yet others in the heart of the Caucasus. They penetrated the Himalayas and forded strange streams on the backs of elephants on a trip to the Vale of Cashmere. There are not many women living who have seen as much of this globe as this olive-skinned girl of eighteen. Last spring the father, her companion in so many trips through strange and romantic lands, died in India, and she made the voyage to England in the company of the family of a Scotch officer, whose son, in spite of all her journeyings, she had found time to promise to marry. Some of her mother's relatives are still living in North Carolina, and it is under their roof-tree that the wedding will be celebrated between now and spring.

This much-traveled American girl is a unique little figure. She stands just five feet high, and is as perfectly proportioned as one of the figures beaten out by the gold-workers in her own India. Her hair and complexion are very dark, and her eyes have long curly lashes which somehow lend a suggestion of pathos to the pure oval face. Especially noticeable are the nostrils, which are delicate and finely chiseled, but make one think instantly of an out-of-door creature, a wood nymph or dryad, unused to a roof overhead, and demanding deep draughts of air to vivify the sensitive organism. She is a marvel of endurance and of athletic development, a fearless rider and a tireless walker, a good shot and a proficient in camp cookery. Her father taught her to draw, and her sketch book is full of strangely costumed Asiatic figures and strangely picturesque mid-Asian scenery. These figures and this scenery represent the only life she is used to, American cities impressing her with as much novelty as the jungle would an average American damsel. In one thing she is truly feminine. She delights in dress, and her combination of out-door daring and indoor costuming is worthy of one of Amelie Rives' brown storm, slithering gale heroines. This little girl plunges into gowns the more heartily, perhaps, because she had not time for many heretofore.

Her trousseau mixes India and Paris. It brings a smile to see the women rave over the underclothing. All the materials for the dainty garments were brought from the East, but made up by French milliners from her own designs, partly original, partly modifications of Parisian and Indian robings. The delicate chiffons include nothing which corresponds to the chemise. The garment which is worn next the skin is made up in sets of half a dozen, some sets of Indian linen, fine as wrought cobwebs, white as carded wool; other sets of a beautiful Japanese silk crepe, hand-woven on the looms of native women; yet others of a thin Indian foulard. Each garment is long enough to reach from the neck to the knee. For the upper part of the body it supplies a soft swathing without bulk, fastened by gold or ivory clasps on the shoulders, confined by a ribbon girdle at the waist. Below the waist it turns into Turkish trousers, fastened at the knees by more clasps of gold or ivory, which serve also as garters for the silk stockings. This novel undergown is made in white, and in delicate rose blue, maize, pale green, suede, tan and black. The corsets which go with these bits of luxury differ widely from the hand of steel in gloves of satin which usually clasps the Western bride. Stella's stays are flexible supports of yielding leather, the skin of a Himalayan kid, dressed soft and rich as velvet, and colored in all the hues of the silken underwear. They do not constrain the figure in the least, and are probably the first comfortable corsets known to Western femininity. No petticoats are worn, but a second pair of Turkish trousers, made of India silk and lavishly embroidered, are gathered into ribbon bands below the knees. Next these come the gowns, cut mostly after the Empire fashion, which suits well the filmy gauzes, crepes and soft silks brought by this discriminating young woman from Eastern bazaars, and does not jar with the carved ivories, ornaments of beaten gold and curious gems which fill her jewel cases. That which has been set aside for the wedding robe is a lovely cream-white India cloth, embroidered in gold and made up with simple, but perfect curves and folds, in charming Grecian fashion. With all this refinement of dainty sensuousness, this newly-caged bird of many flights has not forgotten altogether her wild-woods ways. There is no part of her new wardrobe in which she takes greater delight than in a couple of riding habits with loose, full trousers of black cloth to ankle, long black redingote and red scarf about the waist, an adaptation of Turkish costume, in which to ride in the Carolina woods, as she rode in the hill country, astride.

Pigs Killed by a Turtle.

A remarkable story is told by a Beatrice (Neb.) paper of the killing of thirty pigs by a turtle. F. M. Pethoud, who resides some four miles north of Beatrice, on Indian creek, missed his young pigs, one or two going each day. Thorough search threw no light upon their mysterious disappearance until one day the hired hand saw the hogs considerably disturbed by something, and hearing a young pig squeal he rushed down to the edge of the creek and there saw a large turtle with a young pig in its mouth. The turtle had killed the pig and was eating it. The man killed the turtle and it measured nearly two feet across the back and had a head as large as his two hands.

A ROMANCER'S ROMANCE.

How Stevenson Won Another Man's Wife Away from Him.

A San Francisco dispatch to the New York World gives a bit of Novelist Robert Louis Stevenson's personal history: Stephenson came here about eight years ago to get married. His bride he had met in France when she was the wife of a Californian. When Stevenson was taking that trip that bore fruit in his book, "An Inland Voyage," he met in Paris Mrs. Samuel Osborne, of San Francisco. She came of Dutch parentage, her maiden name being Van Degrift, but she had married young Sam Osborne, who was private secretary to Senator Stanford and somewhat of a protege of the railroad millionaire. She was a brilliant brunette, with the vivid coloring and many of the tastes of a gypsy. Her husband had gone with her on a vacation, but he had been recalled on business, and she was then staying with friends in the French capital. She and Stevenson fell in love at first sight. Their literary and personal tastes ran in the same channels, and the author spent much time in her company.

When she left her home it was understood that she was to get a divorce from her husband by means of the easy processes of the California courts, and when this was accomplished Stevenson would come out to the Golden State and make her his wife. Every thing was carried out according to the programme. When Sam Osborne was told of the desire of his wife he made no objection, but, like a model American husband, gave his wife all the aid in his power. The result was that she obtained her freedom. Then the tidings were sent to the distant lover, and he prepared to come "out into the West" for his inamorata.

Original in every thing, Stevenson determined to take this trip in novel fashion, so he engaged passage in the steerage of one of the great ocean lines with the design of writing up his experiences. He secured plenty of material, for the voyage was rough, and he had a sorry time among the emigrants, who were herded together like sheep. This experience, however, didn't cure him, and he took passage in an emigrant car and crossed the plains in that fashion. This was worse than the steerage trip, as the people were packed closer, and the journey, owing to the many delays and slow time, consumed two weeks.

When Stevenson reached San Francisco he was a sorry object. He had a hacking cough, spat blood and had contracted a troublesome skin disease from herding with unclean emigrants. Foul air and poor food had reduced his strength, and he was a semi-invalid. He was received, however, with open arms. As soon as he was cleaned up by a series of sulphur baths, and a trifle recovered from the fatigue of the long journey, the wedding was held. The remarkable feature of it was that Sam Osborne was present and gave away the bride, his ex-wife, with the heartiness of manner that might have been expected in the most disinterested manner, while he capped the climax of his performances by introducing to the bride and groom a handsome and stylishly-dressed young woman as his affianced wife.

The marriage feast was very gay, and soon after it was over Stevenson went with his bride to a deserted mining camp on Howell Mountain, in Napa County, to recuperate his health. * * * It is a curious fact that Osborne, to whose good nature Stevenson was indebted for his wife, disappeared shortly after his second marriage. He dropped out of his old life and his old haunts here between two days, and no one ever learned any trace of him.

TAUGHT BY A CHILD.

A Story of To-Day Which Reminds One of the Greek Painter and the Cobbler.

Tom Nicholl, the artist for the Kellogg Newspaper Company, tells the following story on himself, and Ed. R. Pritchard neatly repeats it in the Arkansaw Traveler. It illustrates the well-known fact that the best of us can learn something from fools and children. The story is as follows: On one occasion he had made a large crayon picture of a little child seated in a cart, to which was hitched a large Newfoundland dog. It was a fine piece of work and for some two weeks hung in a public show window where it attracted much attention, and many were the compliments showered upon the artist for his skill.

Some time after the picture had been taken down, Mr. Nicholl was seated in his studio when there came a timid rap at the door. He called out to the caller to come in, and there entered a little street urchin, who had often given the artist a shine and who on the strength of such acquaintance used frequently to pay him a visit.

"Well, Todd," said Nicholl, "what can I do for you to-day?"

The little Arab hesitated a moment, and then, in a tone that plainly indicated the intensity of his desire, he said:

"Well, I thought I'd like ter see the picter you made o' that boy an' the dog in a wagon."

"All right," replied the artist, and crossing the room to where the picture stood, faced to the wall, he picked it up and placed it on an easel.

The boy stood and looked at it, with evident delight and pleasure depicted on his face. Suddenly, however, he turned, and with considerable embarrassment, as though he knew he was presuming, he said: "Mr. Nicholl, it's er dandy, but you've made er mistake in it."

"What!" ejaculated the artist. "A mistake, where?"

"Why," said the boy, a little triumphantly, "you've forgot to put in any 'bolster' on the front axle-tree."

Nicholl stepped forward, looked at the picture a moment, and sure enough the boy was right. The front end of the wagon bed was resting on nothing. He quickly seized a crayon, put in the missing piece, by merely making a deep shadow where he had left a high light, and the defect was remedied.

The urchin watched the process of correction, and then, after a critical and satisfied look at the picture, and remarking: "That's bully," he slung his kit over his shoulder and went out. "The strangest thing, though," said Mr. Nicholl, in telling the story, "is how that picture should have hung on exhibition for two weeks, where it was criticised by hundreds, and none of whom saw the blunder I had made, and that bootblack should discover it the minute he saw it. The point was, the boy was posted on all the points about a dog and a wagon. It taught me a lesson I have never forgotten—that almost any person can give you suggestions about something that are worth having."

A Gorgeous Russian Palace.

Tsarkoe Seloe, the Czar's palace near St. Petersburg, stands in grounds eighteen miles in circumference. In the palace there is a room known as the lapis-lazuli room, the floor of which is ebony inlaid with mother-of-pearl. There is also an amber room, the walls of which are of the finest amber picked out in a multitude of exquisite designs. The walls of the palace throughout are hung with the rarest tapestry and silk curtains. The banqueting hall is the chief attraction of the palace. Its walls are covered with gold, and its ceiling is dazzling with the same precious metal.

UNCLE SAM'S CASH.

Report of James P. Kimball, Director of the Mint.

The Director Discourses on the Production and Coinage of Gold and Silver in the United States, and Incidentally Tells of Production and Coinage in the Rest of the World.

To the average person, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, the report of the Director of the Mint is not an enticing document. The long and complicated tables of figures which it contains are repellant to most people, while the style in which it is printed and its mechanical make-up generally are far from being attractive. On books of this class Uncle Sam does not "spread" himself, in an esthetic sense.

FORMER METHOD OF CRUSHING GOLD AND SILVER ORE.

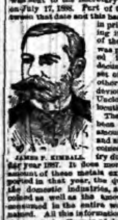
The individual who imagines, however, that there is no interesting matter in the deliverance of Mint Director James P. Kimball is mistaken. The thing spoken about has had a more or less enthralling influence on the human mind since the early days in the history of the race when man first discovered that his desires outran his possessions. Virgil sung of the arms and hero of Troy. Kimball attunes his lyre to the genesis and amount of the country's cash.

The Mint Director's report tells the amount of the product of gold and silver in the United States in the calendar year 1887, and of the coinage of these metals in that period. The time spoken of, it is true, ended about twelve and a half months ago, while the book has just left the Government Printing-office. Mr. Kimball, though, is not responsible for the delay. His report was sent to the Secretary of the Treasury on July 17, 1888. Part of the interval between that date and this has been consumed in printing and binding it. A large part of the time, though, was probably expended in passing the documents from one set of officials to another through the devious avenues of Uncle Sam's circumlocution office.



JAMES P. KIMBALL.

The report, as has been said, gives the amount of the gold and silver mined and coined in the country during the calendar year 1887. It does more. It tells the amount of these metals exported and imported in that year, the quantity used in the domestic industries, and the amount coined as well as the amount industrially consumed in the entire world in the year named. All this information is given with the greatest affluence of detail. In fact, it is this embarrassing variety of detail which would overwhelm, confound and depress the general reader, if he should take up the book. Taking it as a whole, though, the document is the most clear, comprehensive and satisfactory of its class which can be found in any language. The mines of the United States produced $33,000,000 worth of gold and $53,357,000 worth of silver in 1887. Silver in this estimate is given its coining value. The same amount of silver, if sold as merchandise, would bring only about $40,400,000. Most persons are aware that silver coins are not intrinsically worth their face in gold. The value of the silver bullion in a standard dollar ranges from about seventy-two cents to seventy-five cents.

MODERN METHOD OF CRUSHING THE ORE.

MACHINE FOR ROLLING GOLD AND SILVER.

Now let us see how this product compares with that of recent preceding years. This table gives the information:

	Gold.	Silver.
1880	$36,000,000	$39,200,000
1881	34,700,000	43,000,000
1882	32,500,000	46,800,000
1883	30,000,000	46,200,000
1884	30,800,000	48,800,000
1885	31,800,000	51,600,000
1886	35,000,000	51,000,000
1887	33,000,000	53,357,000

The years here given are calendar years, and the value of the silver product is the coinage value.

It will be of interest to learn what share the productive States and Territories had in the general output of the precious metal during 1887. This information can be presented thus:

	Gold.	Silver.	Totals.
Alaska	$675,000	$500	$675,500
Arizona	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
California	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Colorado	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Dakota	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Georgia	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]

Alabama, Tennessee, Virginia, Vermont and Wyoming	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Totals	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]

The reader will observe that the totals in the table do not "tally" with the figures previously given of the production of the money metals in 1887. The table puts the output of gold at an amount $136,000 greater than the sum given in the other estimates, while there is an advance of about $600,000 in the value of silver. The discrepancy, which is so trifling as to be unimportant, is due to the fact that round figures are for the most part employed in the table.

Glance at the table again. It tells an interesting story. For years California practically speaking, produced nearly all the precious metals obtained in this country, and for other and subsequent years it held the lead in this particular. In the mind of the average person it is ahead yet. This is where the average person is mistaken. California produces more gold still than any other State or than any Territory, but in the aggregate output of the money metals she has fallen to third place. Montana leads in the grand total, with Colorado a close second and California a bad third. In the gold item alone Montana ranks second to California, and is steadily increasing its product, while California is falling back in this respect.

The tables already given here show that the production of gold and silver in the United States in the past few years has ranged from $80,000,000 to $87,000,000 annually, the aggregate output slowly but steadily increasing.

The United States is not the only country which produces the money metals, although it leads in both gold and silver. The world's yield, including that of the United States, stood thus in the years named, the silver product being put at its coinage and not at its commercial value:

	Gold.	Silver.
1883	[illegible]	[illegible]
1884	[illegible]	[illegible]
1885	[illegible]	[illegible]
1886	[illegible]	[illegible]

The year 1886 is the latest year for which data are had of the world's yield of gold and silver.

One-third of the world's gold and nearly half of the world's silver is produced in the United States. In gold production Australia stands second, Russia third, China fourth, Venezuela fifth and Colombia sixth. Australia's output has averaged about $27,000,000 in recent years, as compared with an average of about $33,000,000 for the United States. The annual average of Russia has been $23,000,000, of China $8,000,000, of Venezuela $4,300,000, and of Colombia $4,000,000. Chinese product is nearly all obtained in the Amoor district.

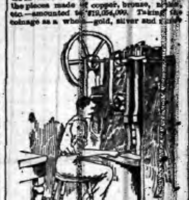
Mexico stands second in yield of silver, Bolivia third, Chili fourth, Germany fifth, Peru sixth and Spain seventh. The average production of Mexico for the past four or five years has been about $32,000,000 annually, with a tendency upward. In the United States the yearly average has been about $50,000,000 in the four years, with a steadily increasing yield. The yearly averages of the other countries named have been: Bolivia, $10,000,000; Chili, $8,000,000; Germany, $8,000,000; Peru, $3,000,000, and Spain, $3,000,000.

The United States mints were busy during 1887, but their output, in the aggregate, did not equal that of the preceding year. The story is told in this table:

	1886.	1887.
Gold	[illegible]	[illegible]
Silver dollars	[illegible]	[illegible]
Subsidiary silver	[illegible]	[illegible]
Minor	[illegible]	[illegible]
Total	[illegible]	[illegible]

In addition to the coinage executed at the mints in 1887 there were manufactured bars of gold and silver principally for exportation of the value of $[illegible]. Most of this—$[illegible]—was gold, with $[illegible] silver.

If an investigation is continued into the amount of the coinage of the country since the first mint was organized, in 1792, the inquiry leads into the dizzy heights of mathematics. Ten figures are required to represent the total coinage in dollars of gold, and nine figures are needed to tell that of silver. The mints of the United States, up to the close of the calendar year 1887, turned out $1,457,616,414 in gold coin and $[illegible] in silver. The minor coinage—that of the pieces made of copper, bronze, nickel, etc.—amounted to $[illegible]. Taking the coinage as a whole—gold, silver and minor



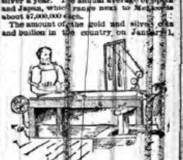
THE CUTTING PRESS.

—it reached at the close of 1887 the stupendous total of $1,[illegible],469,551.

In aggregate coinage of gold Australia comes near the United States. Russia stands third with an annual coinage ranging from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000, the latter being the amount in 1887. Germany's mints turned out over $28,000,000 of gold in 1887, but that of 1886 was only a little over $[illegible]000,000, while the coinage in 1885 was less than $2,000,000. Great Britain's annual average recently has been about $[illegible]300.

When it comes to silver coinage the United States takes second place. India coined $44,000,000 worth of silver in 1887, $27,[illegible] in 1886 and $48,000,000 in 1885. The United States average in these years was about $32,000,000. Mexico ranks third in this particular, with a coinage of about $26,000,000 silver a year. The annual average of Spain and Japan, which range next to Mexico, is about $7,000,000 each.

The amount of the gold and silver coin and bullion in the country on January 1,



THE DRAWING BENCH.

1888, is put at $1,075,425,527. Of this sum $704,983,352 was gold and $370,442,175 silver. This includes the whole amount in the United States—in the Treasury, the banks, mints and assay offices, and in the hands of the people—at that time.

In 1887, as shown by the figures before given, the coinage of the United States was $69,379,150. Of this nearly $34,000,000 was gold and a little over $35,000,000 silver. The world's coinage, including that of the United States, in the year was $124,[illegible] of gold and $160,[illegible] of silver. This was a much higher total than in the preceding years. The world's average coinage for the past half dozen years has been $[illegible] of gold and $[illegible] of silver, annually. Broadly speaking, the United States coined one-fifth of the world's coinage of gold and considerably over one-fourth of the world's coinage of silver.

Every body knows that a large part of the gold and silver produced each year is used in the industries, but every body does not know how great this proportion is. The Director of the Mint makes inquiries into this matter every year. He does this by means of letters to manufacturers, private refiners and jewelers. The result of his investigation convinces him that at least $[illegible] gold and $5,280,000 silver were consumed in the decorative art and other industries in the United States in 1887.

In the world as a whole, in 1886, which is the latest year for which figures have been obtained except for the United States, the value of the gold used in the industries is estimated at $45,917,884, and of silver at $21,118,782.

The subject of the use of the money metals in the industries has a deeper and more abiding interest than will appear to the casual reader. Nearly half as much gold as was employed in the coinage of the world in 1886 was used in the industries.

Gold production, on the whole, is stationary. Notwithstanding the increase in 1887 over 1886, the tendency in recent years has not been upward. Production, therefore, has perhaps reached its highest limit. While the use of the metal for decoration is rapidly increasing with the growth of the world in wealth and luxurious habits this increase will be kept up. The supply will not keep pace, while the demand for it for other purposes than the coinage must continue to grow in a high ratio. Under these conditions, will not a time soon come when the amount available for coinage will be too small to meet the world's wants as a basis for the circulating medium? This is a question which economists and statesmen must soon begin to grapple.

A few words will now be given about the illustrations. In most cases the pictures explain themselves with tolerable clearness. The old method of crushing the gold and silver ore is still in use in Mexico and some of the South American countries. The rolling, drawing, cutting, milling and coining processes represented in the pictures take place in the mint. The machines doing this work are driven by steam. Between the rollers the ingots of gold and silver are run. This presses the metal into thin strips, of the proper thickness for the coin. The strips are then drawn, like wire, through a steel guage in the drawing bench, after which they are cut into the required size by the cutting press. Subsequently, the planchets or pieces are weighed, and then run through the milling machine, which forms a rim around the edges of the pieces. After being subjected to the annealing and cleaning process, the planchets are put through the coining press, at the close of which operation they are ready to perform their functions in the world as a measure of price and medium of exchange.

THE CAUSE OF DISEASE.

A Physician of Some Note Discusses the Subject.

Man the Victim of His Own Stomach—What a Writer on Alimentation Says About the Hot-Water Cure—Health the Result of Good Digestion.

Who reads a medical book unless he is a student of medicine? In fact, who can read a medical book unless he be steeped in the technicalities of the profession? And if he possessed a key to high-sounding phrases, would not the average reader instantly fancy himself the victim of the symptoms dilated upon? The [illegible] imagination runs riot when contemplating its own human carcass. But as wonders never cease, we have recently chanced upon a book on hygiene so clear, so intelligent, so founded on common sense as to be placed in the hands of every thinking man and woman. This rara avis is entitled "The Relation of Alimentation and Disease." The author, Dr. J. H. Salisbury, is best known as having invented hot water as a beverage and medicine. Dr. Salisbury's theory on this subject, by the way, finds a proper place in this book, and is worth transcribing. Dr. Salisbury claims that if human beings will keep their stomachs in good condition they can avoid all ills excepting those brought on by accidents. The great saving grace from his point of view and from that of his disciples, who are multiplying in all parts of this country and in England, is this same inexpensive hot water. Americans are the most dyspeptic people on the face of the earth, a lamentable fact not due to climate, but to hot breads and griddle-cakes, pies, candies and the insane use of ice water while eating. The poor stomach is unequal to the task put upon it, and leaves much of the food undigested. The food ferments, and from fermentations arise all the horrors of dyspepsia. Such digestive organs Dr. Salisbury likens to an old vinegar barrel, and, like this barrel, they require frequent and thorough washing out before any fermentable food can be taken in without disaster. This washing out should be done by drinking hot water at about 110 degrees Fahrenheit, and should take place long enough before each meal to allow the water and washings to leave the stomach before food is eaten and to keep ahead of the food as it passes downward. From experience Dr. Salisbury finds that the hot-water washing should not be nearer the meal than one hour, and it is often better to set back the time two hours. The water should be slowly sipped, so that the stomach may not be uncomfortably distended. The object of this drinking, argues Dr. Salisbury, is "to wash out a dirty, yeasty, slimy, sour stomach before eating and sleeping. It should be taken on retiring, not only for cleansing purposes, but to prevent fermenting products from lying over night near the diaphragm, heart and lungs, partially paralyzing them and exciting, though or disturbing the breathing and circulation. * * * This washing should be kept up persistently for months, and even years, before the digestive apparatus becomes so thoroughly free of yeast, plants and the products developed by their growth to allow normal digestion, unaided by hot water. * * * Hot water is best taken in the morning while in bed, or if up, it is well to lie down on the left side after taking it. * * * It is not alone in consumption that the practice of drinking hot water is of use, but in all diseases arising from defective digestive processes and from the fermentation of foods. Even comparatively healthy persons find it of much benefit. It excites downward peristalsis, dilutes the [illegible] secretions of the body, dissolves all abnormal crystalline substances that may be present in the blood, and everywhere promotes elimination. It supplies a foundation for the thorough treatment of all chronic diseases by an inside bath, which washes the whole system. Cold water cannot take its place. It was at first tried in connection with food experiments, and found to cause pain and colic. It does not excite downward peristalsis, as does water at 110 to 150 degrees Fahrenheit, such as is found in drinking tea and coffee.

"The common and excessive use of cold water, both in drinking and bathing, is a great mistake. It depresses the system and wastes the animal heat in the effort to restore the temperature of the economy, which is sensibly lowered by it, and the heat force needed by the various organs, of which we have none too much at any time, is draughted off to repair our error. When we ice our water we intensify this error a hundredfold and sacrifice the well-being of all internal organs for the temporary cooling of mouth and throat. If those surfaces were in perfectly normal condition we should not crave this cooling. * * * Lukewarm water has also been tried, but was found to excite upward peristalsis and to make the users sick."

Dr. Salisbury maintains that consumption can be cured as readily on the Atlantic seaboard as in more favored climes, and he founds this faith on the source of all his medical knowledge, experiment and cure. "No one," he declares, "need hope to handle consumption successfully by change of climate or by medical remedies. It is a disease arising from long-continued unhealthy alimentation, and can only be cured by the removal of its cause, which is fermenting food. The products of fermentation, carbonic acid gas, alcohol and vinegar yeast and vinegar are the more important factors in developing peculiar pathological symptoms of complaint which is generally and erroneously believed to be incurable."

Dr. Salisbury's treatise aims to prove that health should be man's normal condition; that if it is not man alone is to blame. He is not willing to make our ancestors responsible for our sins. Predisposition to disease does not necessitate disease. It rests with ourselves whether we overcome or succumb to heredity. Man is the victim of his own stomach. Treat that organ with distinguished consideration and health will wait upon good digestion.

An Infant Monstrosity.

A Johnstown (Pa.) special to the Pittsburgh Dispatch says: A Mr. and Mrs. [illegible], of Morrellville, are the parents of a son with a remarkable head. The child was born two years ago. At its birth it was apparently sound and healthy. Some time after the child was born its head began to grow out of all proportions to the rest of the anatomy. Doctors were consulted and every thing that medical science suggested was applied to stay the unnatural development. All efforts proved futile, however, and the growth of its head continued. It is now thirty-six inches in circumference, or almost as big as a half bushel measure. The body is about the right proportion for a two-year-old child. The little one can not stand, owing to the weight of its head; neither can it speak, but it seems to understand what is said to it and to have all its mental faculties unimpaired. The cause of the unnatural growth of the child's head is called by the doctors "hydrocephalus," or, in plain English, it is the accumulation of fluid in and about the brain. Medical science has no cure for the malady, and death is liable to occur to the sufferer at any time.

Married the Wrong Girl.

A Pittsburgh man is said to have really married a girl under the impression that he was marrying her sister. His courtship of the other girl was brief, and the sisters so closely resembled each other that he proposed and was accepted before he discovered his mistake. He has never confessed that he made this odd error, but the girl who lost a good husband because of it insists to this day that she ought to be in her sister's shoes.

A Key West fisherman has captured a turtle weighing 1,600 pounds, the largest ever seen. The old fellow was brought on the back for six men to stand on him and he could have floated with a ton of coal.

A Monarch's Reflection.

When Charles V., after a long and turbulent reign, resigned the crown of Spain and other dominions to his son Philip, reserving to himself merely a small pension, he retired to St. Just, near Piacentia, where he amused himself with mechanics. One day he placed before him upon a table a number of watches, which he had vainly endeavored to make agree exactly in their time. Having looked at them for some minutes, he said: "How foolish was I to endeavor to make religious sects all agree in their doctrines. I might as well expect that, I suppose that these watches would all go with the same regularity."

The islands of Samoa, thirteen in number, in the South Pacific—recently acquired by the Germans—are now a center of interest, on account of the ill-treatment of Americans there and the avowed disposition to ignore American rights.

TARIFF REFORM.

The Democratic House tariff bill placed [illegible] the free list, the result of which, if permitted to become a law, would vastly increase [illegible] manufactures in the United States, both for home consumption and [illegible], and consequently enlarge the field for labor and enterprise. [illegible]

SHARPEN THE BLADE.

The true theory of free representative government is directly adverse to any [illegible] in the selection of candidates for official or legislative positions. [illegible]

A Farmer Becomes Mad.

A farmer named Nelson, a former resident of Roselle, became violently insane [illegible] in the Union County Jail at Elizabeth. In the afternoon he was taken to the insane asylum at Morris Plains.

A Vote of Thanks.

To all persons who donated or assisted the [illegible] in the Borough's Fair held in [illegible] last, was voted at their final meeting, February 11, 1889. The net proceeds was [illegible], which will be devoted to furnishing the rooms of the Firemen's [illegible] over the First National Bank.

An Exciting Runaway.

A team of work horses hitched to a [illegible] wagon ran away on Peace street Monday forenoon and considerably wrecked the wagon. The frightened animals knocked down a panel of fence in front of Dr. A. Ulrich's residence at Broadway and Sixth street, and made a [illegible] dash around the house. One of the horses attempted to throw a somersault over the fence, and, falling to the ground, was captured before doing further damage.

The Winning Pigeon.

In a match at fifty live birds each, for [illegible] a side, between Mr. Chas. Smith of [illegible] and Mr. Frank Kleine of Philadelphia, in the latter city on Wednesday, January 30, Mr. Smith won the purse, killing 44 birds out of a possible 50, to his competitor's 36. The match was according to Hurlingham rules, 30 yards rise. The match was very closely contested, and the winning bird, which brought the Plainfield score up to 44, Mr. Smith is having stuffed by Mr. Harry McIntosh, the taxidermist, and a member of the popular sporting goods firm of A. M. [illegible] & Co., of Park avenue, which [illegible] will presumably locate in the windows at Front and Somerset streets. Mr. Smith, as a shooter, is feared by all [illegible], and his score in the recent match is a commendable one.

A Hint to Plainfield.

(From the Elizabeth Journal.)

[illegible]

This suggestion from a live paper in an adjacent county ought not to be without its effect upon the good people of Plainfield. We have all been argued, and still believe, that the majority of the progressive people of that enterprising city are in favor of county roads and willing to do their share toward paying for them. [illegible]

—The woodchuck, alias ground-hog, saw his shadow on Candlemas Day and went back into his Winter quarters to [illegible] his way.

The McClellan Monument.

The contract for the McClellan monument at Trenton has been awarded by the Committee to McDonald & Sons of Buffalo. It is to be a fluted column forty-six feet in height, of Quincy granite. It is to be surmounted by an eagle with outspread wings. The monument is to be placed within the gates of Riverview Cemetery, and is to be completed and set in place in time for unveiling on Decoration Day.

Senator McPherson.

Mr. McPherson's new term begins on March 4, and if he lives it out and does not resign he will have served eighteen consecutive years as United States Senator from New Jersey. No other man in the State has had any such record. Previous to 1817 no Senator from New Jersey served two terms. Mahlon Dickerson was Senator from March 4, 1817, to March 3, 1829, and then part of a term from 1829 to 1833. Samuel L. Southard served from Jan. 26, 1821, to Nov. 12, 1823, and subsequently from March 4, 1833, to June 26, 1842. Jacob W. Miller served twelve years, Wm. L. Dayton [illegible] years, and Frederick T. Frelinghuysen nine years.

Cutting Ice.

Messrs. John H Tier & Sons, Monday morning began to harvest their crop of ice. The ice only averages about six inches in thickness, but it is of good quality, and probably the thickest it will be this season. Early that morning Mr. Tier put a force of eighteen men at work ridding the ice, and by noon a considerable quantity of ice had been gathered. Mr. John H. Tier is busily engaged at the throttle and windlass; his son Will is superintending the packing of ice, and John H. Tier, Jr., instructs the cutting. Messrs Tier & Sons will work day and night, until a sufficient quantity has been gathered to last through the Summer.

Out For a City Hall.

Some of the city officials are disgruntled because the Council has leased a $75 room and authorized $200 worth of furniture [illegible] for the use of Chief Carey, Chief Doane and Street Commissioner Angleman. They claim that the salary of the office of Chief of Police and of Street Commissioner have also been increased from $600 to $1,000 a year, while the other city officials are obliged to [illegible] their own office, without an increase in their salary. Since the Collector Johnson's salary has been fixed at $1,200 annually, he might just as well establish his office in his residence and thus save the extra expense of renting an office. This again illustrates the necessity for a City Hall.

Two Patents for Plainfielders.

Following are the patents granted to citizens of New Jersey during the past week, and reported for this paper.

E. L. Coach, Camden, [illegible]; D. P. Fitzgerald, Newark, bottle; W. H. Kaye, Weequahic, stationery case; W. E. Kelly, New Brunswick, steam boiler; H. A. Lee, Glen Ridge, metal sheet for surfacing walls, etc.; A. F. Meisselbach, Newark, fishing reel; J. Montgomery, East Millstone, stock car; T. B. Osborne, Plainfield, stand for Christmas trees; W. Scott, Plainfield, collecting and evening-up sheets for printing machines; E. D. Self, South Orange, gas machine; P. S. Stokes, [illegible], rasp cutting machine; G. B. Taylor, New Brunswick, spark arrester; J. A. Vanderpriff, Newark, incandescent lamp manufacture; J. A. [illegible], Jersey City, venting apparatus; J. G. Ward, Irvington, making dental plates; W. J. Williams, Camden, tread for shoes; J. H. Yeomans, Asbury Park, self locking galley; T. Walstenholme, Camden, dyeing machine.

The Borough Fire Department.

The citizens of North Plainfield, are anxiously awaiting the advent of the organization of a Fire Department, so they may at least have some protection in case of fire. The fire department in its present condition, is virtually without officers, and in fact there is not even a company needing officers. In case a fire breaks out within the borough limits, the department apparatus must either remain in the engine house or be ordered out by the Borough officials.

At the January meeting of the Borough Council, Mr. H. J. Martin was appointed Chief of the Fire Department, and it is understood that several gentlemen have been sought to hold a conference with the Committee on Fire, Water and Lamps, with a view of perfecting an organization, and assuming control of the Fire Department. But as yet no definite action has been taken in the matter, and the residents of North Plainfield are obliged to look to this city for protection in case of fire. The matter of organizing a Fire Department in the Borough should be considered without delay.

WILL CONTEST MRS. LATTIMER'S WILL.

Caveats were filed Tuesday and the day before in the office of the Surrogate of Union county, at Elizabeth, N. J., against the admitting to probate of the paper writing purporting to be the last will and testament of Sarah M. Lattimer.

One is filed by Carman Force, Cashier of the First National Bank, of Plainfield, who was appointed her executor under a previous will.

The other is filed by Wm. E. Gardner, a member in good standing of Jerusalem Lodge, No. 26, F. & A. M., of Plainfield, N. J., which Lodge was made a legatee under a previous will.

An expensive and bitterly contested legal controversy is likely to ensue, grounded in the estimated value of the estate.

Very interesting developments may be looked for as to the influence used and the circumstances under which so radical a change in the testamentary intentions of the testatrix were brought about, almost in the last moments of her life.

The character and reputation of several of our most prominent and respected citizens, will likely be brought into the controversy.

A Question Regarding the Daft Railway.

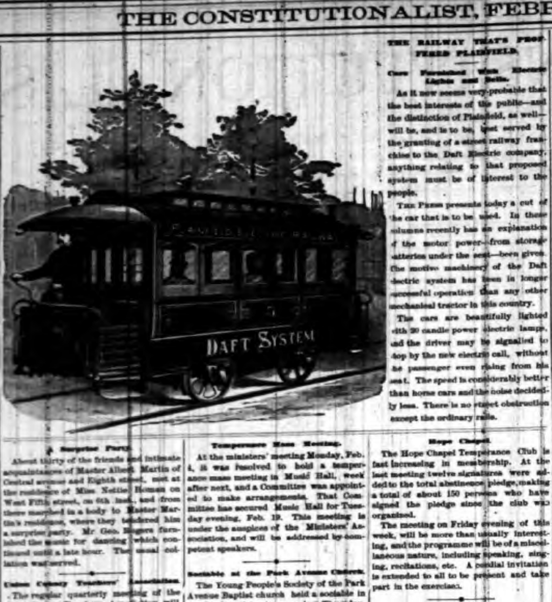
To the Editor of The Press:—Noting your remarks and elaborate cut on the electric railway Monday, you say the Daft electric system (storage batteries) has been in longer successful operation than any other mechanical tractor in this country. Will you please state where it is in actual service, so that it can be inspected by our Street Committee, for it is a question of vital importance to our city, and the franchise should not be granted to any company for experimental purposes.

There is no question but that motive power can be obtained in that way, but the question has not been settled as to its feasibility for street car service, financially.

Now, shall we be deprived of our beautiful drives for a company to experiment on and in the end have nothing, for what body of men will maintain an enterprise that year after year calls for more cash? [illegible]

[Our correspondent misquotes The Press. What is said last evening, was: "The motive machinery of the Daft electric system has been in longer successful operation," etc. This machinery may be seen in daily operation [illegible] Street Commissioner (if he wants to see it) at Baltimore, Knoxville, [illegible] and other places.—Ed.]

—The Board of Health last Friday [illegible] organized for the ensuing year by the [illegible] of the officers. [illegible] was adopted that a rule be added to the Code forbidding the emptying of cesspools or [illegible], the daytime, from May 1, to Oct. 1, of each year.



A Surprise Party.

About thirty of the friends and intimate acquaintances of Master Albert Martin of Central avenue and Eighth street, met at the residence of Miss Nettie Homan on West Fifth street, on 6th inst., and from there marched in a body to Master Martin's residence, where they tendered him a surprise party. Mr Geo. Rogers furnished the music for dancing which continued until a late hour. The usual collation was served.

Union County Teachers' Association.

The regular quarterly meeting of the Union County Teachers Association will be held in Public School No. 2, Elizabeth, Saturday, Feb. 16, 1889, at 9:30 A. M. The programme will include devotional exercises; quotations, subject: "School Management;" a paper on "Physical Culture," by Miss M. E. Humpston, of this city, and a paper on "Teaching, a Profession," by Mr. William M. Griffin of Newark.

Among the Firemen.

Chief Doane was an honored guest of the members of Zephyr Hook and Ladder Company, Monday night. After his explanation of certain matters of fire department interest that they questioned him about, a vote of thanks was given.

By permission of the Chief, the company ran out the Truck for a drill, later in the evening, and the members gained much experience in the working of the tiller and the handling of the entire apparatus.

The Borough Election.

The borough election will take place on Tuesday, March 12, and the officers to be elected will be a mayor, three councilmen, an assessor, collector, and overseer of the poor. At the same time the Township election will take place, and the following officers will be elected: A judge and inspector of election, a clerk, assessor, collector, one township committeeman, two justices of the peace, one constable, overseer of the poor, and pound masters.

A Farmer Commits Suicide.

John Williams, a middle aged farmer, living near Roselle, hung himself in his barn Tuesday morning. Williams had suffered from malaria for a year or more and lately had grown despondent, and had several times hinted that he would take his own life. Yesterday he went out to feed the cattle and as he was absent longer than usual, Mrs. Williams went to call him. She found his lifeless body hanging by a rope halter from a pole in the haymow. Mr. Williams was a worthy citizen and enjoyed the respect of his neighbors. He has a married daughter in Brooklyn. An inquest will be held today.

North Plainfield Township Committee Meeting.

The North Plainfield Township Committee met in regular session in Spencer's Hall, Monday night, with President Coddington in the chair. All the members were present excepting Mr. Voorhees. Clerk H. J. Martin read the minutes of the last meeting and they were upon motion approved.

Mr. A. Firing, representing Godfrey Larry, was present, and stated that the latter was willing to settle his claim for damages for $20, that being the amount offered by the committee, and agreeing to give a receipt in full for the same. The treasurer was authorized to cancel the claim.

The action of the treasurer in paying the interest due on bonds up to Feb. 1, was sanctioned.

Reform Hall Meeting.

Reform Hall was well filled Sunday evening. President French occupied the chair, and Mr. Vanderbeek, with a full choir, furnished the finest of music. The devotional exercises were conducted by Geo. M. Angleman, Jr., who afterwards delivered a very interesting address along the line of gospel temperance, declaring in the course of which that liquor drinking was productive of woes moral, social, physical and spiritual.

Capt. Gidrom followed in his usual sound and convincing manner, and after he closed, Rev. Dr. Rodman, having just arrived, took the platform and from the text—"What will it profit a man though he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" spoke words of eloquence, truth and power. Unbroken attention reigned throughout the entire meeting.

In response to a short but earnest appeal by Mr. Angleman, Jr., a few persons signed the pledge, after which Dean Rodman pronounced the benediction.

DOWN COME THE POLES.

Last Thursday saw the completion of the first chapter in the telephone pole war, as told exclusively in The Press of the day before.

Constable Carey with another officer arrived on the 9:58 A. M. train from Elizabeth, and proceeded at once to the scene of the recent skirmish. There the two poles cut loose from their bases, swung upright held aloft by the connecting wires that were fastened to the insulators on the cross-arms. The Constable had made five unsuccessful trips and the poles were not cut down yet—this sixth trip he proposed should settle the matter.

Only a handful of the populace dared brave the Arctic weather and accompany the officers and the Press reporter to the spot. The intense cold weather, however, impelled those who had the work to do to hurry it up. The poles were guyed with strong ropes, and "Jim"—thoroughly schooled since his previous lesson—climbed to their tops. The wires were loosened from the insulators and the poles were then let down to the street.

Some of the wires were broken and hung disconnected, while the others sag and sway together so that they cut into one another's circuit and destroy all intelligible communication.

The result of all this is that two poles near a vacant lot have been cut down, and a number of our citizens are very much discommoded in their telephonic service.

One of the street fire-alarm box connections, is also cut out. It is estimated that it has cost about $300 to get the two poles down.

Temperance Mass Meeting.

At the ministers' meeting Monday, Feb. 4, it was resolved to hold a temperance mass meeting in Music Hall, week after next, and a Committee was appointed to make arrangements. That Committee has secured Music Hall for Tuesday evening, Feb. 19. This meeting is under the auspices of the Ministers' Association, and will be addressed by competent speakers.

Sociable at the Park Avenue Church.

The Young People's Society of the Park Avenue Baptist church held a sociable in the Sunday School room, last Thursday, but owing to the extreme cold weather the attendance was not so large as was expected. During the evening an informal programme was rendered, consisting of a recitation by Rev. Mr. Dilts, instrumental music by Miss Carrie VanName, and a recitation by the pastor's wife.

Iced cream and cake were then announced as the next on the list and a very social time was had during the remainder of the evening.

Married at Metuchen.

A quiet wedding took place in the Catholic church at Metuchen, Wednesday Feb. 6, at five o'clock P. M., at which time Miss Annie O'Keefe of South Plainfield and Mr. James Conners of Wilkesbarre, Pa., were united in the bonds of holy wedlock by Rev. Father Cantwell, pastor of the church.

The invitations were limited to the near friends of the bride and groom. After the ceremony a reception was tendered to the newly-wedded couple at the residence of the bride's parents, and during the evening the South Plainfield Band tendered them a serenade.

A NEW CHAPEL AT WASHINGTONVILLE.

The Sunday school which has for many years met in the school house at Washingtonville, has recently grown to such an extent, that the present building is inadequate to accommodate all who desire to attend, and the erection of a more commodious structure has been decided upon. Mrs. John Wilson has kindly donated a lot, a fund has been started, and the work of erection will begin at once.

At a meeting held for the purpose in the school house on Monday Feb. 4, several persons present expressed their willingness to lend their time and teams for the purpose of carting stone for the foundation walls, and the teams were to be on hand Thursday Feb. 7, weather permitting.

The subject of erecting a new chapel was first advocated by Miss Nettie Beeching and Mrs. Stephen N. Beeching, two of the members of the school. Through their untiring efforts, assisted by the other members of the school they have been so far successful as to warrant the Sunday school in going ahead in this much needed work. While there is not enough money in the Treasurer's hands to complete the chapel, yet it is considered necessary that something must be done to make room for the increase of scholars, and the trustees hope to raise the money from friends of the cause of Christ to finish it.

Mr. Oscar Teale, the architect, has kindly given plans gratuitously to the Building Committee for the erection of a chapel to be built of rough mountain stone, of which there is plenty in the neighborhood. The building will be 40x24 feet in dimensions, and capable of seating about 200 persons.

Mr. Frank Bartells has kindly offered to donate a fine bell. It is the desire of the Building Committee to have the chapel finished if possible within the course of a few months, and all interested are working to that end.

The Washingtonville school house has been used for Sunday school purposes for the past 25 years. Mr. Runyon was the first Superintendent, and he was obliged to drive seven miles from his home at Millington to attend the service. Mr. M. H. French and Mrs. Ellias Allen are charter members, and they have attended regularly ever since. Mr. French was chosen Treasurer at the time the Sunday school was organized which position he has held up to this time. Both Mr. French and Mrs. Allen have each seen their respective children and grand children grow up and attend the Sunday school.

Mr. John W. Moore, now of Grove street, North Plainfield, while a resident of Washingtonville and for several years after moving away, was the Superintendent. Both Mr. and Mrs. Moore drove from their home on Grove street, to teach their respective classes. Mr. George Taylor assumed the position after Mr. Moore resigned to take a place in the Warren Mission Sunday school.

During Mr. Taylor's Superintendency the Sunday school was reorganized and the aid of the Y. M. C. A. of Plainfield was asked in conducting it. Mr. C. W. McCutchen and Mr. H. R. Munger, on the part of the Devotional Committee, assumed the responsibility and promised to aid in securing a suitable Superintendent. Mr. Joseph McKay Lee, living at present in Denver, Col., was chosen to the position, which he held until his removal from Plainfield.

The Sunday school at once asked that Mr. E. L. Bonny be assigned to the position, previous to this he having taught a class in the Sunday school. Mr. Bonny was unanimously chosen by the Devotional Committee as the proper person to assume so responsible a charge, where Episcopal, Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian and Lutheran denominations were represented; and so strong was the confidence in Mr. Bonny's unbiased doctrines that two sons of a Lutheran minister were allowed to attend the school. Mr. Bonny has held the position for several years, and under his Superintendency the school has grown to its present size.

The present officers of the Sunday school are:

Superintendent—E. L. Bonny.
Treasurer—M. H. French.
Secretary—Miss, S. Doyle.
Organist—Miss Bessie J. Beeching.
Trustees—Messrs E. L. Bonny, Henry Wise, W. H. Rogers.

—William Nolan of Metuchen was arrested by Officer Lynch, Monday afternoon, for disorderly conduct. This morning Mayor Male fined him $5.

THE RAILWAY THAT'S PROFFERED PLAINFIELD.

Cars Furnished With Electric Lights and Bells.

As it now seems very probable that the best interests of the public—and the distinction of Plainfield, as well—will be, and is to be, best served by the granting of a street railway franchise to the Daft Electric company, anything relating to that proposed system must be of interest to the people.

The Press presents today a cut of the car that is to be used. In these columns recently has an explanation of the motor power—from storage batteries under the seat—been given. The motive machinery of the Daft electric system has been in longer successful operation than any other mechanical tractor in this country.

The cars are beautifully lighted with 20 candle power electric lamps, and the driver may be signalled to stop by the new electric call, without the passenger even rising from his seat. The speed is considerably better than horse cars and the noise decidedly less. There is no street obstruction except the ordinary rails.

Hope Chapel.

The Hope Chapel Temperance Club is fast increasing in membership. At the last meeting twelve signatures were added to the total abstinence pledge, making a total of about 150 persons who have signed the pledge since the club was organized.

The meeting on Friday evening of this week, will be more than usually interesting, and the programme will be of a miscellaneous nature, including speaking, singing, recitations, etc. A cordial invitation is extended to all to be present and take part in the exercises.

LAID AT REST.

The funeral of Mrs. Sarah Lattimer took place from her late home on East Front street, Wednesday, Feb. 6, at 2:30 o'clock. The Rev. N. P. Ketcham of the First Presbyterian church, pastor of the deceased, officiated.

The pall-bearers were Messrs R. H. MacDonald, W. H. Shotwell, H. A. Pope, J. M. Bettman, W. C. Butler and P. Hoagland. The remains were interred in the Presbyterian Cemetery alongside those of the husband, Henry G. Lattimer.

After these services a small gathering of surviving relatives assembled in the parlor of the house at 63 East Front street, and listened to the reading of the will. Mrs. Julian Page, a niece of the deceased's, and her husband were present, as were also a few other relatives from distant points.

The will was of recent date, and was read by the lawyer who had drawn it and who was also its custodian, ex-Judge Nelson Runyon. What its bequests and provisions are, will probably remain a secret until the will is offered for probate after the lapse of the ten days delay required by law.

Even the executors named are still unknown officially; but on the authority of some of those who were in Mrs. Lattimer's confidence, The Press is able to state with entire assurance that the gentlemen named to take charge of the enormous fortune are Messrs Nelson Runyon, Wm. H. Shotwell, Treasurer of the First Presbyterian church, and J. Fred Mac Donald.

A Reasonable Man's View.

To the Editor of The Press:—I have read the lamentation of one signing himself "Prohibition," in the article, "Painting things awfully black," in last Friday's Press. Now, sir, please allow me as a citizen and a friend, to make a few remarks in your valuable paper—and I am not ashamed to add my name.

Some men gape at a camel and catch a fly—while others can see the mote in his brother's eye, and cannot see the beam that is in their own eye. I am not so bitter against this so called damnable work. I prefer to call it a legitimate business and when conducted in a proper manner it is as harmless as any other business.

Doubtless this business has been from the creation of the world, all things were created by God and announced by Him to be very good, hence the needful provisions for all kinds of drink as well as to eating provisions, and allow me to say here the Inn at Bethlehem came near being honored as the birthplace of the World's Redeemer, and he was born on the premises of that establishment after all. But the Inn had no room for Him. So it is with our hearts, we have no room for Christ in these days, hence our hearts are full of evils towards all things that are not in accordance with our views. And some men would not allow anyone to live but themselves. Now our beautiful city and the morals of our little ones. Why bless you, they are born in sin and shapened in iniquity and the wilderness is before them and they must pass through it.

But they are not called upon to go alone. Train up a child in the way that he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it. Take them in your arms and bring them to Jesus, saying, we bring them Lord with thankful hands and yield them up to thee, joyful that we ourselves are thine, thine let these offsprings be. I pity a poor drunkard and all of those of whom it is declared they shall in no case enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. What can be done for them? Let us see. There is the saloon and the hotel in their way, there is light literature and all novels ten times worse than all the rum shops together, and then there is that horrid ball room, poor dears they must go and dance and what is the result you know? Come we must pull down the theatre and the dance hall just as reasonable as to close the saloons, and more so.

Men love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil. My friend, the Prohibitionist, seems to make a scapegoat of the saloons and hotels. But if we teach our children to live and steal and gamble and supply them with all the lowest trash that can be scraped together, need we be surprised at the result while we allow them to read such things and encourage them. If the fountain is filthy the stream must be filthy too. There is none righteous, no not one. Doubtless we are on the eve of a great change. So it was with Sodom and Gomorrah the day before old Mr. Lot was ordered to escape to the mountains least he be consumed and everyone knows there must be a reformation. But where can it begin. It may be that the church will awake and come to life again. And it may be that we have sinned away our day of grace. He that hath been often reproved and hardeneth his neck shall suddenly be destroyed and that without a remedy. What is the use of a church in form only. A dead church and a church that has no power, paralyzed. Can these dry bones live? If the army of professing Christians could wake up and come forth to battle clothed in the garments of salvation and covered with the robe of Christ righteousness. Then would every foe be subdued and we would not have to say one to another, know ye the Lord.

What danger is the Pilgrim in,
How many are his foes;
How many ways there are to sin,
By living mortal knows!

Let him that is without fault throw the first stone.

I am Dear Sir,

Yours very respectfully,

Thomas Hodges.

A New Departure.

Postmaster Force has made a new departure in the post office building, which will doubtless prove a great benefit to persons who neglect to properly address their letters. Beginning Thursday, all letters and other mail matter, which is held in the office for want of proper addressing, postage, etc., will be placed in a frame and exposed to view for a reasonable length of time, before forwarding them to the dead letter office.

The daily weather report will also hereafter be displayed in the office from a neat frame, which was received by the Postmaster on Thursday last.

OLD POINT COMFORT.

The series of pleasure tours to Old Point Comfort recently given by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company proved so successful, and the popular demand for another is so strong and widespread, that the company has arranged a fourth tour for Wednesday, Feb. 20. This date will afford those who take advantage of it the cream of the season at Old Point. For the conveyance of the party a special train will leave Broad Street station, Philadelphia, at 9 A. M., and run through on fast time. The round-trip tickets, including one day's board at the Hygeia Hotel, valid for return trip for ten days, will be sold, going and returning direct, from New York at $11, Philadelphia $9, or at $2 more in each case if the return trip is made via Richmond and Washington, at both of which places a stop-off is permitted within the limit of return. Parties residing elsewhere desiring to join the tour may use a regular train on the morning of the excursion to Philadelphia, and there take the special. Parties from stations on the New York Division, East of Trenton, may use their tickets to Philadelphia on the day preceding date of tour.

PUBLIC LIBRARY.

The regular meeting of the Board of Directors of the Library was held on the 6th inst. There were present Messrs Male, Dumont, Baldwin, Talmage and Stillman. The minutes of the meeting of Jan. 2, 1889 were read and approved. On motion the following bills were ordered paid:

E. L. Adams salary	$50 00
E. M. Odiorne, salary and sundries	42 59

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SOCIABLE.

The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of Trinity Reformed church, held its regular monthly sociable in the church parlors last Thursday, and the occasion was the cause of attracting the largest gathering of the sort thus far this season. In fact the attendance was so large, that the Society will in all probability hereafter have tickets of admission.

The exercises were of a literary and musical nature, and included a New Year's part-piece by Lizzie M. Hadley, entitled "The Months and Holidays." The various characters were represented as follows:

The "New Year," Mr. J. C. Allen; "Father Time," Mr. J. Connolly; "The Old Year," Mr. J. C. VanDyke. Months—January, Miss Emma Gillam; February, Miss Emma Whitlock; March, Miss Grace Nevius; April, Miss Fannie Mattison; May, Miss Susy VanWinkle; June, Miss Lillian Force; July, Miss Nellie Crawford; August, Miss Lulu Snediker; September, Miss Etta Krymer; October, Miss Lizzie Dunn; November, Miss Ella Gardner; December, Miss Ella Conkey. Holidays—New Year's Day, Miss Lulu Johnson; Valentine's Day, Miss Lillie Zeiss; Washington's Birthday, Mr. Geo. Snediker; April 1st, Mr. Joe Farley; Easter, Miss Lucy Cottell; May Day, Miss Annie Littell; Decoration Day, Master Willie Crawford; 4th of July, Master Elmer Wheeler; Thanksgiving, Miss Ellie Dunn; Christmas, Miss Sadie Addis.

Each of the several characters recited an appropriate quotation to which "Father Time" responded. In concluding the drama "Father Time" recited:

"The grains in my glass so swiftly are flowing,
That I know very well it is time to be going:
Yes, Happy New Year, it is time to be gone,
So now sing a song and we all will march on."

A procession is then formed led by the character, "New Year." "Time" stands behind and gently pushes on; then comes the Months and Holidays, and all march around the stage singing to the tune, "America," after which all kneel before the "New Year," and the closing tableau takes place.

The scene was a very pretty one, and the piece was acceptably rendered by those who took part. The success of the affair is in a large degree due to the untiring efforts of Mrs. F. S. Dunn, assisted by other members of the Society.

The Social Committee having in charge the preliminary arrangements for the entertainment consisted of the following ladies: Mrs. F. S. Dunn, and the Misses Phoebe Mills, Minnie L. Force, E. U. King, J. Johnson, Minnie Williams, Mabel Woodruff, Mamie Berg.

The Reception Committee was composed of these gentlemen: Messrs Chas. D. Wheeler, S. J. Samelson, F. S. Cutter, H. S. Thatcher, Chas. Goepfert. Refreshments and an hour or two of general sociability concluded the evening's enjoyment.

—As the sun was setting Thursday afternoon at a few minutes past five many people here saw a huge ball of fire traveling over this city at an altitude of about thirty degrees from the South towards the West. The fire was bluish and left a trail of smoke behind it. From the centre of the ball jets of flame broke forth, and as it disappeared it seemed to burst.

WESTFIELD NEWS.

The policy of insurance on the life of Mrs. Alice Edgar, who was buried at Westfield, last week, was promptly paid by the Metropolitan Insurance Company, through the agency of Charles R. Clark of that town.

A Successful Meeting.

The Union County Board of Agriculture held a regular meeting, as announced in The Press, at Gale's Club House, Westfield, last Thursday at ten o'clock, A. M. After a dinner served by the Women's Christian Temperance Union in their Hall, the Board assembled again at two o'clock.

The programme of both sessions was an extended but interesting one throughout. It has already been published in these columns. About ninety members of the Farmers' Club were present, and much enthusiasm was shown in all the proceedings.

Resolutions were adopted endorsing the County Road bill, and a committee was appointed to go to Trenton in its interests. A committee was also appointed to arrange for the Club's taking part in the Centennial celebration at Elizabeth.

THE FRAZEE LEE WILL CASE.

The contest over the will of the late Frazee Lee, the hermit and miser, who died at Two Bridges, in this county, a few months ago, leaving the bulk of a $300 000 estate to Scotch Plains Baptists for the purpose of "spreading the Gospel," is still in progress at Elizabeth before Special Master in Chancery, Herbert W. Knight. Tuesday 5th inst. the contestants closed their case, by calling Mrs. Sarah House, Messrs P. P. Dumont and Edward Terry. Mrs. House's testimony centered principally on the chastity of the old miser, and is unfit for publication.

On the next day the following witnesses were called on behalf of the proponents of the will: Hon. Job Male, Jacob Long, George Kyte and Rev. J. H. Parks, pastor of the Scotch Plains Baptist church.

Thursday following, Rev. Mr. Parks concluded his testimony and other witnesses were called as follows: Mrs. Dr. M. B. Long, Jos. S. Cutter, John H. Manning, Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., and Thomas Lee, the latter a cousin of Frazee Lee.

Thos. Lee testified that both William Hetfield and Edward Terry, two of the witnesses for the contestants, had met him along the roadway, and that both had told him that he wouldn't lose anything if he testified against the will and in favor of the contestants, to which he replied, that he "would not tell a lie for the whole estate." Those who testified for the proponents, said that they never saw Frazee Lee under the influence of intoxicants. The taking of testimony was resumed at ten o'clock Friday morning.

Thus far $3,800 has been paid out for Cousel fees alone, Counsel for the defenders of the will, ex-Chancellor Runyon, and Mr. W. R. Codington, of the law firm of Jackson and Codington, being allowed about $150 a day while the testimony is being taken.

HE WAS IN THE COOP.

Two well-known characters were found in the act of robbing Mr. J. F. Schwab's hennery at Union Village, Tuesday evening of last week, and one of them was entrapped in the coop.

Taking advantage of the cloudy night, "Billie of the Woods" with a confederate made an attempt to purloin some of the fine pullets that are Mr. Schwab's pride. But Messrs Brazilla Randolph and Oscar Blazier heard the commotion in the roost, and told the owner. Hastily returning to the hennery they saw Billie rush out and take to the woods, but the other who was one "General" Warren Ross, was not so fortunate, as before he could escape through the door it was shut and locked upon him.

A lantern was procured which, together with a search, revealed the presence of the "General," much to Mr. Schwab's surprise as he had but a few minutes before given the culprit some cider. The entire population soon surrounded the place and plied the "General" with questions, but he would only reply that he "wasn't doing nothing wrong."

A guard was placed at the hennery, and the citizens adjourned for prayer meeting which was being held in the Methodist church adjoining. After those services, a Court was organized and the trial of the case was peremptorily set down for "at once." General Ross was taken from the coop and arraigned before the Judge in Mr. Schwab's kitchen. The prisoner was covered with fleas, feathers and fertilizer—also with obloquy, odor and odium.

In the absence of his counsel, the accused declined to answer all questions on the plea that he was not called upon to criminate himself. This point, though appropriately taken, was ruled out by the ex-Squire who presided. The "General" then confessed that he went into the hennery to steal the festive fowl at the instigation of his companion who had subsequently made his escape leaving the prisoner in the lurch. After this confession had been transcribed by the court stenographer, the prisoner was released.

Mr. Schwab, as well as many others of his neighbors, have frequently lost fine chickens from their henneries, and they are now naturally glad that the band has been broken up by the flight of one and the conviction of another. A valuable shote was stolen some time ago from Mr. Schwab's pen, but afterwards it was traced to where it had been sold and the thieves were compelled to return it. The matter was hushed up at the time, but now warrants will be obtained and the power of the law enforced.

—The State Historical Society, at its recent meeting at Trenton, adopted a resolution offered by Rev. Dr. Mott, recommending the holding of religious services in all churches at 9 o'clock, on April 30.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

BELFORD'S MAGAZINE.
DONN PIATT, Editor.
Though BELFORD'S MAGAZINE is the latest comer in the field of periodical literature, the best proof of its prosperity is the fact that its paid up subscription list has reached a figure eminently satisfactory to the publishers.
BELFORD'S MAGAZINE is distinctly American and commends itself to all intelligent and thoughtful persons who wish to keep themselves posted on the great questions of the day.
Under the able and brilliant management of Col. Donn Piatt it will each month in its editorial department speak out fearlessly but fairly, and with thorough independence, on all questions of public importance.
Its long novel, given in each number complete, by some one of our popular authors, such as Julian Hawthorne, Edgar Saltus, Edgar Fawcett, Mrs. Elizabeth Bellamy and a score of other well known names, is a characteristic of BELFORD'S MAGAZINE.
Prof. Summer, David A. Wells, Henry George, Henry Watterson, John G. Carlisle, Frank Hurd, are some of the contributors to BELFORD'S MAGAZINE on political and economic subjects.
Short stories, two or more of which are contributed to each number, sketches, dramatic notes, passing events and book reviews, combine to make BELFORD'S one of the most readable and interesting periodicals now before the public.
Send for a three months' trial subscription, 75 cents. $2.50 a year; 25 cents a number.
Enclose 6 cents for sample copy.

—St. Patrick's Day falls on Sunday this year.

—A surpliced choir for Grace church will soon be another attractive feature of the [illegible] service.

—Second-hand clothing is much needed for distribution at the Relief Association, 48 West Second street.

—Messrs Coddington & Wilson, the ice dealers, began to harvest their crop of ice from the ponds in the "Notch," Tuesday.

—11,000 miles is a long time for an umbrella to travel with the original owner. Hear Mr. E. R. Ackerman tell its history at the Y. M. C. A. Thursday, Feb. 21.

—The first grand entertainment of the Catholic Young Men's Literary Union will be held at St. Mary's School Hall, on Friday evening, February 22, at eight o'clock.

—The Borough Council will meet in adjourned session on Friday evening, and it is probable that at that time some definite action will be taken toward the establishment of a Fire Department.

—The new office which is to be used by the Chief of Police, the Chief of the Fire Department, and the Street Commissioner has been furnished with attractive desks and is now ready for occupancy.

—There was another accident at the Pond Tool Works, Friday. A grind stone that was being [illegible], tilted and falling on one of the men who were carrying it hurt him badly in the side.

—People should be very careful in fixing their stoves at night so that the deadly coal gas will not pervade their houses. Several narrow escapes from suffocation have recently been reported in this city.

—It is said that some of the hackmen in this city, in order to secure employment, are obliged to pay one-half of the license fee, which is deducted regularly from their weekly wages until the license fee is [illegible].

—Thirty-one years ago we had a Winter as mild as this. There was no very cold weather until near the middle of February, which was very cold for about ten days, after which came warmer weather and an early Spring.

—Bernards Township in Somerset county has been divided into two polling districts. Elections in the first district will hereafter be held either at Basking Ridge or Bernardsville, and in the second at Liberty Corner.

—Our correspondents will please remember that drop letters require two cents postage, the same as letters addressed to persons at a distance. We simply speak of this to save trouble and inconvenience in the future.

—Auction sale—horses, cows, carriages, wagons, sleighs, harness, grain, and farming utensils in general on Tuesday next, 19th inst., at the farm of Lewis Kelley on the road leading from Oak Tree to New Dover. See posters for list of articles.

—There will be a temperance mass meeting under the auspices of the Minister's Association of this city, at Music Hall, next Tuesday evening, at 7:45 o'clock. There will be ten minute addresses by the ministers and band music.

—The prayer meeting held every Sunday afternoon, at four o'clock, in the school room, under the auspices of the Young People's Association of the First Baptist church, was led by Mr. Walter [illegible] yesterday, and was largely attended.

—"No presents" should be printed on every fashionable wedding invitation these days. It's hard on the young couple as they may be depending on outsiders furnishing the house, but the public has kicked over the black-mailing business and it must go.

—Manager Runyon of the Telephone Company is having a cable built, 500 feet long, with which to span the opening caused by the taking down of the poles on Liberty street South of Seventh. The distance through the air to be stretched is about 400 feet.

—Six members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Newton, recently petitioned the manufacturers of that town to pay their employes on Monday instead of on Saturday of each week, claiming that the change would promote the cause of temperance.

—Mr. E. B. Voorhees, a regular graduate of the Chicago Veterinary College, presents his card in another column. Those wishing medical or surgical treatment for their horses can now address him at Somerville, and after April 1, he will be at Day's stables on North avenue.

—The [illegible] Southern and Florida tour, Winter-Spring, 1889, will leave Somerville next Monday. It will include three days at the Florida Exposition at Ocala, a day at St. Augustine, a visit to Luray Caverns, and a view of the Inauguration ceremonies at Washington.

M., will be tendered an evening sociable by the members of the Council, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. I. H. Boehm, No. 7 W. Front street. The music for the occasion will be furnished by Prof. O'[illegible].

—Justice Cole, at Dunellen, on Monday, rendered decision in the cases of John Cronin vs. Ambrose Marionshank, and counter charge, [illegible], for shooting rabbits out of season. Cronin was compelled to pay costs. So was Marionshank. The cases were tried some time ago, and able Counsel was employed from this city.

—Messrs. Pearson and Gayle, the enterprising builders, have made a great transformation in the old Berry property at the corner of Somerset street and Craig place. The building, which has been moved back so as to face on Craig place, is being remodeled with gabled roof, bay-windows and other modern improvements.

—There is a mongrel dog belonging to a family on East Front street, near Washington, that is a nuisance to the neighborhood. The cur stands on the front porch nearly every night, and barks and snaps continually at pedestrians. The owner of that dog should cut his tail off near the ears, before some one kicks the brute into the hereafter.

Winfield Scott Post Meeting.

A regular encampment of Winfield Scott Post No. 73, G. A. R., was held Tuesday evening, with Senior Vice-Commander Charles Stevens in the chair. Besides transacting routine business, the Post made arrangements for the entertainment of Winfield Scott Post, No. 114, of Philadelphia, on the evening of Washington's Birthday. Winfield Scott Post will tender the guests a campfire and collation.

The death of Francis Elston Marsh, Jr., only son and youngest child of Councilman F. E. Marsh, occurred shortly after five o'clock of Saturday afternoon last. A severe attack of scarlet fever about two years ago, left the lad with serious kidney trouble that ultimately caused death. He was five years of age. Funeral services were held at the home of the parents', 125 Madison avenue, Tuesday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock.

She'll Carry the Message, Herself.

A lady residing on Broadway, this city, received a letter from a dear friend, Monday, which was short and sweet, yet at the same time it told volumes. The letter simply contained these words: "Second Epistle of John, 12th verse," which says: "Having many things to write unto you, I would not write with paper and ink; but I trust to come unto you, and speak face to face, that our joy may be full."

North Plainfield Township Meeting.

At a recent meeting of the North Plainfield Township Committee, Mr. Chas. A. Reed, the Township Counsel, gave an opinion concerning the Spring election. He said that the Township Committee had no power to change the polling places. Mr. Coddington, the Chairman, reported that he had notified Mr. W. A. Coddington, Counsel for Godfrey Larry, of the action of the Committee, with reference to his claim for damages by reason of his driving off an embankment in the Notch several months ago. Counsel for Mr. Larry had refused the Committee's offer, and threatened to bring suit unless a satisfactory settlement was made.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SOCIETY OF CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Rev. Mr. Kerr of Elizabeth, at the First Baptist Church, Last Evening, Clearly Illustrates the Workings of the Christian Endeavor.

Rev. John T. Kerr, Pastor of the Third Presbyterian church of Elizabeth, and President of the New Jersey State Union of the Society of Christian Endeavor, delivered an address before the Young People's Association of the First Baptist church, in the lecture room of that church, Monday. In response to an invitation, the Young People's Societies of the several other churches, were well represented, Trinity Reformed church sending a delegation of about forty members.

Mr. Howard Runyon, President of the Young People's Association of the First Baptist church, presided. The audience joined in singing "Blest be the tie that binds," after which the chairman read the scripture from Second Timothy, 2d chapter, begining with the eleventh verse. The chairman spoke a few words in explanation of the meeting, which he said it had been deemed advisable to call and discuss the matter of forming a Christian Endeavor Society. The two essential points to be considered, he said, were signing the pledge and keeping it. Rev. Mr. Kerr was then introduced.

The speaker said he was present to explain and clear up difficulties as the President of the Christian Endeavor of the State; he further stated that he was not present as an agent of the Society, to take from his pocket an ecclesiastical patent and offer it for sale. Moreover, he said, he wanted to talk in an informal way, how to spread God's work; no matter what the Society may be in the Christian church, success does not depend upon the instrument, but you in whom are the Spirit of God, must push the work forward. Christian Endeavor is defined by two things. First, its name—banded together to endeavor to be Christians; Second, how it orginated. Here the speaker told of a pastor who held a series of revivals, and gathered in a large number of converts. The question then arose as to how the young idea should be encouraged. Christian Endeavor is born out of the spiritual idea for a spiritual purpose; it places the prayer meeting above the social gathering; it exalts the spiritual and is after the souls of the unsaved. It is not a Society that draws a dividing line between the young and the old, but the idea is to develop decided Christian life, to raise up in the church an increasing body of young people, who will give evidence as to how they stand in the Christian belief and Christian deportment, who are not ashamed to own their Lord or to defend His name. Rev. Mr. Kerr than read the Society's pledge, and aptly illustrated its provisions. Signing the pledge, he said, was not the one-thousandth part of the obligations resting on professed Christians. Conscientious scruples, prevent many persons from signing the pledge. Rev. Mr. Kerr abruptly closed his remarks, and after answering a few questions, was obliged to leave in order to catch the 9.18 P. M. train for Elizabeth. He was accorded a unanimous vote of thanks, and after a hymn was sung, the meeting adjourned.

Brought Suit for $41.50 and Got $5.50.

An action upon contract brought to recover $41.50 for board, nursing and money loaned, by John Cronin vs. Miss Alice McEwen, came up for trial before Justice Cole and a jury at Dunellen, Monday afternoon. Evidence was produced on both sides and the case was given to the jury about 5 o'clock in the afternoon. After a half-hour's deliberation the jury returned a verdict of $5.50 for the plaintiff, who was represented by Messrs Jackson & Codington of this city. Mr. W. A. Coddington appeared for the defense.

THE POVERTY'S FOURTH.

The Fourth Poverty Cotillon was given Monday night at the home of Mrs. Frank O. Herring, on Ninth street. The affair was as great a success as any of its predecessors, and owing to the fact that it was "progressive" and the gentlemen having a different partner at the end of each figure, rendered it the jolliest one of the series.

Music was by Austin of Brooklyn, and the supper by Mareei of New York.

Mr. Squires led the Cotillon with Miss Fairbairn, assisted by Mr. Waiz with Miss Hart.

Among those who participated were: Miss Flagg of New York, Miss Chapin of Providence, R. I., Miss Dumont of Brooklyn, Miss Fairbairn, Miss Howard, Miss Lina Hart, Miss Jessamy Hart, Miss Erickson, Miss Murray, Miss Massett, Miss Gardner, Miss Dorman, Miss Yates, Miss Streuli, Miss Stewart, Miss Corlies, Miss Murray, Mr. and Mrs. L. G. Timpson, Mr. Tompkins of Newark, Mr. Dumont of Brooklyn, Mr. Deshler of New Brunswick, Mr. F. W. Waiz, Mr. Geo. S. Beebe, Mr. Yates, Mr. Fairbairn, Mr. E. Louis Waiz, Mr. Howard W. Beebe, Mr. P. P. VanBuren, Mr. E. M. C. VanBuren, Mr. Streuli, Mr. Squires, Mr. Ackerman and Mr. Mumm.

AN AT HOME.

Tuesday evening from eight till eleven o'clock, Mr. and Mrs. B. A. Hegeman received a host of their invited friends at their home on Sycamore avenue. The best families of the city and Borough were all represented in the crowd that filled the rooms and halls.

Mr. and Mrs. Hegeman stood in the reception room of their handsome home, and most heartily received the guests, while Mr. and Mrs. B. Arrowsmith Hegeman, Jr., and Mr. and Mrs. William J. Roome, assisted in the warm welcome extended. During the early part of the evening, the occasion was graced by the presence of Mrs. Jane Roome, widow of Judge Roome and mother of Mrs. Hegeman, in the 86th year of her age.

Supper was furnished by Clark of New York, and pleasant orchestral music was rendered throughout the evening. About two hundred were served in the dining room. The floral decorations were especially fine. Among the guests were the following:

Mrs. John Gray Foster, Mrs. C. Mitchell, Misses Day, Mr. and Mrs. H. Moore, Miss S. R. VanWinkle, Mrs. Jane Roome, Miss Eleanor Roome, Mr. John L. Musgrave, Miss Musgrave, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Waring, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. White, Mr. George White, Misses White, Mr. and Mrs. Henry McGee, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Place, Miss Place, Judge and Mrs. Chas. Matthews, Mr. and Mrs. Shreve, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Chapman, Miss Richards, Miss Kate Kimball, Capt. Ostrom and wife, Mr. and Mrs. I. W. Pangborn, Miss Gardner, Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Demarest, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Coward, Rev. and Mrs. T. Logan Murphy, Mr. and Mrs. F. Church, Misses Embury, Mr. and Mrs. Loomis, Mr. and Mrs. D. N. Groendyke, Miss Lizzie P. Smith, Mrs. John Clapp, Misses Lloyd, Misses Boorman, Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds, Miss Reynolds, Mr. and Mrs. Broadway, Mr. and Mrs. H. Raymond Munger, Mr. and Mrs. James McGee, Misses McGee, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Roome, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Gardner, Miss Gardner, Mr. and Mrs. E. St. John, Mrs. Thompson, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Dupee, Mr. and Mrs. Henderson, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Force, Mr. and Mrs. P. P. VanArsdale, Mr. and Mrs. Henry C. Squires, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. H. Sampson, Mr. and Mrs. Israel Pierson, Miss Nettie Haviland, Mr. and Mrs. L. Lovell, Mr. and Mrs. W. Myers, Mr. and Mrs. Ginna, Mr. and Mrs. Theo. Miller, Miss Minnie Miller, Mr. D. VanVliet, Rev. C. L. Goodrich, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. R. Hegeman, Rev. E. P. Ketcham, Miss Beulah Ketcham, Rev. and Mrs. David J. Yerkes, Rev. and Mrs. W. R. Richards, Rev. and Mrs. Cornelius Schenck, Mr. and Mrs. J. K. Myers, Miss Scribner.

Their Fourth Grand Ball.

The members of the Park Avenue Social Club, will hold their fourth grand ball at The Crescent, Thursday evening, Feb. 21, (Washington's Birthday Eve.) The music will be furnished by Prof. Sause's full orchestra of New York. Tickets 50 cents, which can be had of the members.

Prize Fight at Scotch Plains.

It is reported that a prize fight took place at a well-known resort in Scotch Plains, on Saturday night. The participants are said to be young men from this city, both of whom were pretty badly used up. Five ounce gloves were used by the principals. No arrests were made.

A Meeting of the Oxford League.

The regular semi-monthly meeting of Oxford League of the M. E. church, was held in Vincent chapel, Friday night. The programme included a piano solo by Miss Emma McGee, a comic recitation by Miss Nellie Morrison and a violin and piano duett by Messrs. Clifford and Albert Martin.

A Lady Washington Tea.

The younger members of the Ladies' Auxiliary Society connected with the Church of the Holy Cross, North Plainfield, are making preparations for a "Lady Washington Tea and Musicale," which will be given in the Sunday School building on the evening of Feb. 22. The admission will be 50 cents, which will include supper.

Is Blaine to Visit Plainfield?

THE PRESS is informed that a letter addressed to the Hon. Jas. G. Blaine, next Secretary of State, has been received in this city directed to the care of Henry B. Wells, Esq., of Washington avenue, North Plainfield.

If the defeated President of 1884, and the defeated candidate of 1888, is coming to Plainfield, it should do him honor. Fall in, Ulrich Guards! Attention, Gep!

The Junior Prohibitionists Entertain.

The Junior Prohibition Club of this city had a collation at the home of Mr. Andrew Muir, on West Fourth street, Saturday evening.

The Club invited the Hope Chapel Temperance Society as its guests, and about 75 in all sat down to the feast of good things served by Mrs. Muir, Mrs. Meyers and Mrs. Case. Other social pleasures passed the evening pleasantly away until ten o'clock.

An Evening's Enjoyment.

An exceeding enjoyable evening sociable was held at the the home of Mr. Sumner Randolph, on Park avenue, Wednesday evening of last week. About 20 couple were present from this city, Westfield, Bound Brook and Evona. Prof. Reilly led the music for the dancing. During the evening a tempting supper was served. The Committee who carried out the successful affair, were: Miss Leoni Burdick, Miss Adele Randolph, Mr. J. E. Wyckoff and Mr. Horace Adams.

A Mad Dog Shot.

A black mongrel dog, showing symptoms of the rabies, was shot by Dr. F. S. Wells on Central avenue, Monday. The animal first attacked Mr. James Emory, and that gentleman was obliged to perch on a gate post to escape being bitten. Dr. Wells was passing at the time and the brute attacked him, and also a little girl who was near by. Fortunately no one was bitten, although several persons had a narrow escape. The animal was cornered in a dooryard and shot.

A Beautiful Floral Display.

The funeral of Mrs. Jules C. Bovey took place from her late home in North Plainfield, Sunday, whereat the Rev. T. Logan Murphy officiated, followed by services at the French church New York, and interment in Greenwood.

The services were all unusually impressive, while the display of flowers probably exceeded anything ever seen in this city. Among other pieces was a broken column, five feet high, with "Our Mother" on its base, made of orchids, violets, lilies of the valley and rose-buds; also a large pillow of purple lilacs, orchids, roses and lilies, and a wreath of the choicest selected flowers, worth almost their weight in gold, with the words "My Josie" in purple immortelles. These tokens were from the well-known establishment at 955 Broadway, of Mr. W. H. Brower of this city.

LOOK OUT FOR HER.

A middle-aged woman known by the name of Wooley, alias Brower, and a half dozen other aliases, is going about the streets of this city in open defiance of the law, and soliciting money. The woman's practice is to apply at a residence, tell a pitiful story of sickness and destitution at home, and finally wind up by asking for the loan of a dime, fifteen cents or a quarter—and in most instances she secures the money before leaving.

This same woman has been plying her vocation here for several weeks past, and she rarely ever tells the same story twice in succession. At one house she will say that her daughter is dangerously ill, and that she needs the money to buy medicine; at another place she will need just ten cents more to enable her to send a dispatch to her dying daughter in the West, and at still another house she wants a quarter so as to pay expressage on a package, which she alleges has been sent her by friends.

The woman is an impostor, and should be shunned like an adder. If she is worthy of help, let her secure it by proper means.

Y. M. C. A.

A little after eight o'clock, Friday P. M., about eighty sat down to the "Tea" which Mr. J. W. Gavett and the "Ladies' Nine" had provided at the Y. M. C. A., rooms. The gathering was for social enjoyment and for the further discussion of questions relating to the Association building, which it is proposed to erect in this city.

In the absence of the President, Mr. W. D. Murray, the duties of Chairman were pleasantly performed by Mr. H. O. Newman. After brief devotional exercises refreshments were served, interspersed with pithy remarks by Messrs George Newman of Orange, George Voorhees of Morristown and Prof. Wilber of New Brunswick.

Mr. Newman quoted statistics to show that the Orange Y. M. C. A., had increased its field of usefulness enormously by the erection of a proper building. Mr. Voorhees told of the new Y. M. C. A. building at Morristown, which cost $30,000, and is paid for. He said it was not big enough for the members that sought to use its privileges, the daily attendance having increased 300 per cent. since the opening of the building, only a few months ago. In reply to a question, he declared that the added revenue from rents and membership dues more than compensated for the greater expense of the new quarters.

Prof. Wilber's subject was "Gymnasiums," and he explained the use of this modern improvement in Y. M. C. A. work. "The gymnasium," he said, "is not for fun; not to train experts; not to make acrobats; it is to cultivate men's bodies so that their minds and souls may be better housed."

The Chairman of the standing committee gave reports of the prosperous condition of the regular association work. Several new subscriptions were announced by the canvassers for the building fund; and the statement that the Association was to receive $2,000 by the will of the late Mrs. Lattimer, was warmly applauded. The total amount now unconditionally subscribed toward the new building is $25,817. The assembly broke up about ten o'clock after a thoroughly enjoyable evening.

OBITUARY.

The sad news has just reached THE PRESS of the death of Charles G. Linner, one of a large family, well-known and highly esteemed in this city. He was born in Plainfield, Sept. 16, 1864, and died during Feb. 2, 1889, in the twenty-fifth year of his age.

Charles Linner received a serious injury during July last, while engaged in erecting a large building in Savannah, Ga. He was superintending the work, and was hurt by a large piece of timber falling and striking him on the shoulder, and breaking his collar bone. After a few weeks' illness he resumed his work, but unfortunately too soon, for in a short time he was compelled to take to his bed again. He continued to grow worse, till his wound showed it had taken effect in the lungs, and eventually developed into a severe type of consumption. This continued its slow, but sure work till the second day of February, about six o'clock in the morning, when the unfortunate young man breathed his last. He was the first to die of a family of several children, and leaves a father and mother, brothers and sisters, and many friends and relatives to mourn his loss.

A NORTH PLAINFIELD MAN SWINDLED.

Mr. L. A. Kline the flavoring extract manufacturer of Craig Place, North Plainfield, is the latest victim of a misplaced confidence. Mr. Kline, besides doing an extensive business in the extract line, enjoys a lucrative position with the Plainfield Gas Light Company.

Recently there appeared at the gas works, an elderly "gentleman" giving his name as "G. W. Taylor" who by his fluent talk soon won the confidence of Mr. Kline. The stranger declared that at one time he had worked with Mr. Kline in New York, and told several incidents which occurred at the time. He was now out of work, and wanted to act as traveling salesman in the extract line.

From outward appearance the man appeared to be all right, so Mr. Kline equipped him with a $25 outfit and a full line of samples, and started him out on the road. Soon afterward the orders began to roll in hand over fist, and cases of extracts were shipped to Elizabeth, South Amboy and numerous other places, but the money was not forthcoming.

Mr. Kline made an investigation and found that no such merchants did business at the addresses given in the orders, and he immediately stopped filling the orders received. It is supposed that the fellow had a confederate, who obtained the goods in the various towns, sold them and divided the proceeds with the agent.

INCENDIARIES NEAR BY.

One of the most bold and dastardly attempts at incendiarism which THE PRESS has had occasion to record of late, occurred a few evenings since, and, as in most cases of the kind, the perpetrator of the deed was allowed to escape, although dogs were put upon the trail, and traced the fugitive into a swamp where all signs of him was lost.

Mr. Wm. Lang, a son of ex-Mayor Lang of Newark, occupies a farm just North of this city. His family consists of himself, his wife and one child. A brother of Mrs. Lang is also stopping with the family. On the evening in question, while the family sat conversing pleasantly in the parlor, they detected the smell of smoke. An investigation followed, and on opening the door leading into the yard, Mr. Lang was surprised to see one corner of the house all in a blaze, and the flames fast eating their way to the roof. The other members of the household rushed to Mr. Lang's assistance, carrying pail after pail full of water. With almost superhuman strength, Mr. Lang fought the flames and at length sceeded in getting the fire under control and finally extinguishing it.

Then it was that the actions of two dogs chained near by, were noticed, and the vicious brutes were at once liberated and made a bee-line for a swamp and thicket a few hundred feet away. This was considered conclusive evidence that the fire was the work of an incendiary, and the men followed in the path of the dogs. Arriving at the edge of the thicket, the dogs were found to be terribly agitated, and were running around wildly. They had lost the trail, and the criminal was thus allowed to escape.

To add insult to injury and crime, Mr. Lang found in the morning that some of his pigs had been poisoned, evidently by the same person.

The only reason given for the dogs not giving an alarm is thought to be perhaps from the fact that the incendiary first fed meat to them, thus gaining his freedom to the door yard.

The matter has been kept a secret in the hope that the criminal might be hunted down. Suspicion rests on a certain person, but as yet the evidence is insufficient to warrant his arrest.

THE ILLSLEY DIVORCE SUIT.

At the examination of witnesses previously had in the suit of Illsley vs. Illsley for divorce several objections were made to the rulings of Special Master VanWinkle, upon the admission and rejection of evidence.

The first was an objection to the admission of certain letters published in THE PRESS, written by one signing herself "Nettie" which were stated to have been found in the defendant, Henry Illsley's, trunk. The defendant's Counsel objected to their admission. The Master admitted them in evidence and an appeal was taken to this ruling.

The next objection was to the ruling of the Master in striking out certain testimony as to what occurred after the commencement of the suit. Mr. Marsh, for the plaintiff, appealed from this decision of the Master.

The third objection was to the ruling out by the Master of a question put by complainant's Counsel to his own witness whether or not he had not made an affidavit of different effect previously. Mr. Marsh appealing also from this decision.

All the appeals were to be heard before the Chancellor on Feb. 4, at Jersey City. The result of the appeals was, first: "That the letters should be admitted, subject to be ruled out if upon cross-examination Mrs. Illsley fails to prove that she was acquainted with the handwriting of the writer "and that it is that of the party with whom criminality is alleged."

The second appeal was abandoned by Mr. Marsh. As to the third appeal the Master's decision was overruled and the question allowed to be put to the witness.

On Friday the taking of testimony was continued. The first witness was a young man aged 17 years, named James Stevens, who testified that in the Summer of 1886, he took Mr. Illsley in a carriage to Dunellen and back with a young lady. Witness didn't give her name. On cross-examination he admitted it was early in the evening, from 7 to 7½ o'clock, and light.

The next witness was Mrs. Westphal who failed to identify Mr. Illsley. She was dismissed from the witness stand without any cross-examination. The last witness was her husband, Mr. Westphal, who also failed to identify defendant. No cross-examination.

The further taking of evidence in the case at the request of Mr. Marsh, was then adjourned until Tuesday, 19th inst., at 10 A. M. So far nothing whatever has been produced to in any way incriminate Mr. Illsley.

The complainant is represented by Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh, and the defendant Henry Illsley, by Messrs Jackson & Codington of Plainfield, and Henry B. Cook, Esq., of New Brunswick.

Politics in the Borough.

The Councilmanic bee is already buzzing in the Borough, and at this early date the subject of the Spring election is eagerly discussed. The out-going Councilmen whose terms of office expire are Messrs McCutchen and Riker. Mayor Cooley's term will also expire, but he will in all probability be re-elected.

The annual election in North Plainfield will take place on Tuesday, March 12.

Measuring the Distances.

Mr. J. M. C. Marsh of Westfield Saturday commenced the work of measuring the distances from the stations to the post office buildings along the line of the New Jersey Central Railroad and its branches. The post office building must be located within a quarter of a mile of the station, in order to come under the list of offices included in the contract system. The work is done with a view of contracting it, and about six weeks' time will be required to complete it. The Plainfield office is just 1,215 feet from the railroad station.

That Washingtonville Sunday School.

On Thursday THE PRESS gave an account of the new chapel, which the residents of Washingtonville are about to erect, and also a short historical sketch of the Washingtonville Sunday school from its organization, about twenty-five years ago, up to the present time. The trustees of the new chapel have received a generous offer from Mr. John F. Wilson of North Plainfield, which they will in all probability accept.

Mr. Wilson offers to contribute $1,000 towards the erection of the new chapel, on condition that the chapel be named the "Mary E. Wilson Memorial."

A Difficulty Surmounted.

It is often very difficult to tell what kind of a laxative to give a very young child who is suffering from pain. The only medicine which is at the same time perfectly safe, effective, and pleasant to take, is HAMBURG FIGS. 25 cents. Dose, one fig. Mack Drug Co., N. Y. J. G. Miller, Agent, Plainfield.

1889.

Just time enough since the Holidays to take breath and settle down to business. We have been looking about a bit to see what others engaged in the same line of business as ourselves are saying and doing.

It's funny, to say the least, to read the announcements. Here's one who thinks he has a monopoly of all the good clothing made in the world; no clothing but his is fit to wear. Here's another who thinks his method of business the only proper one; all others are "dead" wrong. A third says his clothing is 30 per cent. cheaper than any other. All sorts of inducements are offered, on paper, to attract buyers.

What are we doing? Well we find that the old method of giving an honest dollar's worth for a dollar, without bragging, to be more popular than ever, judged by the growth of our business during 1888. We say this and know it to be true: Not a real point of advantage to be obtained anywhere will be forfeited by dealing with us. Our bid for your patronage for 1889 is the same which we have made for a quarter of a century.

Honest statements about our goods; garments perfect in fit; minute attention to all details connected with the manufacture; and prices which, comparing the goods, cannot be beaten. It will pay you to watch our announcements during the present year. It will save you not a little uncertaintw and a good deal of time and money to patronize us when in need of clothes for self or children.

DAVID DREW.

The Story of His Revenge—How It Was Obtained.

When young David, or "Dave," Drew came back from the "three months' service" in which he had enlisted at the beginning of our late war he found that his beloved sister, Annie, did not still regard him as the only and noblest man on earth.

A tight-built, lively, dashing sailor lad who was visiting a farmer relative near the Drew homestead had bewitched the pretty country girl, and she had struck her colors at first broadside from the battery of his bold eyes.

Drew found his sister devoted, [illegible] the two were almost orphans; but [illegible] had been promised a commission as Lieutenant provided he could secure a certain number of men for three years' enlistment, and he was busy day and night in drumming up recruits to fill his quota. So he saw little of Ned Jeffers, the sailor, and having succeeded in raising his command he proudly donned his shoulder-straps and sword and marched away, leaving Annie well provided for so far as regards worldly goods, but sadly in need of a watchful guard to keep away the arrows of Cupid.

The sailor found all plain sailing then. He made love fast and furious, as sailors will, and before he joined his ship Annie Drew had changed her name to Jeffers.

After the hard parting from her young husband the girl-wife wrote to her brother telling him all. [illegible] was by that time at the front; the letter was long in reaching him; his answer [illegible] satisfactory [illegible] still longer in reaching home, [illegible] it came at last and Annie was [illegible] as woman should be with all the [illegible] every danger of sea and land [illegible] war [illegible] her sailor-brother; she [illegible] her sailor-husband.

[illegible] there were the happiest days in the lives of the two, [illegible] after her first voyage and seven days' hard fighting [illegible] before Richmond, the young Lieutenant, resenting too fiercely a wrong put upon him by a superior officer, [illegible] himself liable to, and was, court-martialed and dismissed from the service. Broken-hearted and [illegible] he sought his home, only to find Annie equally deep in trouble, and, in the eyes of some, disgrace.

For one evening, when as she was busy writing a letter to her husband at sea, a young woman, a stranger, called upon her and exhibited ample, [illegible] proof that she was the wife of Ned Jeffers, lawfully married to him eighteen months before Annie ever met him. The [illegible] completely prostrated the poor girl; she gave up health and strength, [illegible] her brother [illegible] and [illegible] letting slip every hold upon life.

The ruined David Drew never realized the wrong done his sister was [illegible] that he felt over the injustice under which he himself had suffered and he [illegible] a deep and terrible vow of vengeance.

There was nothing that science or medicine could avail to give relief or permanent aid to the sad young wife, it was her heart, not her body, that was ailing—sick unto death with a sickness no earthly skill could cure. She was gentle as ever, her mind was [illegible] excuses for her husband, and [illegible] proved that he was not all bad, that he had been misled before, and with Annie [illegible] made him [illegible]. While Drew cursed, she [illegible] for each vow of vengeance that her brother [illegible], she breathed words of forgiveness towards the almost destroyer of her peace and life.

The end came soon; gladly [illegible] she died, with her last breath whispering, as she looked into the stern, set face and dry eyes of her brother:

"Forgive, forgive."

David Drew buried his dead by the side of his father and mother, in the little graveyard of the country church, he [illegible] the remains of all that had been left for him to

IT WAS NAN WARDEN [illegible]

[illegible]. He made short work then in disposing of the farm and all the property he owned, and with the proceeds, [illegible] considerable amount, he at once and forever left the neighborhood in which he had been born.

Up far and deep into the mountains went this hard, bitter man; old in misery and heart, scarce past manhood in years. He sought and found solitude, a deserted hunting lodge he made habitable and called it home, his time he passed in brooding over his wrongs and in hunting the wild beasts that still infested that locality, the fierce fighting giving an outlet to the passions that ever raged within him.

For continually the gnawing [illegible] upon him to seek and take terrible revenge upon the man who had wrecked the life of his sister, and then thought of her dying injunction, "Forgive, forgive," would come upon him, and he would seek a [illegible] of the woods in order that he might [illegible].

It was the second winter of the hermit-like life, to which he was growing more and more attached, when one evening, about dusk, David Drew heard [illegible] halloo in the distance.

There was a deep snow upon the ground, and had been for a week, landmarks were indistinguishable, fences were covered and, except the forest trees and roofs of buildings, little could be seen. Drew at once understood that some unfortunate was lost, and he started at once to the rescue. It was hard work making his way through the deep drifts, and when about a mile from his home he found a heavy [illegible] sunk in the sleep of exhaustion, it was far harder work to carry the senseless body back to shelter and safety. This was, however, finally effected, and once in his cabin, the door closed and a roaring fire made, Drew went actively and intelligently to reviving the stranger. It was no easy task, but patient labor and proper means at last restored the man.

He was given to eat and to drink. He was a strong, burly fellow, full of vitality, and soon able to sit up and render an account of himself. The story was as might be supposed: He was traveling, had left the stage to walk a mile to the friend's house he wished to find; he was a stranger and had "lost his bearings."

Drew did not like the expression "lost his bearings," it savored of the sea, and every thing relating to sailor life was hateful to him. He scowled upon his guest, who with fatigue and the drink he had been taking, was again growing drowsy.

"Are you—have you been a sailor?" asked Drew of the man.

The stranger, eyes shut, nodded a sleepy assent.

"What—what might your name be, stranger?" said Drew slowly, and breathing breathlessly—he knew not why he felt so anxious—for the answer.

Slowly it came:

"Ed—ward Jeff—ers," and then the head of the stranger sank upon his breast in deathlike slumber.

David Drew rose up in kingly wrath; cold, merciless and steel-like were his eyes, his muscles and his heart.

This was the man whose dastard deed had given his gentle sister her death-blow. This was the man that he, David Drew, had sworn to kill.

"Forgive—forgive," Annie had prayed him, with lips and eyes, with her words and last glances, ere she quit this earth.

But he had never promised, never! No word had he ever answered to her prayer. True, he had never sought the man out, as he at first intended, in order to watch over guests. In very truth he had cursed himself and struggled with his hatred in order to try and regard her wishes.

But now!

Now the Lord had delivered his enemy into his hand!

He wondered that he had not recognized the man, but then—the man had not recognized him. So much the better.

He would have killed him as he slumbered, but his manhood revolted from that, and, besides, it would be no satisfaction to have his enemy die and not know by whose hand and for what.

Drew shook the stranger roughly, shook him until the man was wide awake and even disposed to complain of such treatment.

"Stand up!" said Drew. "Are you armed?"

"I have my sheath knife," answered the sailor; "do you mean to rob me?"

"I mean to take from you what you take from others. I give you a chance, though, your knife against mine, but I'll take your life!"

"But why; what does this mean?"

"My name is David Drew!"

And David Drew's eyes blazed with the brightest fires of rage, hate and murder as he threw himself toward the white-faced, conscience-stricken man, who in first astonishment dropped the knife from his nerveless hand, then, a coward for the first time in his life, turned with a yell and darted out from the unfastened door.

That was a terrible race for life, through the dark woods and out into the light given by what openings, under the quiet starlight, out in that wide, wide, white solitude. Two men only within miles of space, one pursued, flying for his life; one pursuing, thirsting for the other's blood.

Like animals they doubled and crossed and tried to capture or avoid the enemy, which was sometimes over waist deep, but they dashed into and through it as though it had been summer dust beneath their feet. How long the chase continued neither knew, and eternity it was to one guilty soul, and then the end came.

He dashed against a hidden fence; he was down, crushed, bleeding, and kneeling over him, panting, gloating, exulting, with keen knife raised for the fatal blow, was the brother of the woman he wronged.

"I swore it! I swore I'd have your life for hers; your life for Annie's!" gasped David Drew, and his fingers clutched the knife more closely.

"Forgive—forgive," gasped the poor, pale wretch.

The words were little more than a whisper.

David Drew paused as they fell upon his ear; slowly, very slowly a change came upon his face, and as it grew his grasp relaxed on the throat of his victim and on the haft of his knife; then his arm fell. In a minute he rose from beside the man and aided the latter to regain his feet.

"Come!"

He led the way back to his cabin; he placed food once more before the stranger and motioned that they eat bread together.

That, at last, was David Drew's revenge.

There are two old men live in that cabin, and people say they have lived there together for twenty years. The taller, David, as he is called, seems rather weak-minded and mutters much to himself of "Annie," and about "forgiveness" and "revenge." They have plenty of neighbors now, for the country has grown in population, but the shorter, thickest man, known as Ned, is the admiration of all for the tender, watchful care he takes of his companion. They say little to each other, nothing hardly to any one else, few know their story, but those who do point at the comradeship as "David Drew's Revenge."

ALEX. DUKE B[illegible].

A Witty Retort.

A colored minister visiting a religious conference in Detroit was requested by the waiter of a hotel to leave the table at which he was seated and follow him into a side room, where tables were set.

"You will eat here, if you please," said the waiter, seating the guest at a table.

"What is this room?" asked the preacher.

"It is the ordinary; colored guests are always seated here."

"Then it is extra-ordinary," was the witty answer of the guest of color.

He Liked Them.

At the Cadillac Hotel, in Detroit, Mich., they use toothpicks which have been flavored with cinnamon. One day a country fellow ate about a dozen while waiting for his order. When the waiter came in he said to him: "Fetch me another lot of them cinnamon slivers. I hain't tasted enny thing so good since mam died."

NAN.

"Now, Nan," Mrs. Green said, putting on her big black sun-bonnet and gathering up a basket-ful of pies, cakes and baked chickens, "I'm goin' along with Hiram over to Miss Mason's house-raisin', an' I want you to be good while I'm away, an' not go to tom-boyin' about like somethin' possessed. It ain't wise to be climbin' trees, an', besides, you're liable to fall out an' break your neck. Remember, it was only last week that you fell out of the barn-loft with a lapful of eggs, an' came nigh killin' yourself an' spilt a brand-new calico gown into the bargain. Try to behave to-day, an' see if you won't feel better for it to-night."

"Yes'm, I will," Nan replied, demurely, and for the time she was sincere, for Mrs. Green spoke so kindly that Nan felt she ought to do any thing to please the good old lady, and that she could not be so bad as to forget her parting injunctions.

In the timbered portions of the Western country house-raisings were quite common a few years ago, and the custom was a great convenience, for the people were generally poor and had little money to spend for improvements. When a man decided to build a house he went into the woods and chopped long, straight logs, which he afterwards dragged to the building site with a pair of oxen and a lizard. A lizard was a short tree fork used as a sled, on to which the large end of a log was tied, while the smaller end was left to drag on the ground behind. When the logs were all duly deposited in piles around the spot where the new house was to stand, the neighbor men, far and near, were invited to give a day to raising the building, which they cheerfully did, for most of them considered it capital sport, and, besides, they were apt to need some like service themselves. The raising consisted of rolling the logs up and notching them down at the corners so that they fit solidly together, pen fashion, thus forming the four walls of the house.

A day was sufficient for this and usually long before night the raising was all completed, and the roof of split boards laid on and weighted down with heavy poles, so that the owner had only to saw out doors and windows, and chink up the cracks between the logs, to have his house completed and ready for occupancy. The whole work comprised, generally, less than a week's time, and was accomplished without a cent of expense for material or labor, and without the use of a single nail.

Mrs. Mason was a widow lady and very poor, so not only the men came to build her house, but many of the neighbor women came with baskets of cooked provisions to help her about the dinner, and Mrs. Green was one of the number, for, kind-hearted old soul that she was, she never allowed an opportunity to do good to pass her unimproved.

Nan was just Mrs. Green's child, but an orphan whom she had taken out of charity, and a reckless, harum-scarum creature she was. She tired the good old lady's patience sorely sometimes, and though she afterwards felt ashamed of it and resolved to be better, she found it hard to break off the bad habits and settle down to quiet ways.

For an hour or so after Mrs. Green and Hiram were out of sight Nan remained in the house and was a model of good behavior, but at last restraint became irksome and she began to long for a romp out doors.

Now, there was a large hornet's nest in a tree down by the orchard fence, and for several days Nan had been "itching" to know more about it than she could see from the ground. True, Mrs. Green had told her about the hornets and how bad they were to fight any intruder, but all that only seemed to sharpen Nan's curiosity and make her the more anxious to see for herself. As she sat in the house alone twisting nervously about in her chair, the remembrance of that hornet nest came into her mind, and the thought struck her that it would be a capital time to investigate it.

In the pleasure of the thought she soon forgot all about Mrs. Green and her admonitions, and in a moment more was on her way to the orchard with the two big farm dogs at her heels.

The tree had limbs growing almost to the ground, so Nan found no difficulty in climbing it, and in a little while she was out on the branch where the nest hung. Not a hornet was in sight, and Nan decided that the nest was abandoned. Reaching far out, she held on with one hand, while with the other she grasped the frail support and tore the coveted prize from the limb and let it fall to the ground. The two dogs sat below, looking anxiously up, and when they saw the nest fall they made a simultaneous rush for it, and before it touched the ground they had it torn asunder; but the contest was short, for suddenly, with a fearful yelping and ears laid back and tails tucked close between their legs, the two dogs vanished among the tall weeds. At the same time, a sow and twelve pigs that lay basking in the warm sunshine at the foot of the tree became animated, and, setting up a series of piercing squeals, trotted off, wriggling their tails and twisting their bodies from side to side.

Nan watched the proceeding from her perch in the tree and laughed so heartily at it that she came near losing her balance and falling to the ground. Scarcely had she regained her footing when a large hornet struck her just above the eye with such force and pain that she was once more on the point of falling out. Two other stings followed in quick succession, and Nan felt that it was high time to begin to get out of their reach, if possible.

She crawled backward down the limb and had almost reached the trunk of the tree when a small twig on which her foot rested broke beneath her weight and she fell to the bough below, where her dress caught, and she hung suspended with her head down, while the angry hornets buzzed around her, leaving at least a half-dozen painful reminders of their presence on her person.

A half hour passed thus, though to Nan it seemed an age, and she began to wonder if she would ever survive it, and if she did how long she would remain there before any one came to help her. It was not later than ten o'clock, and Mr. and Mrs. Green would not be back before night. Her only hope of help was from some who might pass the road that ran close along the fence, but the road was not much used and travelers were few and far between, and a whole half day might pass before any one came by that way.

As Nan recalled all this and realized how slim her chances of succor were, she gave one more struggle to free herself, and finding it fruitless, she broke down and cried. After crying awhile she stopped and commenced to abuse herself for disregarding Mrs. Green's requests, and in her agony of mind and body she moaned:

"Oh, why can't I never behave like I ought, and be good like other children! If I ever git out o' this scrape alive, I'll never, never, disobey again. But I'll never live over it. Oh, my! but I need a good 'lickin',' an' if it was lots o' people I had to deal with I'd ketch it, too. I s'pose I ought to pray, but I don't know how, an' I hurt so bad. There, thank the Lord, somebody is comin'," and Nan twisted her head around so as to look down the road when she heard the approach of a horse's footfalls, but her newly-raised hope died out, for it was only a loose horse, and he passed on with just one careless glance in the direction of the unhappy girl.

Then all was quiet again, and the minutes dragged by like hours while the justly-enraged hornets buzzed about below. Then there came the rumble of wagon wheels far down the road and Nan waited and listened anxiously for its approach. A minute passed and there appeared over the brow of the hill the heads of two horses, followed a moment later by a rickety old wagon, with a great tall chicken-coop in the rear end of the bed, out of which stuck the heads of three or four dozen chickens, while in front sat the driver, a tall, rawboned individual of a neglected appearance, whose dress and manners corresponded perfectly with his calling. Nan recognized the driver, for she had often seen him when he made his weekly calls to buy Mrs. Green's marketing, and when he came opposite her she called: "O Rube, come and help me."

"HELP ME DOWN QUICK, RUBE!"

Rube whoad his horses, and they promptly stopped short on the first invitation, for there was but one thing they liked better than stopping, and that one thing was eating, though from appearances one would have inferred that they had done but little of the latter for a long time.

"Wal, yer a pooty mess o' pickles," Rube said, surveying Nan leisurely from his seat in the wagon. "Say, what on yearth air you a doin' up thar, anyhow."

Nan told her story as best she could under the circumstances, and ended by saying:

"Help me down quick, Rube, for I'm most killed."

But the huckster was in no hurry to come to her aid, and with a provoking calmness he lay back in his seat while a broad grin broke over his features. Nan plead and begged, but Rube remained imperturbable and looked on with the air of one who was enjoying some pleasant sight.

"Oh, Rube, don't be so mean. Come on, please."

"Begosh, I'd a loved to seen them hornets arter you, for I know it must a been fun."

"Why don't you help me, Rube?"

"Say, I reckon you've clean forgot erbout that day when you let my chickens outen the coop up to the house thar while I was settlin' with Miss Green for her marketin'?"

"No, I hain't, an' I've been sorry for it ever since."

"Yes, I reckon so. I guess yer mougthy sorry now. I think I'd be of I was you, but yer won't be sorry none when yer git down from thar, will ye? Leastwise not longer than till yer git a chance ter do it ergin. I guess yer mout es well stay sorry while yer at it, so I'll jist leave you up thar. G'long, Bill, git up, Jack," and the skinny old horses took three or four reluctant steps forward.

"Rube, Rube," Nan wailed, "don't leave me, an' I'll promise any thing an' never will be bad again."

Rube whoad once more.

"Air ye shore of that?" he asked.

"Yes, I am. I never, never will turn your chickens out or do nothin' mean if you'll only just help me down."

"I'm most afeard to trust you," and Rube shambled down out of the wagon, and came up to the fence, "and aside," he added, "I aint no wise anxious to git mixed up with them thar hornets. How am I goin' ter help yer anyhow?"

"Climb up," Nan suggested.

"Not much I won't, an' git stung ter pieces. Them dratted hornets is pisen ter me, an' I wouldn't be stung by one ov 'em for my best hoss. I aint goin' ter git in thar among 'em."

"Then how will you manage?"

"Dunno, I'm shore, less'n I jest let yer alone. Mebby I might punch yer loose with er pole an' let yer fall. Tain't no distance to ther ground, an' it won't hurt you none."

Hunting around he finally found a long pole, and slipping noiselessly up to the tree-trunk on the side opposite to the hornets' nest, he began to punch at Nan's dress, and after a few efforts succeeded in loosening her, and she fell to the ground and escaped with one or two additional stings.

As Rube turned away from the tree he received a parting salute square in the back of the neck from a hornet, which so excited him that he tumbled over the fence head foremost, and came up about the maddest man anybody ever saw. He looked around for Nan, determined to vent his ire on the cause of all the trouble, but she had taken a near cut across the orchard and was already half way to the house. All Rube could do was to climb up in his seat and give the innocent horses a vicious cut with his whip as he started on.

It was a good many days before Nan got over the effects of her escapade, and her face came back to its natural condition, but it was a much longer time before her mind was free from the terrible remembrance of it, and if she was not a better girl afterwards, she certainly ought to have been, for her punishment was truly severe.

Z. L. WHITE.

The Noted Newspaper Correspondent Recently Deceased—A Man Who Worked His Way to the Front in His Profession.

The late Z. L. White, who died in Nassau, New Providence, the other day, was one of the most remarkable men who ever rose to prominence as a newspaper correspondent at Washington. He was born in Northfield, Mass., in 1842. His parents being very poor were unable to give him an education, but he earned it for himself by working in a foundry and on a farm to get the money to pay his way through Tuft's College. In 1867 he became a reporter on the New York Tribune, with which paper he was identified all his life until 1880, when he accepted the editorship of the Providence Press. He was a man of naturally judicial cast of mind, very fair-minded, cool and clear in his judgment, accurate in his grasp of facts, and a writer of force and precision.

Z. L. WHITE.

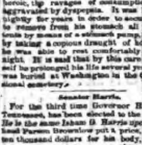
As a news-getter he was famous. He got a copy of the Washington treaty in 1872 in advance of its official publication and printed it in the Tribune. Thereupon the Senate arrested him and Mr. H. J. Ramsdell, his associate on the Tribune staff, and for several days they were kept confined as prisoners in a Senate committee room. His health began to break down long before he resigned the Tribune work and he made long journeys through the West, up and down the Rocky mountains, to build up his constitution; but all the time writing very interesting letters, describing the county through which he went, and the occupations of the people. Some of the most important of his work was done in describing the Granger movement and the political disturbances in the South.

His management of the Providence Press made it a good paper. During the past two years he had been engaged in magazine work chiefly. His fight for life was heroic, the ravages of consumption being aggravated by dyspepsia. It was his habit nightly for years in order to secure sleep to remove from his stomach all its contents by means of a stomach pump, and then by taking a copious draught of hot water he was able to rest comfortably for the night. It is said that by this care of himself he prolonged his life several years. He was buried at Washington in the Congressional cemetery.

Senator Harris.

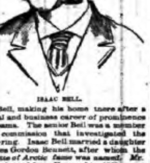
For the third time Governor Harris, of Tennessee, has been elected to the Senate. He is the same Isham G. Harris upon whose head Parson Brownlow put a price, offering ten thousand dollars for his body, dead or alive. This made it necessary for him to live in Mexico for two years at the close and just after the war. He was born in the old republic of Franklin, and began to practice law nearly fifty years ago. He was elected to Congress in 1849, and served two terms, declining a nomination for a third. For six years he was Governor of Tennessee. He is one of the best parliamentarians in the Senate, and is very often called to the chair. Governor Harris is a great stickler for forms, and corresponds on the Democratic side of the chamber to Senator Edmunds on the Republican side. He is of the old school, courtly, gracious and affable.



SENATOR HARRIS.

The Late Isaac Bell.

The late Isaac Bell, ex-United States Minister to the Netherlands, lost his life by participating in a campaign parade. He was born in New York City, his father,



ISAAC BELL.

Isaac Bell, making his home there after a political and business career of prominence in Alabama. The senior Bell was a member of the commission that investigated the Tweed ring. Isaac Bell married a daughter of James Gordon Bennett, after whom the Jeannette of Arctic fame was named. Mr. Bell graduated from Harvard in 1868, spent several years in travel, and after his marriage made his home at Newport, R. I. President Cleveland appointed him Minister to the Netherlands, and he made a treaty with that country regulating the entry of Sumatra tobacco into this country. He was a Presidential elector and could not vote in the Electoral College on account of his illness. He was a member of a number of prominent clubs.

A Lack of Business Sense.

Candid friend (to young author)—Your story is a good one, I admit, Edgar; but you never can make much money out of it without considerable alterations.

Edgar—Why, what's wrong?

Candid friend—You should have your hero dine at Topitoff's, wear only the clothes made by Shoarym, take a box at Blowhard's Theater, and drink exclusively the wines imported by Fuddleton. Always use the names that will bring you money, my boy.—Judge.

A Buffalo clergyman wants prayer and psalm between the acts at the theaters; but most theater-goers say plays are good enough for them.

A BELATED LETTER.

It Lost John Miller a Wife, and Turned the Current of Two Lives.

Janet Russell was the belle of the village, a Canadian village on the St. Lawrence, and was admired by all the swains who dwelt in those parts, but her "steady company" was a handsome young fellow, John Miller, son of the village postmaster, who also kept a general store. John and Janet, says the Detroit Free Press, went together to a rustic frolic one night, and on the road John asked the old question, which was answered in the affirmative. Things went nicely, but at last, Janet dancing twice in succession with a young fellow whom he had looked upon as a rival, John felt bad, and so the way home sharp words passed between them. The girl told him she wished it had been Charley Hall (the rival) who had asked her the question before mentioned, whereat John said he would give her a day to take that back, and if not—why, all was over between them. Janet relented when she had time to think about it, and the next morning wrote a note to John and dropped it into the letter-box at old Mr. Miller's store.

Time passed on. A year or so after that Charley Hall and Janet Russell were married, and John Miller was wedded to another girl. Some five years passed and old Mr. Miller died, leaving his property and his store to his son, who at once set about making improvements. And it so happened that the day the old letter-box was broken up, Mrs. Hall, accompanied by her eldest daughter, four years old, was in the store. A letter dropped to the floor; a workman picked it up, and with the remark: "Here's an old letter addressed to you, Mr. Miller," passed it to John. At that moment he was talking to his old sweetheart.

He took the letter and turned it over and over in his hand. As Janet's eyes fell on it she blushed. John opened the note and read it, then he handed it to Janet with a bow and the words: "That has been in the box ever since the day after we went to the dance at Turner's. Ah, Janet, if I had only known!" Mrs. Hall took her child by the hand and went home without a word. Janet's poor little note had been caught and concealed for nearly six years, and had changed the current of two lives, but for better or worse who can tell?

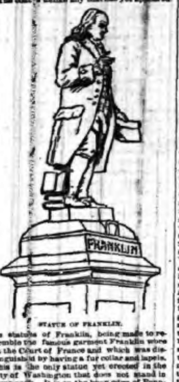
BEN FRANKLIN.

Mr. Hutchins's Tribute to the Memory of a Great American.

Mr. Stilson Hutchins has signalized his retirement from newspaper life by erecting in the triangle in front of the Daily Post building in Washington a fine marble statue of Benjamin Franklin which was unveiled on the old philosopher's one hundred and eighty third birthday. The United States flag which had been wrapped about the figure was removed by Mrs. General Emory, who is a great granddaughter of Franklin. The statue is heroic in size, cut out of Carrara marble, standing on a pedestal of Massachusetts granite. The entire height of pedestal and figure is nineteen feet and eight inches. The statue was designed by Plassman, who modeled and cast the statue of Franklin in Printing House Square in New York.

The figure is somewhat different. Franklin's right hand is uplifted in the attitude of conversation and in his left hand is a scroll. The coat is unlike any that has yet appeared on statues of Franklin, being made to resemble the famous garment Franklin wore at the Court of France and which was distinguished by having a fur collar and lapels. This is the only statue yet erected in the city of Washington that does not stand in some park. It is on the busy edge of Pennsylvania avenue, where the passing tide of pedestrians surges day after day. It is the gift of Mr. Hutchins to the city and bears an inscription recognizing the fact.



STATUE OF FRANKLIN.

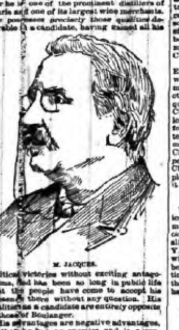
BOULANGER'S OPPONENT.

Sketch of the Man Who Was Defeated by Boulanger in the Recent Election in France.

M. Jacques, the candidate of the Republicans who opposed Boulanger, is a native of Paris, much the senior of General Boulanger, being fifty-five years of age. For eighteen years he has been a member of the general council and for several years its president. He is a man of fine physique, tall, well formed and muscular. His physiognomy is especially pleasing. It stands out in bold relief, placid, gentle and placating, characteristics all true to the man within.

His grizzled mustache gives a certain firmness of expression to his otherwise too-smiling visage. M. Jacques is a man of decided amiability, somewhat patronizing in his manner, and abounding always in good humor.

He has had the thrift and foresight to make a snug fortune out of his distillery, for he is one of the prominent distillers of Paris and one of its largest wine merchants. He possesses precisely those qualities desirable in a candidate, having gained all his political victories without exciting antagonisms, and has been so long in public life that the people have come to accept his presence there without any question. His qualities as a candidate are entirely opposite to those of Boulanger.



M. JACQUES.

His advantages are negative advantages, in that he has no enemies, and is a conservative, safe and reasonable man to support. M. Jacques was not brought out as a candidate for Deputy so much on account of his own merit as for the sake of beating Boulanger. The cry in France of late has been, as it was in our country some years ago during the life of General Grant, any thing to beat Boulanger.

The Girl of It.

"I understand that you are taking banjo lessons," remarked Gulloys, in an unguarded moment, to Miss Livingston-Read.

"Oh, yes," she exclaimed, enthusiastically; "do let me get the banjo and show you. Four of the strings are broke now, but I guess I can play well enough on the one string to show you how much I know. The only trouble is, you see, in tuning. I have to get this string an octave lower than this other one, and as this other one is broken I'll have to give it up after all. You don't mind, do you?"

"Oh, no," said Gulloys, fervently.—Judge.

No Pitchers to Be Had.

She—Just now when I told the crockery merchant that I wanted to buy a pitcher, he said that the season was over and all of them had been sold.

He—That fellow is not a crockery merchant—he's a director of the league.—Time.

Pat's Reply.

An Irishman was trundling a squeaky wheelbarrow, when his boss said:

"Pat, why don't you oil your buggy? I don't like to hear such a dismal tone."

"Faith," replied Pat, "it's only a barry-tone."—Arcola Record.

CHINESE DETECTIVES.

Confessions Elicited by Torture and Other Cruel Means.

Shrewd Methods Sometimes Employed by Mongolian Magistrates for Entrapping a Guilty Party—Superstition a Powerful Ally in Many Cases.

The Chinese possess no organized detective force, though the officials sometimes visit in disguise the scene of a notable crime for the purpose of making inquiries, and police spies are often locked up with remanded prisoners to try to worm out their secrets. The lower classes being intensely superstitious, the judicial investigation of crime usually takes place at night. The judgment hall, as described by a writer in Chambers' Journal, is a lofty building of wood, unceiled and bare of furniture save for the raised dais at the north end, where is seated the presiding magistrate, attended by his secretaries, clerks and lictors. The only light comes from paper lanterns or cotton wicks in oil cups, which but serve to bring into prominence the weird shadows flitting about the corners and lurking among the woodwork of the roof. Silence prevails, the few spectators watching the proceedings standing like statues. The accused, dragged from the darkness and filth of a Chinese prison, is forced to kneel before the judgment seat throughout the trial. Weakened by ill-treatment and appalled by his own superstitious imaginings, he often requires only a little judicious terrorizing to elicit a full confession of his guilt. If he prove obdurate, witnesses are called. From these no oath or affirmation is demanded, the breaking of a saucer and other forms for administering an oath to a Chinaman laid down in English law-books being quite unknown in Chinese courts. Any hesitation or refusal to answer the magistrate's questions—for he is judge, jury and crown prosecutor all in one, and no counsel for the defense is allowed—is punished by slaps on the cheek or the application of the bamboo to the thighs, and similar penalties more severely administered check the giving of false testimony. Should the prisoner, in face of strong evidence, persist in denying his guilt, various persuasive measures are resorted to, such as forcing him to kneel on chains, hanging him up by the thumbs or suspending him by the neck in a wooden frame so that his toes just touch the ground. All such tortures are illegal, but a confession has to be obtained somehow before sentence can be passed, and cases are many and the time for settling them short. Seldom can the stoutest rogue, or, alas! innocent man, hold out against such treatment continued throughout the night, and renewed, if necessary, again and again.

When two or more persons are equally suspected of theft or the like, the magistrates often show great ingenuity in detecting the guilty. In cross-examination they are peculiarly skillful in obtaining damaging admissions, their suave manner deceiving the accused as to the importance of the point they inquire about so carelessly. Two instances of extra-judicial methods for ascertaining the culprit among many equally under suspicion deserve to be recorded for their cleverness. Some balls of opium taken from a piratical junk by a revenue cruiser mysteriously disappeared while being transferred to the latter vessel. Opium is very precious in China, and a ball is easily split up and secreted in the wide sleeves or the voluminous waistband of a Chinese sailor. The commander of the vessel was loth to institute a search of the ship and crew, knowing well the craftiness of his men, and that even if found the opium would most probably be in the bundle of some innocent man. He therefore resorted to a plan as simple as it proved effective. In his cabin was, as is usual, a shrine of the Goddess of Mercy and of the Chinese Neptune. Before these deities he instituted a solemn service, which was prolonged till evening. When night fell he mustered the crew and called them one by one into the dimly-lighted cabin. Here each man had to make solemn declaration of his innocence, kneeling before the images, and, dipping his finger in a saucer of water, to smear his face all over, being warned that, if he were guilty, the divinities would make his face appear streaked with black. When the thief's turn came, he tried to outwit the gods by rubbing his finger on the bottom of the saucer; but, to his horror, when he reached the light, his face was all over black marks, the wily commander having held the saucer over a lamp before commencing the experiment.

In another case, where several servants were suspected of theft, each man was given a bamboo of the same length, marked with his name, which had to be deposited in an urn before a small shrine in the outer prison where they were confined. The officer announced that the culprit's rod would grow, by interposition of providence, one inch during the night. The prisoners were then locked up, no watch being kept on the urn. On the reassembling of the court one rod was found to be an inch shorter than the rest, as the thief had under cover of the darkness endeavored to circumvent the supposed divine power by biting a bit off his rod.

When any article disappears from a private house and one of the inmates is suspected of purloining it, it is usual, before having recourse to the magistrate, whose underlings exact huge fees for doing any thing, or nothing, to call in a priest and hold a communion service. This consists in invoking the evil spirits and bribing them by offerings and music to hound the culprit to death within the year. It continues for three days and nights—if the terrified thief does not confess and make restitution before that time, a result very frequently achieved. Europeans living in China have tried this method, but not with much success, as the gonging and other discordant sounds which constitute the "music," so effectually drive away sleep that the neighboring foreigners insist on its being intermitted during the night, and, so say the Chinese, spoil the charm.

Of late years Chinese newspapers on the European model have been started, and are well supported in the matter of advertisements. So now, the loser of bank notes or other portable property can, and very frequently does, announce his loss in good Chinese in the columns of one of the three leading dailies, offering suitable rewards for the recovery of his property and the detection of the thief. The European settlement at Shanghai alone of all the towns of China employs regular detectives at the expense of the rate-payers. When, if ever, the Chinese Government will follow the example set them by this "western" community it is impossible to predict.

Wealthy American Towns.

The wealthiest town of its size in America is Brookline, Mass., of which the assessment valuation is $[illegible],454,028. The distinction claimed for Brookline has been generally supposed to belong to Canajoharie, N. Y. The village is very small in comparison with the Massachusetts town, and the number of residents there, who are many, many times millionaires, is considerably greater than can be counted on the fingers of both hands.

GREENBRIAR GHOST.

WHY had Celia refused to take me into the attic rooms, and why had she said in such a strange manner that "it was getting dusk and we must go below?"

This was my first visit to Greenbriar, a gloomy old place some miles from the city, which uncle had obtained at a bargain because of its reputation as being the abiding place of a "real ghost." And Cousin Celia had been showing me the house, but stopped short on the landing, refusing to go further.

Now, Uncle Remus, with his whole family, disbelieved in spiritual manifestations with a vengeance. Certainly, then, Celia was not cowardly. No! there were other reasons for her peculiar air as she preceded me down the narrow flight of shadowy stairs to the hall below. I was certain of it; my curiosity was aroused, I was sure a mystery existed somewhere above the third floor, and I soon found myself planning to investigate the matter, even if I had to visit the apartment by night.

The family residing there, and of whom Uncle Remus purchased the property, could explain the mysterious sounds they heard, but had said that "once a very wicked man lived there, who, after receiving a visit from his brother, a wealthy man of the East, suddenly went away, none knew whither. After that the house and grounds were held for sale through an agent."

How true this story was I did not know nor care. My relatives "pooh-poohed" the whole of it, as well as the visitations, and why should I concern myself in the matter? I only wished to find out the reason for Celia's strange manner, and to see the contents of the garret chambers, and this I was determined to do, by some hook or crook of fortune.

And fate was unexpectedly and unkindly kind—if I may express it that way—sooner than I dared to hope.

It was evening. Celia and I were under the trees, loitering about in the twilight, discussing plans for the morrow, when a man crossed the lawn and doffing his cap to her said:

"There has been an accident over at the Meadows this afternoon, Miss Lisle. Mrs. Glynford desires you to come over if you can; it's her husband who is hurt, ma'am, in a runaway."

Now, Mrs. Glynford was an especial friend, and of course Celia must go. She looked at me. "Go," said I, thinking of the third story; "go, by all means, for I shall get along nicely. I shall write to mamma or read to Aunt Lucia, or, tiring of both, retire."

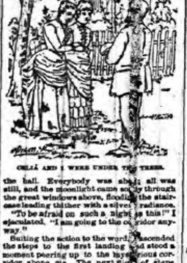
She kissed me fervently at this, and ran off to make ready for her good Samaritan call. Presently she came back. "Flossie," she said, "don't take it into your head to explore the garret chambers while I am gone; it wouldn't be pleasant to go wandering about a lot of cold, silent apartments in the night" (I fancied she shivered), "besides, mamma doesn't approve of lights being carried through the house; afraid of a conflagration, you know." And she laughed nervously.

I concluded to dissemble. "Do you imagine I am brave enough to stalk that 'ghost' alone, in the night watches?" I asked. "Rest assured that I shall keep below."

This satisfied her, and she walked away toward the house once more. I staid under the trees until ten o'clock; then I went to my room. As I laid my watch in its case I fell to musing.

It seemed to me that my cousin had weightier reasons for not taking me to those chambers; or else was over particular, indeed.

My rooms were on the ground floor. What harm would there be in my going to the upper floor and, perhaps, walking the length of the corridor! None. I peeped out into the hall. Everybody was abed; all was still, and the moonlight came softly through the great windows above, flooding the staircase leading thither with a silver radiance.



CELIA AND I WERE UNDER THE TREES.

"To be afraid on such a night as this!" I ejaculated. "I am going to the corridor anyway."

Suiting the action to the word, I ascended the steps to the first landing and stood a moment peering up to the mysterious corridor above me. The next flight of steps was not long and soon I found myself on the next floor—on the forbidden ground!

Three narrow windows lighted up this lonely, silent place rather dimly near the landing where I stood, while the other end of the empty corridor was dark. "Well," I said, "this isn't interesting; in spite of Aunt Lucia, I believe I will bring my lamp."

As I turned to go down I caught sight of the gleam of lamp-light shining out across the polished floor of the corridor from under the door of one of the unexplored chambers.

Celia had given me to understand that no one occupied this floor and that the rooms were not even furnished. Suddenly it dawned upon me that I had come to the mystery!

Seized with a startling impression of danger, I started hastily down-stairs, hoping to reach my own apartments before being discovered.

But, before I had descended three steps, the door above opened and a stout-looking man came out, dragging something after him. Instead of rushing away to my rooms I stood rooted to the spot by a curious feeling, as if I were not myself, but another.

Slowly and laboriously the man came down the corridor toward me with his burden. As he drew near I shrank back in horror; he was half carrying, half dragging the lifeless body of a murdered victim—murdered, I knew, by the gaping wound in his throat, from which the blood still trickled down. I saw it plainly as he passed me in the moonlight on the landing. I held my breath; what next? Would the stout, villainous-looking wretch see me and kill me for being an eye-witness to his awful crime?

No, he took no notice of me whatever; but opened the small door to the attic over the wing, and, dragging the body into the darkness beyond, disappeared.

Instinctively I looked toward the room from which the lamp-light shone so brightly only a few minutes before.

All was dark and silent. I looked once more to the attic door; it was shut and I saw that it had not been opened, the bolt above the latch was not disturbed.

"How did he get in?" I sat down on the stairs in a cold sweat. I had seen—not flesh and blood, but the Greenbriar "ghost."

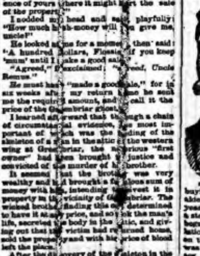
Involuntarily I shivered and came to myself again. Somehow I felt that I had gotten back from somewhere; the clock in the hall below struck twelve. I tried to rise, but in vain. My head swam; I felt queer; the corridor grew black as night above me and I knew no more.

When I became conscious again it was morning; bright, sunny day, and Celia was bathing my temples.

"He killed him!" I said, excitedly looking at Celia, with all the horror of the night before in my eyes.

"Be still, dear," she said, gently, "you are ill, and have been dreaming."

"No," I said; "I saw him drag the body from the chamber at the end of the corridor and take it into the attic over the wing on the west; no, Celia, I haven't dreamed it."



I STARTED HASTILY DOWN STAIRS.

My cousin gave me a startled look of inquiry, but said nothing in reply. I could see, however, that she was very much disturbed by what I said, as she glided up the room, while I lay watching her.

I was ill three weeks from the shock I had experienced, and, had not Celia returned shortly after midnight and searched for me, it may have been that this sketch would have remained unwritten.

When I was able to think of returning home, uncle came to me and said: "Whatever you saw, or thought you saw—"

"I did see it, Uncle Remus," I interrupted, excitedly.

"There, there!" he said, deprecatingly; "whatever it was that you saw, it, doubtless, is something not very pleasant to have under your own roof, at least."

"And now," continued he confidentially, "the place is a fine one, and desirable, save this—this—whatever it is; it will not take long to find a purchaser for Greenbriar, and the favor I wish to ask of you, Flossie, is to not mention this experience of yours where it might hurt the sale of the property."

I nodded my head and said playfully: "How much hush-money will you give me, uncle?"

He looked at me for a moment, then said: "A hundred dollars, Flossie, if you keep 'mum' until I make a good sale."

"Agreed," I exclaimed; "agreed, Uncle Remus."

He must have "made a good sale," for in six weeks after my return home he sent me the required amount, and I call it the price of the Greenbriar ghost.

I learned afterward that through a chain of circumstantial evidence, the most important of which was the finding of the skeleton of a man in the attic of the western wing at Greenbriar, the notorious "first owner" had been brought to justice and convicted of the murder of his brother.

It seemed that the brother was very wealthy and had brought a fabulous sum of money with him, intending to invest it in property in the vicinity of Greenbriar. The wicked brother, finding this out, determined to have it at any price, and so took the man's life, secreted the body in the attic, and giving out that the victim had returned home, sold the property and with his price of blood left the place.

After the discovery of the skeleton in the attic, and the execution of the red-handed murderer, they say the Greenbriar ghost walks the lonely corridor no more.

SOME TRUTH IN THIS.

Why It Is Some Clerks Go to Canada with Their Employer's Money.

"I don't ask any odds of anybody, I don't. I've got money in bank, and the wind may blow and the snows may snow, I'm all right."

"Mighty glad to know it, John, old fellow. You know I've always been your friend, and nobody is gladder'n I am to know that you are above the pinchings of poverty."

"I know it, Jimmy, my boy. You and I have stood many a storm together, and I owe my prosperity to your faithful work and careful attention to business. There's no better book-keeper in this city than you, and you know I appreciate it. You'll never suffer while my business prospers. You can bet on that."

"I know it. We were school-boys together, and went into business together. You kept sober and I drank. You kept single and I married. But, John, I haven't felt so much like drinking since I was married as I do to-day. I feel just like doing something desperate, and am distressed to death."

"Why, what ails you, steady Jim? I thought that you had conquered that appetite forever when you married Allie Knowles!"

"Yes, John; but my baby is sick, and I fear she is dying. My salary is drawn up to date, and I can't send the little one South, as the doctor recommends. It is hard to be poor."

"Yes, Jimmy, it is, and I'm truly sorry for you. Good-morning, and good luck to you. I hope the baby will be better when you go home to-night."

And that night Jimmy placed a thousand dollars in his wife's hands, placed two thousand dollars in bank to her credit and the next morning Jimmy was in Canada. John went down to his office and found a note which read: "Thank you, John, for your sympathy. I know I am welcome to a few thousands, for you 'appreciate my services,' and are prosperous."

Many a poor fellow goes to Canada under just such circumstances.

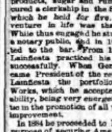
FRANCISCO LAINFIESTA.

Envoy from Guatemala and San Salvador and Minister Resident from Honduras.

Since the death of General Barrios, in 1885, Guatemala has had until recently no diplomatic representative at Washington. The same has been the case with the Republics of San Salvador and Honduras for several years past. Senor Lainfiesta now officially represents all three republics. He is strongly in favor of the union of the Central American republics, Guatemala, San Salvador, Costa Rica, Nicaragua and Honduras, under one confederation and government head, and considers such a union a question of only a few years. Strong efforts are being made at the present time to reunite those five States into one, and to re-establish the old Republic of Central America. This transformation will secure for it greater consideration and respect from foreign nations, and facilitate the unfolding of its destiny, which to-day is hampered and embarrassed by petty and local interests.

The staples of these favored countries of Central America are, says a writer in Frank Leslie's, those of every clime. Those more generally exported are coffee, sugar, indigo, cacao, vanilla, a variety of fruits, many sorts of peltry, india-rubber, balsam, tortoise-shell, precious stones and dye-wood, mineral quartz, sisal-hemp, ramie, etc. The importations to Central America amount to $20,000,000 or $25,000,000 in value. Of this sum, five-sixths go to Europe, while the United States, notwithstanding their advantageous position, only reap a small fraction, instead of the larger share. The chief articles of importation are woolens, silk and cotton goods, hardware, machinery, iron manufactured of all kinds, wines and liquors, cutlery, furniture, musical instruments, stationery and office articles, books, fancy articles, kerosene, wheat-flour, preserves, drugs and medicines, china and glassware, cars and carriages, bags for coffee and sugar, etc. Almost all importations are made via Aspinwall across the Panama Isthmus, and then transferred to the steamers on the Pacific; some are made, with great delay, around Cape Horn and the Strait of Magellan.



SENOR LAINFIESTA.

The importations are made through the southern coast of Central America, because on the northern coast there are but mule-tracks, long and difficult, thus making the carriage slow and costly. The State of Costa Rica has the only railroad on the northern side; its terminus is Port Limon. Nicaragua centers her hope upon the inter-oceanic canal. Honduras and Guatemala are projecting inter-oceanic railroads from the north side. San Salvador has no coast to the north. There are extensive mines of gold and silver in the Territory of Honduras, which are now worked by large American companies.

Francisco Lainfiesta was born in the city of Guatemala on the 4th of October, 1837. Turning his attention to an industrial occupation, as a boy he became an able worker in bronze and marble. Subsequently he engaged in agriculture, and rose to be manager on a plantation in the raising and the manufacture of two of Guatemala's chief products, sugar and rum. In 1855 he secured a clerkship in the State Department, which he held for five years. His next venture in life was that of a merchant. While thus engaged he studied law, became a notary public, and in 1860 he was admitted to the bar. From 1860 to 1871 Senor Lainfiesta practiced his profession very successfully. When General Barrios became President of the republic, he offered Lainfiesta the portfolio of the Public Works, which he accepted, and filled with ability, being very energetic and enthusiastic in the promotion of all works of internal improvement.

In 1884 he proceeded to New York for the purpose of securing American teachers for the public schools of Guatemala, and returned with several efficient instructors, both male and female, who were employed as teachers of the English branches in the schools of the capital city of the republic. Two years afterwards he was Minister of Public Works for about eight months, and in 1883 he the third time accepted the same office, which he held till 1875, when President Barrios died and the Conservatives went into power. Elected to Congress, he was made President of the House of Deputies, and presided over its meetings in 1880, 1881, 1882 and 1883—four years. Congress designated Senor Lainfiesta Vice-President of Guatemala for one year.

Minister Lainfiesta is now giving the finishing touches to a history of Guatemala from the Presidency of General Carrana in 1865 to the death of President Barrios in 1885. He has written two or three other books on Central American affairs, which have attracted wide and marked attention at home and abroad.

Senator McPherson.

Senator McPherson, of New Jersey, is the only cattle drover in Congress. His wealth was made out of large stock yards at Jersey City. He has just been re-elected for his third term. He took his seat first in 1877 to succeed the late Secretary Frelinghuysen, who was President Arthur's Secretary of State, and in 1883 he was re-elected. He was born in Livingston County, N. Y., in 1833, and there received his education. When twenty-six years old he moved to Jersey City and engaged in buying and selling cattle. He was elected alderman in 1864 and held the office six years. Being a very good judge of a cow or a steer he made money right along and soon began to have something to invest in speculation, so that it was not long before he was on the highway to a fortune. In 1871-2 he was elected to the State Senate of New Jersey. He has been a hard student of finance and the tariff, and is a forcible writer and speaker.

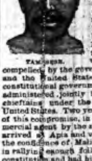
THE SAMOAN QUESTION.

Something About the Cause of the Present Difficulty Between Germany and the United States—The Samoan Islands and Their People—King Malietoa and His Successor, Tamasese.

The most interesting, and what may prove to be the most serious, topic of the day is the Samoan question, an altercation between the governments of the United States and Germany brought about by the aggressive policy adopted by the representative of Germany apparently on behalf of the German merchants residing at Apia and other Samoan trade centers.

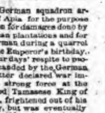
The Samoan, or Navigator's, Islands is a group of twelve volcanic isles in the Southern Pacific Ocean, between latitudes 13 degrees 30 minutes and 14 degrees 30 minutes south and longitude 168 degrees and 173 degrees, four of which, Upolu, Manua, Tutuila and Savaii, have for some time been known to students of political and missionary history. Apia, the chief town and capital of the group, located on Upolu Island, has a harbor which can accommodate six or seven vessels, and is the commercial as well as the social metropolis of the native tribes and foreign residents. The principal products of the country are coffee, sugar, bananas and other tropical plants and foods, which grow in great profusion; and from the discovery of the group until the present day the great commercial nations of the world labored hard to secure an ascendency over each other.



TAMASESE.

Before foreign influences became an important factor in the affairs of the islands their people, who, by the way, are among the most perfect specimens of Polynesian manhood, were ruled by hereditary chiefs. Jealousy, which has destroyed so many semi-barbarous nations, wrought its dire work among the Samoans, and tea-pot revolutions followed each other in such rapid succession that foreign intervention became necessary. In 1873 two pretenders to the throne, Malietoa and Tupuea, were compelled by the governments of England and the United States to adopt a sort of constitutional government which was to be administered jointly by the two warring chieftains under the protectorate of the United States. Two years after the adoption of this compromise, in 1875, a German commercial agent by the name of Steinberger, arrived at Apia and wormed himself into the confidence of Malietoa, who succeeded in rallying enough followers to change the constitution and had himself proclaimed the only legal King. Intrigue thereupon followed intrigue, and Steinberger, who had filled the portfolio of Prime Minister to every body's satisfaction, was deposed through the machinations of jealous natives and foreigners. This feud terminated in the defeat of the German adventurer, who was dismissed by the ungrateful King. Steinberger, who felt himself outraged, then fomented another civil war, which ended with Malietoa being firmly placed on the throne, and in his official recognition by the governments of England, Germany and the United States.

At this time Bismarck's colonial policy assumed aggressive proportions, and his agents at Apia and other Samoan points worked like beavers to secure ascendency in the Pacific island countries. Fair and foul means were employed to win the support of native chieftains, and in 1884, after various agreements and conventions, a treaty was signed between the Samoan Government and the three interested powers which practically gave the whole authority to the German Consul at Apia. Malietoa, when he began to realize the import of the treaty, made a formal appeal for its revocation to Emperor William I. on the ground that undue pressure had been brought to bear to make him sign the document. The appeal was not answered. A protest addressed to Queen Victoria met with the same result. In 1885 the Germans, dissatisfied with the independence displayed by Malietoa, began to press the claims of a pretender to the throne known as Tamasese, whom, in August, 1888, they placed on the throne in a high-handed manner and in utter disregard of all the treaties entered into between England, the United States and Samoa.



MALIETOA.

On August 19 a German squadron arrived in the harbor of Apia for the purpose of enforcing reparation for damages done by some natives to German plantations and for an assault on a German during a quarrel which took place on the Emperor's birthday. Malietoa asked for four days' respite to procure the amount demanded by the German Admiral, but the latter declared war immediately, landed a strong force at the capital and proclaimed Tamasese King of the islands. Malietoa, frightened out of his wits, fled precipitately, but was eventually persuaded to give himself up by the American and British Consuls, and was taken at once on board a German vessel and deported to New Guinea.

After this outrage followed outrage. The supporters of Malietoa rallied under the leadership of a chief named Mataafa and contested the claim of the German-made King. They attacked the German forces, and last January inflicted a severe punishment on their foes. At last accounts the "rebels," as they are called, fought under the leadership of an American adventurer named Klein, who achieved considerable notoriety in Chicago by being the person in whose arms Louis Lingg, the condemned Anarchist, who killed himself by exploding a dynamite cartridge in his mouth on the day preceding that set for his execution, breathed his last.

The Government of the United States pocketed many insults before remonstrating with Germany for its unprecedented cruelty and selfishness; but the prospects now are that Germany must either make amends to Uncle Sam or engage in a war with that formidable individual, unless the question is—as it should have been long ago—settled by arbitration.

Malietoa Laupepa, the deposed King of Samoa, whose portrait appears with this article, is fifty years of age and a man of mild, irresolute temperament. He is the twenty-third ruler of his dynasty. His surname, Laupepa, literally translated, means "Sheet of Paper," and it is well bestowed, as he is much more of a student and romancer than a warrior. His dynastic name, Malietoa, is said to be that of an ancestor who drove out bold invaders of yore and is translatable as "Well done, fighting cock!" Tamasese, the King made and defended by the Germans, is a powerfully built man, a good fighter and a son of a native chief of prominence. Whatever settlement may be made between the American and German governments, it is safe to assume that he will continue to be the ruler of Samoa, as he has the bulk of the fighting material of the islands at his back. AN ARMY WITH BANNERS.

If there be any mortal man deserving of commiseration he is a newly elected President, vested with official patronage.

Instead of being coddled [illegible], he ought to be sincerely pitied.

After only four years exclusion from the offices, the rush of Republicans to obtain spoils under the incoming Administration far exceeds that of the Democrats who were called from power six times longer.

What a picture to contemplate!

What a fearful ordeal for President Harrison to encounter!

An army with banners.

An average of thirty applicants or more for every position.

Each one imagines that he is exactly the right patriot for the place. Has done more practical work for the party, and wields a mightier political influence than any five hundred other Republicans alive.

One appointed and twenty-nine sorely disappointed.

And that a single sample of thousands of cases.

No wonder General Sheridan emphatically declared that he would not accept the Presidency even if elected thereto with unanimity.

A TRUE SOLDIER.

General William T. Sherman, in a recent letter addressed to Major Stewart, of Texas, now at the North soliciting contributions for the enlargement and support of a Home for old and disabled Confederate soldiers near Austin, Texas, used the following language—"Though I would prefer another method for ministering to the wants of the Confederate soldiers made prematurely old by the vicissitudes of a war he could not prevent, I am willing to say that any means to relieve their wants meets my sympathy, and I wish you all success."

The other method above alluded to by General Sherman, in a published interview with the Southern Major appears to have been, that the laws of Congress should be so changed as to admit Confederates into the Soldiers' Homes of the Union.

Such a proposition on the part of the gallant Northern General certainly evinces his abundant charity and deep-seated kindness of heart.

It does him honor, but, the query presents itself, suppose any Democrat of prominence in the land had intimated a similar idea, what then the result?

The answer is manifest.

From Maine to California, political pettifoggers of the Foraker stripe, small-souled, but loud of lungs, would have shouted and re-shouted bitter anathemas against rebel sympathy and sympathizers.

General Sherman, however, being a Republican in politics, and a victorious defender of the Union cause in war, the friendly criticism is quiet.

We repeat that the generous sentiment advanced by General Sherman toward the soldiers of the South, now peaceful citizens of a re-united country, do him signal honor.

And we further unconditionally assert that the contemptible spirit of sectional animosity remains not with the real soldiers of the North, the men who braved the perils of battle, many of whom followed Sherman from Atlanta to the sea, but it is the exclusive stigma of a set of scurvy politicians, too cowardly to fight out and too contracted to forgive.

They are daily growing less in number and influence.

The war ended two dozen years ago.

An Unjust Lack of Distinction.

A Somerville exchange says: "The hotel keepers of Plainfield have sent their protest into Council, stating that while a $500 license fee was within their means a $700 fee was crowding the mourners. Nevertheless there are two more applications for license this year than last and if all these are licensed each will, under the recent ordinance, pay into the city treasury a fee of $700."

The hotels of the city again apply for a liquor license this year, under a $700 fee, because they cannot do business without. The saloons are kept [illegible] for the sole [illegible] selling liquor and nothing else, but with the hotels the bar is only incidental to their business of accommodating the public. Hence the distinction of charging them a lesser fee, as in former years, and as Mayor Male recommended, is merely just.

Take the case of The Netherwood. It may be open for only three months, yet it must pay a $700 fee and $300 for a bar-keeper for that short season. The Hotel could not be kept open without, and the proprietor is thus compelled to pay $300 a month for the privilege of attracting to the city the very highest class of Summer residents.

Many of the permanent residents and wealthiest tax-payers of the city, were first brought here as guests of The Netherwood. Do the people desire that it shall be forced to close its doors, and thus stifle one of the city's chief attractions for the better classes? Do the Plainfield merchants desire that the patrons The Netherwood and other hotels bring them, shall be choked off?

This is What the New York "World" Says of Councilman J. K. Myers.

A circus is anticipated in the Plainfield Common Council next Monday night, when all the licenses have to be acted upon. The license of every hotel and saloon in the city expires March 1. In the present Council there are five Prohibition members, five in favor of licensing licenses and one Alderman who is on the fence but who voted recently to raise license fees from $500 to $700.

The anxious saloon keepers are greatly disturbed over the outlook, which is anything but cheering for those who haven't the requisite pull with the obstructive Alderman. The noncommittal member is the biggest man in Plainfield, as he holds the destinies of every liquor dealer in the city in his hands, and is practically master of the situation. The law-and-order element are chuckling over the prospect and say that few, if any, of the present dealers will get their licenses at the coming meeting.

A Narrow Escape.

Patrick Waters, a laboring man, had a very narrow escape from violent death at the railroad station, Tuesday A. M. He stood at the station and watched the 8:37 train start for New York. When the train had passed he started to cross over to the freight house, and just missed being struck by some freight cars, which the drill engine was backing in on the siding. The train hands shouted to him, and the spectators turned their heads, expecting that he would be ground to pieces.

Dr. Shaw is Threatened.

It is said that Mr. N. J. Shaw got a White Cap letter Tuesday, A. M., stating that if he did not discontinue the use of the false-registering barometer, located in front of his store, while the present administration was in power, his license to sell liquor would be declared null and void. Pinkerton's agency will probably be called upon to ferret out the sender.

An Electrical Display.

An electrical disturbance in front of Field & Randolph's pharmacy on West Front street, about eight o'clock Monday night, attracted over one hundred persons to the spot. The accident was caused by a telephone wire coming in contact with an electric light wire, and was accompanied by a loud report. Some persons were inclined to believe that a meteor had exploded.

It Would Work Splendidly Here.

There are a number of organizations composed of women, but the latest one is perhaps the most unique. It is called the "Kindly Club." The members pledge themselves "to strive earnestly to cultivate kindliness of thought and word; to resolve never to repeat derogatory or ill-natured remarks of another; never to belittle anyone; never to speak unkindly gossip or scandal."

Discussing Pro and Con.

The Young People's Society of the First Baptist church met last evening to discuss the advisability of merging the Society into a Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor. The subject was discussed at length, and a vote resulted in 19 in favor of the proposed change, and 24 against it. Twelve persons did not vote at all.

The Society decided to adopt, however, a pledge similar to that in use by the Christian Endeavor, with the exception that some of the provisions are not so compulsory.

Another North Avenue Improvement.

Mr. G. W. Moy, the druggist, located at No. 41 North avenue, has purchased from the Land Improvement Company, the desirable site which he now occupies, and will soon begin to tear away the brick building, and erect instead a handsome three-story brick structure. The lot has a frontage of 19 feet by 90 feet in depth and the purchase price was $175 a foot.

Mr. Moy will occupy the ground floor as a pharmacy, and the upper stories will be fitted up into flats, with all the modern conveniences. The march of improvements on North avenue, has been rapid of late, and at the present time negotiation are pending with the Land Improvement Company for the purchase of two additional lots, between Mr. Moy's property and that on the corner recently purchased by Mr. Edward Love.

What the Cigarette is Made Of.

Here is an item from a Poughkeepsie paper that will interest cigarette smokers more than any one else:

"So many Italians are at present engaged in gathering cigar stumps from Poughkeepsie's streets that the 'business' does not pay. A few months ago Gustavo Gararo, a resident of the Second Ward, made as high as $10 a week shipping these stumps to New York, where they were converted into cigarettes."

Those young men [illegible] who so dearly love to draw the smoke of the objectionable and nasty cigarette into their heads and then puff it out through their nostrils, will enjoy the practice much more if they will only remember that the tobacco filler of the cigarette they are smoking was once the cast-away "butt" of some dirty or perhaps diseased street gamin.

New Officers of Crescent Division, Knights of Pythias.

At the annual election of Crescent Division, Uniformed Rank, No. 13, Knights of Pythias, held Monday night in Perseverance Lodge rooms, the following officers were elected:

SIR KNIGHT CAPTAIN—Horace R. Martin.
LIEUTENANT—J. Edward Flannery.
HERALD—Joseph M. Hawkins.
RECORDER—George H. Pollmann.
[illegible]

Past Captain Pollemus having served two years in office, retains his rank and is entitled to wear the Jewel of Honor provided for past officers at the last Supreme lodge.

After the election the new officers were installed in Knightly form by Col. Geo. W. Povey, of Newark. The Division and guests then adjourned to a restaurant where a collation was provided and enjoyed.

The Division is prospering and likely to become one of the crack Divisions of the order. The inspection was unavoidably delayed, but will take place some time next month.

The Alleged Swindler is Released.

The young man who was gathered in by the police Monday afternoon, after being detected by a PRESS reporter in beating several of the merchants out of small sums of money, was last night released from custody, as no one came forward to press the charge.

It has since been ascertained that the fellow made several unsuccessful attempts to borrow money from the merchants in Dunellen, in one instance asking for a loan of ten dollars. At that place the fellow said his name was Arthur Miller and that he was the cousin of a well-known jeweler in Maiden Lane, New York. He inquired as to whether or not any jeweler resided in Dunellen, before he commenced operations.

In this city he worked Messrs Jesse Hetfield and Andrew Kenney out of small sums of money, and made several other attempts to negotiate loans, but in some instances he was refused. He called on Mr. Asa Collier, the jeweler, and stated that he worked for the jewelry firm of S. Myers & Co., of Maiden Lane, N. Y.

When arrested the fellow begged piteously to be released, claiming that he was never before disgraced with arrest.

Law to Abolish Misrepresentation.

Despatches from Trenton Tuesday state that the redistricting bill has at last been completed, presented and referred in the Senate. It is natural to suppose that under its provisions the legislative districts will no longer continue to misrepresent the counties of which they are a part.

A system of legislative representation which makes it impossible for a popular majority of six or seven thousand votes to find expression in the Legislature, is a misrepresentation and a perversion of popular government. Under the present formation of legislative districts every Republican vote is made to tell, and fully one-third of the Democratic voter are disfranchised.

Bergen county, Burlington, Essex, Hudson, Hunterdon, Middlesex, Monmouth, Morris, Passaic and Union counties, are so divided as to render it extremely difficult for the large Democratic vote to find proper representation in the Assembly. In Bergen the massing of Republican votes in a small district makes it doubtful; in Burlington the four or five hundred Republican majority is so skillfully disposed of as to make three districts reasonably certain for the Republicans, and gives one to the Democrats; in Essex it requires a political cyclone to produce more than three Democratic members out of ten, although more than [illegible] per cent. of the voters are Democratic; in Hudson, the "horseshoe" district has for eighteen years been recognized as an illustration of successful gerrymandering, although Democratic votes to carry four districts are skillfully bunched in one; Monmouth, by handy manipulation, is made almost safe to send a Republican member, while in Passaic and Union the Democratic vote is bunched in a single district.

THE CITY CLERGYMEN DISCUSS THE DRINK HABIT.

Music Hall Filled With a Large and Appreciative Audience—Resolutions Unanimously Adopted—What the Ministers Had to Say.

The seating capacity of Music Hall was taxed to its utmost, last Tuesday, to accommodate the throng which applied for admission, to be present at the mass meeting announced to take place under the auspices of the Ministers' society of this city. Rev. Dr. Ketcham presided, and after a selection by the Plainfield Cornet Band, Rev. W. E. Honeyman led in prayer.

Dr. Ketcham stated the object of the meeting, and said that it was not aimed as a blow at the Common Council. It was, he said, simply a mass meeting to get the sentiment of the people, and to raise to a higher plane of hope. Rev. Dr. Lewis read the following preamble and resolutions, which were unanimously adopted at a later stage in the proceedings:

WHEREAS, The policy of licensing the sale of intoxicating drinks has been fully tested in the City of Plainfield for many years, and

WHEREAS, Under this test neither the amount of liquor sold, nor the evils arising from its use have been lessened in Plainfield, and

WHEREAS, The use of liquor, publicly sold, is the main source of crime, pauperism, immorality and suffering, therefore

Resolved, That we, the citizens of Plainfield, in mass-meeting assembled, believe that the time has fully come when the sale of intoxicating drinks should be wholly, and absolutely prohibited in this city.

WHEREAS, Illegal selling might be attempted if prohibition were instituted, therefore,

Resolved, That we hereby pledge ourselves to sustain the city government by our influence, and by such voluntary contributions of money as may be demanded to enforce prohibition.

Resolved, That we hereby respectfully and earnestly petition the City Council to refuse all applications for license to sell intoxicating liquors during the coming year.

Rev. Mr. Dilts was the first speaker introduced, the Chairman calling upon the clergymen seated upon the platform, in alphabetical order. Rev. Mr. Dilts compared the deciding vote in the Council, on the license question, to the boss kicker on the Yale foot ball team—styling him a "Kicker from Kickersville." The eleven men, he said, constituting the Council, are getting ready to kick against each other; 15,000 people will be looking on, and at least 10,000 will do their best to kick the saloons to pieces. Prohibition, he considered, would put money into the homes and bring joy to sorrowing hearts, increase morality where crime exists, and religion where now the name of God is defamed.

Rev. Mr. Goodrich was the next speaker. He said the evils of the liquor traffic could not be painted too black; words cannot depict the misery and woe brought about by it. He thought that in order to enforce prohibition, money must be raised by taxation. Some people, he said, talked temperance, but would not share the extra expense of enforcing it.

Rev. Dr. Hurlbut said he was always ready to strike a blow for temperance. He said that not a town in the State was better equipped for prohibition than Plainfield. He thought the people should demand it. The learned Doctor told of traveling through ten counties in Kansas where there was not a single man in jail. "If the people had a chance at the polls," he declared, "the saloons would be plowed under."

The Plainfield Cornet band played a selection and Rev. Dr. Lewis was next introduced. He pointed with pride to the first time in the history of the city where the clergymen moved forward as a body against the saloon evil. The clergymen he said, take a voice in the interest of the commonwealth, and none were more entitled to be heard in the matter. License, he continued, has been tried and found to be wanting; it has not stopped drinking or diminished the number of places. North Plainfield bids fair to beat Plainfield in the matter of prohibition. Total prohibition can only be accomplished by means of proper government.

Rev. C. B. Mitchell of the M. E. church was the next speaker. He related briefly how prohibition worked in Kansas, adding that at the present time there were men behind the bars who thought they were mightier than the law and had defiantly violated the prohibitory measures. The speaker said there were enough citizens in Plainfield with moral influence to stamp out the evil. He told an amusing incident of a man in the West who failed to quench his thirst at a hotel, but subsequently called upon "Johnny" in a livery stable and was there given a drink drawn from "Johnny's" wooden leg. Leavenworth, he continued, at one time had 200 saloons, but when the law gave municipal suffrage to women, the evil was soon stamped out. Rev. Mr. Mitchell was frequently interrupted with applause, and he was prevailed upon to continue his remarks over the ten-minute limit.

Rev. J. W. Mitchell, pastor of Mt. Olive Baptist church, was the next speaker. He favored placing the responsibility for the drink habit where it belongs, and said that it was evident to him that the time would soon come when either the saloons or the other interests of the city must go. The prohibitory laws can be enforced the same as slavery was abolished.

Mr. A. M. Powell next spoke, and alluded to the recent address of Mrs. Dr. Kimball, President of the Children's Home Association, showing how crime and degradation was placed at the saloon's door. He considered that it was time to raise the banner of Prohibition and to enforce the law. He also divided the blame equally between the Government and the people. The assessed valuation of Plainfield property for 1889, he had been told, is "$5,385,900." By levying a tax of 18 cents on the $100 the city would receive a revenue of $10,000.

Rev. Mr. Richards said the people were evidently in favor of the onslaught of the temperance movement; the saloons know no power which they are bound to respect. The reverend gentleman directed his remarks to the "shirkers," whom he admitted being on the same plane with. His address was concise and to the point.

Archdeacon Rodman followed, giving apt illustrations of the evils wrought out by intemperance, which he said are of greater magnitude than war, famine and pestilence combined. He told of an instance where a Judge in Somerset county had refused to grant two licenses, first on the ground that the people in that county would soon have an opportunity to decide whether or not the license should be granted; second, because he did not see that any great exigency required it. Dr. Rodman thought that the public exigency at the present time was the abolishment of the liquor traffic. He considered it unwise to tackle the subject with kid gloves on. "But what are you going to do about it" continued the speaker. Ding-a-ling-a-ling, rang out the ten-minute annunciator. "Thank you," said Doctor Rodman, as he bowed and took his seat, while the audience was convulsed with laughter.

Rev. Mr. Schenck, when introduced, said that the speakers who preceded him had covered the ground pretty thoroughly and there was but little left for him to say; the other speakers he said had protested in behalf of the Christian church, the intellectual school, culture and refinement, and for the welfare of our beautiful city. He entered a protest on behalf of the children who had no voice in the matter. He presented three living illustrations, first, of a boy eight years old who was without shoes and was thus deprived of the privilege of attending Sunday-school, simply because his father spent his earning in a neighboring saloon; second, a girl pale and trembling, sick and without proper nourishment, because her father spent his wages at the bar; third, a boy ten years of age who is obliged to to carry beer to drinking parents. Mr. Schenck protested in the name of the law, adding that there is not a redeeming feature about the business. He thought that such muscular men as Chief Carey and "Mister" Lynch, with Prosecuting Attorney Marsh at the helm, was a sufficient guarantee that prohibitory laws would be enforced.

Rev. Dr. Yerkes was the last speaker. He also spoke on behalf of the mothers and children, whom he said men were sworn to protect. Dr. Yerkes spoke of the magnitude of the liquor traffic and clearly and forcibly portrayed the evils arising from it.

All of the speakers were attentively listened to, and each one was warmly applauded at the close of his address. A collection was taken up, and Dr. Yerkes dismissed the audience with the benediction.

Looking for Work and Lost His Toes.

James McMee of Newark started for Bound Brook on a Central coal train Friday morning to look for work. When the train was opposite the Shackelton works in East Bound Brook he thought he would get off there and apply for employment, but in doing so his left foot slipped under the wheels and he thereby lost his big toe and crushed the rest of them. He walked to Bound Brook and was looking for a doctor when he was taken into the inspector's room and cared for by Dr. Fisher.

"The Elms" Sold for $28,000.

One of the handsomest homes in Plainfield has just changed hands. Mr. Wm. R. Clarkson has sold his residence property on Front street, East, facing Berckman street, to Mr. Wm. M. Stout, of New York.

The price paid was about $28,000, which is very low. Mr. Clarkson reserved, however, a lot 200 feet front on the West end. Mr. Stout is senior partner of one of New York's biggest grocery firms—Stout, Spencer & Co. About twenty years ago he lived at the corner of Sixth street and Central avenue.

The family will take up their residence here about the middle of April. They have elegant homes also in New York city and at Long Branch.

COURT NOTES.

In the case of the city of Plainfield against James Muldowney for illegal liquor selling, which was tried before Judge Suydam some time ago, the defendant appealed from the decision of the Court and a fine of $100. The appeal came up before the Court of Common Pleas, Judges McCormick, Hyer and Harper, at Elizabeth, Wednesday.

The principal witness for the city, James McMullen, failed to materialize, and the Corporation Counsel, on that ground, asked to have the case put off for the term. Messrs Jackson and Codington in behalf of Muldowney, consented thereto on the payment of costs by the city.

The case was then called of the appeal of Mr. Riley from the judgment of the Plainfield Court that held him guilty of insulting young women on West Front street by whistling at them from the stoop of his boarding house and calling out "Ah! There! My size. I'll steal you."

As neither Mr. Riley nor his Counsel, Wm. K. McClure, Esq., put in an appearance or a plea, the appeal was, on motion of the Corporation Counsel, dismissed.

A CURIOUS MEETING.

The regular semi-monthly meeting of the Friends' Temperance and Literary Society was held at the residence of Mr. Albert Vail, on West Fourth street, 13th inst., and there was a large representation of the members present. The President, Mr. Robinson Pound, presided. The meeting assumed the form of a [illegible] entertainment, and many rare and ancient relics were offered for inspection, among which were the following:

Miss Maggie V. Harned had a book over 200 years old, printed in 1681 in London. Joseph M. Harper gave a history of the paper bag manufactory and had samples. Keturah S. Palmer had a silver spoon made in England in 1792. Susan B. Adams had an ink stand made from a piece of the rock of Gibraltar, representing the Fort. Chillie H. Vail, a box of old paper money and coins. Robinson Pound a skein of raw silk from Italy. Gertrude E. Vail a copy of the Boston News Letter printed in 1704, also a miniature copy of the Boston Transcript printed after the Boston fire. Mattie V. Adams some embroidery made by the natives of the Island of Madagascar. Rachel Bogert a watch case of wood which had been in the family over 100 years, given by a sea captain. Adelbert Vail an old watch which had been in the family over 100 years. Clarence B. Vail a piece of petrified deposit found on the banks of the Raritan River.

Phebe H. Vail read a selection about the burned Cedar Forest in Southern New Jersey, after which the meeting adjourned.

THE ILLSLEY DIVORCE CASE.

The proceedings in the case of Mrs. Illsley against her husband Harry Illsley, of Scotch Plains, for divorce, as exclusively published in THE PRESS of the 9th inst., were continued before Special Master in Chancery, John H. VanWinkle, Esq., Tuesday. As has been the rule since the examination began, reporters of other papers have not been permitted to be present, and everybody else not concerned in the case, is likewise excluded.

The further testimony of yesterday was still in behalf of the complainant. Patrick Donovan swore to having seen Mr. Illsley frequently visit the house in which lived the young lady with whom acts of criminality are charged; and to seeing the defendant going out walking and riding with her. On cross-examination his testimony was considerably weakened by his saying that for several months in succession he lay out on his front stoop at least three nights in each week, "waiting for Harry Illsley to lick me." This witness swore to very much, but not to any act of criminality.

J. Seagreave was the next witness. In reply to a question of Mrs. Illsley's Counsel as to what he saw as to the conduct of the defendant and the young woman in question, he replied—"Mr. Illsley's was that of a gentleman and the young woman's that of a lady." And no act of criminality was shown by this witness, either.

John Dent testified as to an affidavit he had made on motion for alimony, etc. He said he didn't know the contents of the affidavit he swore to at the office of Mrs. Illsley's lawyer.

Mrs. Illsley then took the stand again, and testified as to her acquaintance with the handwriting of the writer of the letters of a certain young lady signing herself "Nettie," which letters had been previously published in THE PRESS and put in evidence.

Mrs. John Whitehead was the last witness. She was examined at her residence on Plainfield avenue. She testified that she never saw Mr. Illsley alone at her residence with the young lady in question; and said an affidavit she had made in the complainant's Counsel's office to the contrary, was a mistake—the affidavit was made in a hurry and she didn't understand its contents.

The further taking of testimony on behalf of Mrs. Illsley, was adjourned to March 1, at 10 o'clock A. M., when her case will probably be closed.

Violated the Hack Ordinance.

Three of the hackmen of this city were arraigned before Mayor Male this morning and fined two dollars each, for not having their numbers conspicuously posted on their vehicles, which is in direct violation of the hack ordinance.

Very True.

Mr. Chas. L. Colby, President of the Wisconsin Central Railroad says: "I always feel rejoiced in saying anything in favor of the Young Men's Christian Association, because I feel that it is the grandest organization for Christian work that the members of the Christian church ever started, and have ever used, to carry out their great efforts for the building up of the Kingdom of our Lord. It is business-like in its methods. It is economical. I believe there is no work in the World that is reaping such results for the same amount of expenditure."

Inspecting the Engine Houses.

President J. B. Dumont of the City Council and Messrs E. S. Erickson, J. K. Myers and E. D. Moffett, constituting the Committee on Fire and Buildings, with the Chief and Board of Engineers of the Plainfield Fire Department, made a tour of inspection through the various houses of the department, Friday night. At the several houses the visitors were met by the officers of the company and extended a hearty welcome. Suggestions were made regarding improvements, etc., and the horses were run out to show the visitors the efficiency of the department.

Gave Up the Money When Threatened With Arrest.

A mechanic employed in an East Fourth street horse-shoeing establishment, dropped twenty dollars in bills from his vest pocket a few days since, and although a vigorous search was made the money could not be found.

It was subsequently ascertained that the roll of bills was pocketed by a hostler employed by a family on Eighth street, who happened to be in the shop at the time. The fellow at first declared that he knew nothing whatever about the missing money, but when threatened with arrest he "ponied up" like a little man.

Transfers of Real Estate.

(From the Somerville Messenger.)

Within the past few weeks there has been great activity in the real estate market in North Plainfield. Transfers have recently been made and the deeds for the same have been recorded in the County Clerk's office at Somerville:

Jan. 17—Edwin Loomis to C. J. Rice, property in North Plainfield, $4,000. C. J. Rice to Mary B. Loomis, same property and consideration. M. H. French et ux. to Stephen Beeching, property in North Plainfield, $450.

What is Said About Us in New York.

(From the Fireman's Herald.)

The Plainfield, N. J., Press says, it is now about time the Common Council reduced the membership of the Fire Department to a working force and no more.

North Plainfield, N. J., is in bad shape as regards its Fire Department, which, in its present condition, is virtually without officers, and, in fact, there is not even a company to nominate any. In case a fire breaks out within the borough limits, the Department apparatus must either remain in the engine house, or be ordered out by the borough officials. At the January meeting of the Borough Council, Mr. H. J. Martin was appointed Chief, with a view to perfecting an organization, but, as yet, no definite action has been taken in the matter. A further delay may prove an expensive thing, and no time should be lost in organizing the Department.

Plainfield, N. J., is considering a scheme which has for its object the organization of a water supply system. The proposition is to use the fountain heads of Green Brook, and, with reservoirs and pipes leading to sixty-five hydrants to furnish water for extinguishing fires, for sprinkling streets and for other public purposes, the city to pay annually $50 for the use of each hydrant, and the company to be free from taxation. It is estimated that the system will cost $250,000.

Two Samples of the Fancy Stories in the "News."

(From the news of Feb. 11.)

The shareholders of the Plainfield Building and Loan Association include some of the best people in Plainfield, and the strongest advocates of no license. They are somewhat incensed over the finding of the name of the [illegible] signed to an application for a hotel license, that of Mr. Frederick Casper. Several of the shareholders met today and discussed the matter with much feeling, manifesting considerable indignation. A committee was appointed to investigate the matter, and visited the "news" office as a preliminary step, with a view of having the attention of all the shareholders brought to the matter.

An officer of the Association whose attention was called to the above, went at once to the office of the news and asked who the committee consisted of. For a while the writer of the article tried, it is said, to escape by claiming it would be a betrayal of confidence for him to tell. He was, however, forced eventually to confess that no such committee ever existed, and that the only one who had spoken of it to him was a woman.

(From the news of the Saturday before.)

The intended blow was in the form of a resolution, introduced into the Common Council having for its object the dropping of the "news" from the list of newspapers to do the official advertising, but continuing two comparatively obscure weekly papers, whose editors we understand were both consulted by Councilman Moffett, by whom the resolution was offered, and that they in their usual narrow-minded and envious spirit concocted the resolution as presented.

Councilman Moffett emphatically condemned the above to a PRESS reporter, as "false in every particular; entirely without one word of truth in any part of its construction, and free of the semblance of anything but fallacy."

FULL TEXT OF THE SARAH M. LATIMER WILL.

Below is the full text of the last will and testament of Sarah M. Latimer, filed by the custodian, Nelson Runyon, Esq., in Surrogate's office Friday. It cannot be proved, however, until the caveats already told of in THE PRESS, are removed.

The will is dated six days before she was stricken with paralysis.

I, Sarah M. Latimer, of the City of Plainfield, in the County of Union and State of New Jersey, widow of Henry G. Latimer, deceased, being of a sound and disposing mind, memory, and understanding, and mindful of the uncertainty of life, do hereby make, publish and declare this my last will and testament in manner and form following, that is to say:

First—I order and direct that all my just debts, and my funeral and testamentary expenses be paid and satisfied, as soon as can conveniently be done, after my decease.

Secondly—I hereby give and bequeath unto each of the children of my sister, Nancy Hatley, viz: Mark A. Hatley, Sarah E. Hatley, Patsey Ann Hollingsworth, Mary B. Hatley, James R. Hatley, John K. Hatley, William G. Hatley, Benjamin F. Hatley and Nancy J. Johnson, the sum of ten thousand ($10,000) dollars, and unto James B. Vickery, son of Maria J. Vickery, deceased, and grandson of my said sister, Nancy Hatley, the sum of five thousand ($5,000) dollars, and unto Sarah Vickery, daughter of Louisa Vickery, deceased, and granddaughter of my said sister, Nancy Hatley, the sum of five thousand ($5,000) dollars, and unto each of the children of Hardy F. Hatley, deceased (a son of my said sister, Nancy Hatley,) viz: Queenie Victoria French and Leonia Levesa Boswell, the sum of five thousand ($5,000) dollars, and unto Maria J. Bosford, daughter of Aulsy H. Hatley, and granddaughter of my said sister, Nancy Hatley, the sum of five thousand ($5,000) dollars.

Thirdly—I hereby give and bequeath unto Alexander Adams, Andrew J. Adams, Aulsy M. Adams, James R. Adams and Lucy J. Page, five of the children of my deceased sister, Lucy Adams, the sum of ten thousand ($10,000) dollars each, and unto each of the six children of Benjamin F. Adams, deceased, (son of my said deceased sister, Lucy Adams,) the sum of two thousand ($2,000) dollars.

Fourthly—I hereby give and bequeath unto each of my five nieces, viz: Winnie P. Adams, Olive D. Davidson, Nancy G. Townsend, Sarah M. Hatley and Elizabeth B. Layn, children of my said deceased sister, Lucy Adams, the use, interest and income of the sum of ten thousand ($10,000) dollars, for and during the natural life of each of them, and at their death I give and bequeath the principal of the said several legacies of ten thousand ($10,000) dollars, (the use whereof is, in this clause, given to my said last above named nieces) to their lawful issue respectively, share and share alike, the lawful issue of any deceased child of either of my said nieces, in this clause mentioned, to take the parents' share, share and share alike, and if my said niece, Winnie P. Adams, die without lawful issue, then, at her death I hereby give and bequeath the principal of said legacy of ten thousand ($10,000) dollars, (the use whereof is in this clause given to her) to the brothers' and sisters of said Winnie P. Adams, and to the lawful issue of any deceased brother or sister of said Winnie P. Adams, if any shall have died, leaving lawful issue, share and share alike, per stirpes and not per capita.

Fifthly—I hereby give and bequeath unto C. Julian Page, the husband of Lucy J. Page, aforesaid, the sum of two thousand ($2,000) dollars, and unto my grandniece, Annie Page, the sum of ten thousand ($10,000) dollars, and likewise the crayon portraits of my said deceased husband and myself, and unto my grandnephew, Henry Gould Latimer, Page, the sum of ten thousand ($10,000) dollars, and unto my said niece, Lucy J. Page, the portraits of her two children, Annie and Henry, recently painted for me by Mr. Flower, and also my entire wardrobe, to be disposed of by her as she may deem proper.

Sixthly—I hereby give and bequeath unto my brother, Reuben Mitchell, the sum of twenty-five thousand ($25,000) dollars, and unto each of the children of my said brother, Reuben Mitchell, viz: Aulsy H. Mitchell, William W. Mitchell, Asa McD. Mitchell, Sarah E. Mitchell, Victoria N. Mitchell, Lucinda C. Mitchell, Mary V. Mitchell, James A. Mitchell, and Emeline Mitchell, the sum of ten thousand ($10,000) dollars.

Seventhly—I hereby give and bequeath unto my nephew, Allen H. Mitchell, son of my deceased sister, Edith Mitchell, the sum of thirty thousand ($30,000) dollars, and unto each of my grand-nieces, Sarah Mitchell and Edith Mitchell, children of said Allen H. Mitchell, the sum of five thousand ($5,000) dollars.

Eighthly—I hereby give and bequeath my silverware to my said grand-nieces, Annie Page, Sarah Mitchell and Edith Mitchell, to be divided among them equally.

Ninthly—I hereby give and bequeath unto William G. Latimer, nephew of my said husband, the sum of five thousand ($5,000) dollars, and unto Horace A. Latimer, nephew of my said husband, the sum of five thousand ($5,000) dollars.

Tenthly—I hereby give and bequeath unto the First Presbyterian church of Plainfield, New Jersey, the sum of five thousand ($5,000) dollars; and I hereby request that the trustees of said church keep the burial plot in their cemetery where my said husband lies buried, and where I also expect shortly to be buried, in good order, so long as said cemetery shall remain a burial place for the dead.

Eleventhly—I hereby give and bequeath unto my friend and pastor, the Rev. Kneeland P. Ketcham, D. D., the sum of ten thousand ($10,000) dollars, as a token of my appreciation of his worth as a kind friend and christian minister.

Twelfthly—I hereby give and bequeath unto Annie Vanderweg, now in my employ, the sum of two thousand ($2,000) dollars.

Thirteenthly—I hereby give and bequeath unto the Children's Home Association of Plainfield, New Jersey, the sum of two thousand ($2,000) dollars.

Fourteenthly—I hereby give and bequeath unto the Young Men's Christian Association of Plainfield, New Jersey, the sum of two thousand ($2,000) dollars.

Fifteenthly—In the event of the death of any one or more of the legatees above mentioned in this my will, before my decease, leaving lawful issue, I then hereby direct that such lawful issue shall take the parents' share in every such case.

Sixteenthly—All the rest, residue, and remainder of my estate, both real and personal, and wheresoever situate, I hereby give, devise and bequeath unto my nephews and nieces, the above-mentioned children of my said sisters, Nancy Hatley, Lucy Adams, Edith Mitchell and my brother, Reuben Mitchell, to be divided equally between them, share and share alike, per capita; the lawful issue of any deceased child of either of my said sisters or brother, to take the parents' share; to have and to hold unto them, their heirs and assigns forever, subject nevertheless to the following modification, viz: I hereby direct my executors hereinafter mentioned to pay to each of my said nieces Winnie P. Adams, Olive D. Davidson, Nancy G. Townsend, Sarah M. Hatley and Elizabeth B. Layn, only the use, interest and income of their proportionate share, respectively, of the residuum of my estate, for and during the natural life of each of them, said interest or income to be paid over to the parties entitled thereto annually, or oftener in the discretion of my said executors and at the death of my said five nieces last above mentioned, to pay the principal of their said respective proportionate share of said residuum to their lawful issue, respectively, share and share alike, the lawful issue of any deceased child of either of my said five nieces, last above mentioned to take the parent's share, share and share alike, and if my said niece Winnie P. Adams die without leaving lawful issue, then the principal of her said proportionate share of said residuum shall be divided equally among the brothers and sisters of said Winnie P. Adams and the lawful issue of any deceased brother or sister of said Winnie P. Adams, if any of her brothers or sisters shall have died, leaving lawful issue, share and share alike, per stirpes, and not per capita.

Lastly—I hereby nominate, constitute and appoint Nelson Runyon, William H. Shotwell and James F. Mac Donald, all of Plainfield, N.J., and the survivors and survivor of them, executors and executor of this my last will and testament, hereby authorizing and empowering my said executors, and the survivors and survivor of them, to sell and dispose of any and all real estate of which I may die seized, and either at public or private sale, in their or his discretion, and to give good and sufficient deed or deeds of conveyance in the law therefor, to the purchaser or purchasers thereof, and I hereby order and direct that my said executors shall not, nor shall either of them be required to give bonds for the execution of their duties as such executors or executor, hereby revoking all other and former wills by me at any time heretofore made.

In witness whereof I, the said Sarah M. Latimer, have hereunto set my hand and seal at Plainfield aforesaid, this eighteenth day of January, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-nine.

SARAH M. LATIMER. [L. S.]

Signed, sealed, published and declared by the said Sarah M. Latimer, as and for her last will and testament, in our presence, who at her request, and in her presence and in the presence of each other, have hereunto subscribed our names as witnesses—The word "pay to" on page 3, line 2, first interlined.

RUDOLPHUS MACDONALD,
Plainfield, N. J.

Not Authorized by the Lodge.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—Having read in your paper, that William E. Gardner a member of Jerusalem Lodge, No. 26, F. and A. M., had filed a caveat against the will of the late Sarah M. Latimer, I take this method to inform the public that he had no authority from the Lodge to file such a paper.

HENRY WOODLAND,
Worshipful Master.
Plainfield, N. J., Feb. 15, 1889.

Married for Money, But Got None.

A man who worked recently at the Shackelton factory in Bound Brook, and later for the Pond Tool Company in this city, giving his name as Edward Dick, is reported to be the former Edward Hugh McKenzie, a Scotch tramp heir, who married a Miss Johnson near New Brunswick and left her, when the inheritance failed to materialize. McKenzie represented to the woman that he had been left a large fortune, and under this pretense he wooed and won her.

Extracts From the Rev. C. B. Mitchell's Periodical Leaflet, "The Visitor."

God bless the little ones; but let their presence at the sociable be a necessary exception.

Mr. Alfred A. Taft and family have returned to their home in this city, and many friends welcome them.

The pulpits of most of our churches have been proffered to our Methodist ministers on Conference Sunday.

Has the pastor yet called on you? Have you yet called on the pastor? He and his wife are at home every Monday evening and will welcome all.

There were too many children at the last sociable. Most of them were young enough to be in bed at 9 o'clock.

Five-eighths of the members of the Juniors' Class have Bibles of their own. The pastor has never found elsewhere so many children owning their own Bibles.

The Oxford League was fully organized Jan. 18, and the following officers were elected: President, the Pastor; 1st Vice President, Dr. Hurlbut; 2d Vice President, W. M. McGee; 3d Vice President, George R. Cornwell; Secretary, J. Frank Martin; Treasurer, Miss Ida Angleman; Committee on Religious Work, Dr. Hurlbut, Geo. M. Rittenhouse, George Angleman, Jr.; Committee on Literary Work, Walter McGee, G. Clifton Martine, Harry Morrison; Committee on Social Work, George R. Cornwell, Edith Katline, Carrie Fisher.

The next annual session of the Newark Conference will meet in our church, April 3. About 250 ministers are expected. Let all hearts and homes be open for their welcome.

The return of Dr. Hurlbut from his visit to the Conferences in the far Southwest has not only gladdened the hearts of those living at 62 East Fifth street, but hundreds of friends welcome his return to church and social circles.

Dr. Van Meter is very happy and successful in his college work at Baltimore. Every day the pastor is comforted with evidences of the Doctor's faithfulness during his pastorate here, and many are asking if he will be present during the Conference. Hundreds of those to whom he has so faithfully ministered will give him a hearty welcome if he comes.

Is it not strange that in so large a church as ours there is no "Woman's Home Missionary Society? Let the ladies organize an Auxiliary at once. While we are not doing too much for the foreign field, we ought to do more in the home field. Many of our ministers on the Western frontier have not overcoats to shield them from Winter blasts as they go from place to place over large circuits.

Our church has one of the finest Sunday School rooms in the country. Vincent chapel is the admiration of all who behold it. We have an excellent Superintendent, Mr. James W. Jackson, who has for his assistant Dr. Hurlbut, a fine body of devoted teachers, and all modern helps and conveniences for thorough Sunday school work. We are proud of our school. There is room for more scholars. Let each scholar strive to bring one new recruit.

BELFORD'S MAGAZINE.
DONN PIATT, Editor.

Though BELFORD'S MAGAZINE is the latest comer in the field of periodical literature, the best proof of its prosperity is the fact that its paid up subscription list has reached a figure eminently satisfactory to the publishers.

BELFORD'S MAGAZINE is distinctly American and commends itself to all intelligent and thoughtful persons who wish to keep themselves posted on the great questions of the day.

Under the able and brilliant management of Col. Donn Piatt it will each month in its editorial department speak out fearlessly but fairly, and with thorough independence, on all questions of public importance.

Its long novel, given in each number complete, by some one of our popular authors, such as Julian Hawthorne, Edgar Saltus, Edgar Fawcett, Mrs. Elizabeth Bellamy and a score of other well known names, is a characteristic of BELFORD'S MAGAZINE.

Prof. Sumner, David A. Wells, Henry George, Henry Watterson, John G. Carlisle, Frank Hurd, are some of the contributors to BELFORD'S MAGAZINE on political and economic subjects.

Short stories, two or more of which are contributed to each number, sketches, dramatic notes, passing events and book reviews, combine to make BELFORD'S one of the most readable and interesting periodicals now before the public.

Send for a three months' trial subscription, 75 cents. $2.50 a year; 25 cents a number. Enclose 5 cents for sample copy.

—Oh! for a Y. M. C. A. building.

—What's the matter with the Town Clock? It's never "all right."

—The coal dealers have settled upon $5.50 as the price of coal at present.

—Will the someone who is paid for winding the town clock, please set and start it?

—A quartette choir for the First Baptist church, is one of the long-felt-wants talked of.

—A bill has been introduced in the Legislature to provide for gas examiners in each county.

—Only two more weeks of worldly dissipation for those who [illegible] good umbrellas, keep lent.

—Local builders say the prospect for house-building is much greater than it was a year ago.

—Next Friday afternoon and evening there will be roller skating and a band concert at The Crescent.

—The New Jersey State Chess Association will hold a tournament in this city on Washington's Birthday.

—The Town Clock still stands at 2:20. Was it here with the man who gets ten steps a year for winding it?

—The offices of the Chief of Police, City Clerk and Health Inspector, have been wired for incandescent lighting.

—The city has been paying someone for keeping the Town Clock in condition, yet its all wrong. Where is the fault?

—It is probable that the attendance at The Crescent, Friday afternoon and evening, will be fully a thousand big and little.

—A train of vestibule Pullman cars passed through Plainfield, Monday a. m. at 10:18, making a through trip over the B. & O. lines.

—The Central Railroad Company had a great snow plough recently built for that road. Engine 167 was over the road with it a few days ago.

—The first grand entertainment of the Catholic Young Men's Literary Union, will be held in St. Mary's School Hall, on Friday evening of this week.

—The Plainfield Reform Club will hold appropriate anniversary exercises on Washington's Birthday, Feb. 22d—the date of its organization in 1884.

—Some of the colored people in this city are trying to arrange an eight-hour walking match. The affair would doubtless attract a large audience.

—At the G. A. R. Encampment last week 111 Posts, with a membership of [illegible] in this State, were reported, being a gain of two posts and 58 members.

—A band concert and roller skating in The Crescent, will be the principal attractions in this city on the afternoon and evening of Washington's Birthday.

—The Summer girl can breathe easier now. The supply of ice cream will be all right. They have been cutting ice [illegible] inches thick on the upper Hudson.

—Tramps have become remarkably numerous within the past few days. They profess to be very hungry and in consequence are very obnoxious to housewives.

—Assembly bill No. [illegible], giving defendants upon trial on any indictment the right to challenge 12 jurors of the general panel instead of 6, has passed that body.

—During the afternoon of Washington's birthday, Gazelle Engine Company will take their apparatus out for a wash. A full attendance of the members is desired.

—There will be no attraction for the Plainfield people during Washington's Birthday like the band concert and roller skating at The Crescent. Everybody is going.

—At the Friends' First-Day School Sunday, short but instructive addresses were made by Phebe Wright and Doctor Shotwell, both residents of Monmouth county.

—The early closing movement among the saloon and hotel keepers went into effect on Saturday evening, and at 11 P. M. all the hotel and saloon bars were closed for the night.

—Mr. J. H. Wilson advertised for thirty men last evening, and he had no difficulty in securing the required number. The men were put to work harvesting ice in Washington Valley.

—The Woodruff parlor cars now being run on the Central Railroad, are soon to be superseded by the cars of the Pullman Palace Car Company. Vestibule "flyers" are not far distant.

—The vendue season has opened and will soon be in full bloom. If you want a good attendance at your sale have your bills printed at this office and insert the advertisement in THE PRESS.

—The severe rain storm of Saturday and Monday, has been a hard one on the ice crop, the high water in the streams breaking up the ice, and causing much of it to pass out down stream.

—The large and handsome St. Bernard dog, belonging to Mr. Geo. Thatcher, the coroner, was killed recently. The animal was considered dangerous, and it was deemed advisable to kill him.

—The reported elopement of two of the help at the City Hotel on Sunday, proved to be false. The couple referred to simply went carriage riding, and the blame is fastened on "Bangs," the night porter.

—Rev. Father Gessner, pastor of St. Patrick's Roman Catholic church, in the lower part of Elizabeth, Sunday expelled from the church five young ladies for attending a ball and indulging in dancing, contrary to the wishes of the priest.

—While a funeral cortege was en route from Dunellen to this city a few days ago, a hub-box was discovered on one of the wheels of the hearse. It was found necessary to stop the procession, secure another hearse and transfer the remains, before proceeding on the journey.

—Although Monday night was stormy, quite a party of Plainfield people went to New York to see "Sweet Lavender" at the Lyceum theatre. It was souvenir night, but the house could not hold any more than is attracted nightly by this charming play and its perfect cast.

—Capt. Wm. Hand has received another consignment of Florida oranges from his brother who is located there. Among the lot was a few boxes of choice blood oranges, which the Captain will dispose of at $4 a box. Captain Hand receives on an average 20 boxes a week direct from Florida.

—Why do not some of the society girls give a chocolate? An entertainment of this kind is more novel and quite as pleasing as five o'clock teas. [illegible] are introduced and the prize is a box of chocolate creams. The girls are chocolate color and the refreshments dainty cups of chocolate with wafers, cream and cups of chocolate.

Before dispersing, refreshments were served, adding to the enjoyment of the evening.

—The postoffice will close at 10 A. M., on Washington's Birthday, and remain closed for the day. One delivery and one collection of mail matter will be made in the morning.

What's the Matter With the Street Commissioner?

Decent people have been compelled for years to wade through the water, mud or dirt that covers the Park avenue sidewalk East of the railroad bridge, to the depth of an inch or over, but a high and dry board-walk has been provided at that point for the comfort of the tramps and disorderlies who are escorted into the City Jail.

Card of Thanks.

The ladies of Mizpah Lodge, No. 1, Independent Order of Odd Ladies, of this city wish to express their gratitude, and at the same time thank all those who assisted them in their recent entertainment in Warren Mission chapel. The entertainment was a success in every way and the ladies constituting the Committee of Arrangements take this method of thanking their friends who so kindly assisted them in their undertaking.

The Night School.

It is to be regretted that the night school for men is on the decline. The largest number ever attending was 116. Thursday night the attendance numbered 94. Those who attend the night school are loud in their praise of the teachers who so kindly render their services for the enlightenment of mankind. The ladies who render their services are competent teachers and the pupils are heartily in accord with their instructors.

An Evening Sociable.

Friday ev'ng the members of Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., tendered an evening sociable to the Councilor, Charles M. Post, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. I. H. Boehm, No. 7 West Front street. There were about 50 couple present, and they enjoyed themselves dancing until early next morning. Refreshments were served and a very social time was had throughout. The grand march was led by Mr. Charles M. Post with Miss Maggie Burke. The music was furnished by Prof. O'Reilly. The Committee of Arrangements consisted of Messrs D. S. Dunavan, Wm. Demarest, Geo. R. Wyckoff, Wm. B. Sharp and Robert E. Connolly.

A State Tournament in Plainfield.

At Laing's Hall during Friday, will take place the fourth annual tournament of the State Chess Association for the championship of New Jersey. The title and trophy are now the possessions of Mr. R. B. Keys of East Sixth street, President of the Plainfield Chess Club.

There will be present representative players from different parts of the State, among whom will be Mr. E. C. Stokes of Millville, who held the championship for two years.

In addition to the Championship Cup, there will be other prizes to be contested for, chief among which will be the gold medal offered by Plainfield citizens, one well worthy of the givers and which will no doubt incite strong efforts to win. The entrance fee for members is $1, and there will in all probability be forty or fifty participants.

Reform Hall Meeting.

Reform Hall was well filled Sunday evening, President French occupying the chair and Mr. Vanderbeek leading the music. Doctor Shotwell read the scripture lesson and George M. Angleman offered prayer.

The speaker, as announced, was Doctor John H. Shotwell of Asbury Park. He is an outspoken advocate of temperance and opponent of the liquor license system. A pleasing feature of his address was the introduction of several appropriate poetic recitations, which being admirably rendered, were received with favor by the audience. His comparison of the license question in the Common Council to the "House that Jack built," provoked mirth while displaying some strong points.

The President then gave notice of the coming anniversary of the Club on Washington's birthday, and also of Judge Groo, of New York, as the expected speaker next Sunday evening. With the singing of "Bringing in the Sheaves" the meeting closed.

The Death Record.

Mr. Wm. Squires, an old and respected resident of North Plainfield, died at his home on Steiner place, Sunday night, after a lingering illness from gangrene. The deceased was 77 years of age and for many years past he has carried on the wheelwright business in North Plainfield. The funeral took place in Warren Mission chapel Tuesday afternoon at three o'clock.

Mary Stewart, a single woman, aged forty years, and a resident of Westfield, was admitted to Muhlenberg Hospital on Tuesday of last week, and on Saturday night she died of strangulated hernia. The body was removed to A. M. Runyon & Sons' undertaking rooms. The deceased had no known relatives, and the remains were interred in Calvary Cemetery, L. I., on Wednesday, where the deceased owned a plot.

At the home of his mother, Mrs. Salome Scheddecker, No. 31 Church street, on Saturday night, occurred the death of Frederick, the eldest son. The deceased was in the fortieth year of his age, and had been absent from Plainfield for the past eighteen years. He returned from Willow Grove, Pa., about two weeks ago, where he was for several years engaged in the barber business. Death resulted from heart disease. Rev. Dr. Ketcham conducted the funeral from the house Tuesday at 2 P. M. Interment was made in the Presbyterian Cemetery in North Plainfield.

THE BOROUGH COUNCIL.

The Borough Council met in adjourned session Friday night, the members present being Mayor Cooley, and Councilmen Emmons, Needham, McGee. The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

A petition was presented and referred, asking for a sidewalk on Chatham street at Warren street.

Claims were presented and referred as follows: T. W. Morrison, $14; W. L. Force & Bro., 5.

Clerk Arnold presented his fourth annual report, which was audited by the Auditing Committe on Thursday evening. The report was read and filed.

Messrs Riker and Needham constituting a majority of the Auditing Committee, reported that they had examined Collector Spencer's books and found them correct. The report was received and filed, as was also the report of Collector Spencer.

Mr. McGee submitted the annual report of the Fire, Water and Lamps Committee, which was read and ordered on file.

Mr. Hegeman, from the Street Committee being absent, Mr. McGee read the Street Committee's annual report. The report itemized the work done on the streets during the past twelve months, and the cost of the same. It also told of the work which the Committee has laid out for the coming year. The document is a lengthy one, and is composed mostly of figures. It was filed.

The above reports shows these expenditures for the year: Streets $3,100; lights $2,200; fire department expenses $2,300.

Mr. McGee presented a resolution which prevailed, authorizing the publication in pamphlet form, to the lowest bidder, the above reports presented during the evening. The reports were also authorized published in the daily papers.

Council then adjourned.

A New Lodge Organized.

A new lodge of Good Templars was organized at the residence of Mr. John R. Naylor, 15 Lake street, 14th inst., under the name of the "Alpha Lodge, Independent Order of Good Templars."

The following officers were elected and installed:

Chief Templar—Mr. John R. Naylor.
Vice Templar—Miss Ida Naylor.
Secretary—Miss Della Randolph.
Financial Secretary—Miss Louise Westerfield.
Treasurer—Mrs. Elizabeth Naylor.
Marshal—Mr. Edwin Wheeler.
I. G. T.—Miss Sarah M. Loss.
Guard—Mr. Nathan Loss.
Past Chief Templar—Miss Leona Burdick.

The officers were installed by Deputy Chief Templar, F. B. Roberson of Newark. There was quite a number of visiting members present from Elizabeth, Newark and Brooklyn.

An All-Night Reception.

A wedding and reception took place at Millstone, 13th inst., which attracted a great deal of attention in that section. Miss Mary B. Vreeland, the pretty daughter of Mr. John Vreeland, was united to Mr. Lewis Van Alstine, of this city.

Rev. Dr. McWilliams, pastor of the Reformed church, performed the ceremony, which was witnessed by fifty guests from Plainfield, Asbury Park, New York and other places. The bride was handsomely dressed in white satin, elaborately trimmed.

The wedding occurred at 7 o'clock, but the festivities did not culminate until an early hour the next morning.

The bride was the recipient of many valuable presents. Mr. and Mrs. Van Alstine left the merry makers at 11 o'clock, departing for a protracted wedding tour in the South.

Yale Club Prize.

The Plainfield Yale Club has taken another step towards arousing in the youth of Plainfield an interest in Yale University. Some time ago it was announced that the Club intended to offer a prize to the Plainfielder passing the best entrance examination to the University; and the offer has now been officially made. At a meeting of the Club held 14th instant at the residence of Rev. Wm. R. Richards, the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That this Club give an annual prize of $25 to that Plainfield student who shall pass the best entrance examination to the academical department of Yale University, provided that there shall be two or more competitors.

The prize will be awarded for the first time on the examinations to be held in the coming June. Three competitors are already in the field.

Mizpah Lodge Entertainment.

The entertainment given in Warren Mission chapel, 14th inst., under the auspices of Mizpah Lodge, No. 1, Independent Order of Odd Ladies, was a great success, both from a financial and social point of view. The attendance was large, and the ladies having the entertainment in charge will be substantially rewarded for their efforts. Following was the programme:

Overture	Orchestra
Recitation	Mr. E. Morse
Piano Duett	Misses Westphall & Schultz
Character Reading	Clara Weber
Violin Solo	Mr. P. Grade
Song	Miss Fowler
Recitation	Mr. J. H. Carney
Comic song	Mr. S. Chilvers
Cinderella	By Odd Ladies' Daughters

PART SECOND.

Orchestra	Selections
Comic Dialogue	Miss Fowler & Mr. Buckley
Reading	Miss Zeiss
Zither Solo	Mr Mynor
Vocal Duett	Misses Lottie & Daisy Morse
Katy's Letter	By Three Characters
Song	Mr Jule Boutes
Recitation	Miss Fannie Westphall
Song	Mr. Chilvers
Sawing Match	By Contestants

The recitations of Mr. Carney were especially well received and repeatedly encored. This gentleman was also favored with a handsome boquet. Mr. Chilvers, too, was recalled, and all who took part received much applause.

The Sawing Match was between Mrs. E. C. Morse, Mrs. George Demarest, Mrs. J. Martin and Mrs. James Buckly, as Miss Hap, Miss Judge, Miss Fortune, and Miss Understanding. Mrs. Morse won the prize, a handsome silver cake-basket.

Miss Fanny Westphal was Cinderella, Miss Lucy Westphal, the Fairy Godmother, Miss Lulu Carmon was the Prince, the wicked sisters were Miss Emma Kurzhals, and Miss Bessie Magus, and the "Visitors" were Miss Jennie Brokaw and Miss May Schultz.

Jimmie Ingram as a colored boy, with Mrs. J. Martin, and Mrs. G. Demarest, gave the dialogue of "Katy's Letter" in a very amusing manner.

THE LATTIMER WILL.

[From THE PRESS of Feb. 16.]

Yesterday at noon the ten-day delay required by law, expired, and the will of the late Mrs. Lattimer was to have been offered for probate in the office of the Surrogate at Elizabeth. But when the executors read in THE PRESS that caveats had been filed against it their intentions were changed.

As the will cannot be proved until the caveats have been removed, it will probably remain in the custody of the executors until an examination is had of the claims of the objectors, Messrs Carman Parse and Wm. E. Gardner.

Mr. Parse, who is understood to have been an executor under a previous will of about Feb. 1, 1888, feels that he has been unjustly treated and believes that his acts as Mrs. Lattimer's adviser have been misrepresented to her. In consequence of such misrepresentation, he claims, he was removed from the office of executor by the new will that she was influenced to make, and that thereby his integrity and financial standing has been damaged. He has therefore filed a caveat as the most effective step towards a vindication of himself.

Mr. Gardner's caveat is to the effect that he is a member of Jerusalem Lodge F. and A. M., of this city, one of the legatees in the former will. His proceedings, THE PRESS is told, are against the wishes of the Trustees of the Lodge. Anyway the breaking of the last will would not help the Lodge, as the former will is destroyed and the estate would merely be thrown into the hands of an administrator who would divide the property, according to law, among the next of kin.

The Lodge was left by the old will, the sum of $500 with which to keep in good order the plot in the North Plainfield cemetery where Mr. and Mrs. Lattimer are buried. The new will, however, leaves the $500 for the same purpose in the hands of the cemetery trustees. So the Lodge loses nothing as it was left nothing for itself.

It seems that no purpose will be served by the contest except, it may be, the vindication of Mr. Parse; and no one will be benefitted except the Surrogate whose fees will be increased by the delay, and also for any official part he may have in the hearing of the case.

THESE ARE THE CAVEATS.

To George T. Parrott, Esq., Surrogate of the County of Union:

I, Carmon Parse, Executor named in the last Will and Testament of Sarah M. Latimer, late of the City of Plainfield, Union County aforesaid, deceased, bearing date on or about the first day of February, eighteen hundred and eighty-eight, hereby caveat and protest against admitting to probate any paper of later date than February first, A. D., eighteen hundred and eighty-eight, purporting to be the last Will and Testament of said Sarah M. Latimer, until examination and decree therein by the Orphans Court of said County of Union.

Dated February 8, 1889.

C. PARSE.

To George T. Parrot, Esq., Surrogate of the County of Union:

I, William E. Gardner, a member in good standing of Jerusalem Lodge No. 26 of Free and Accepted Masons of the City of Plainfield, in the County of Union and State of New Jersey, one of the legatees in a former will of Mrs. Sarah M. Latimer, do hereby caveat and protest against admitting to probate any papers purporting to be the last Will and Testament of the said Sarah M. Latimer, until examination and decree therein by the Orphans Court of said County of Union.

Dated February 12th, 1889.

WILLIAM E. GARDNER.

THE DEAD MARCH.

Tramp! tramp, tramp in the drunkard's way,
March the feet of a million men,
If none shall pity, and none shall save,
Where will all this marching end?
The young, the strong and the old are there,
In woeful ranks as they hurry past,
With not a moment to think or care
What the fate that comes at last.
Tramp, tramp, tramp,
What a fearful, ghastly throng.
Rouse! Christian! rouse! ere it be too late—
Rescue these souls from the drunkard's fate.

Tramp! tramp, tramp to a drunkard's doom.
Out of boyhood, pure and fair,
Over the thoughts of love and home,
Past the check of a mother's prayer,
Onward and swift to a drunkard's crime,
Over the plea of a wife and child,
Over the holiest ties of time,
Reason lost and soul gone wild.
Tramp! tramp! tramp!
What a fearful, ghastly throng!
Rouse! Christian! Rouse! ere it be too late,
Rescue these souls from a drunkard's fate.

Tramp! tramp, tramp till a drunkard's grave
Hides the broken life of shame—
While souls that Jesus died to save
Meet a future we dare not name;
God help us all—there's a cross to bear,
And work to do for the mighty throng;
God give us strength, till the toil and prayer
Shall give place to the victor's song.
Tramp! tramp! tramp!
What a fearful, ghastly throng!
Rouse! Christians! rouse! ere it be too late!
Rescue these souls from a drunkard's fate.

Jailed for Assaulting Her Husband.

Mrs. Simeon Harris of West Fourth street, was a prisoner before Justice Hetfield, Friday, charged by her husband with assault and battery. This having been her second offence she was was committed to the County Jail to await the action of the Grand Jury.

A Half-a-Million Dollar Race Track.

The certificate of organization of the New Jersey Jockey Club, was filed in the County Clerk's office at Elizabeth, 14th inst., and work has already begun on the proposed race track near that city.

The capital stock of the association is placed at $500,000, divided in five thousand shares, and held as follows:

	SHARES
Philip J. Dwyer of Brooklyn	1,250
Michael F. Dwyer of Brooklyn	3,050
F. C. O'Reilly of Orange, N. J	500
John Kelly of New York	200

Next Monday and Tuesday Evenings.

The Ladies' Aid Society of the M. E. church, has engaged Mrs. H. E. Monroe, of Philadelphia, to deliver two lectures in the church on the evenings of Feb. 25 and 26. The subjects will be: "Christ in Art" and "Interesting Places, Official and Literary People of Washington."

Mrs. Monroe will illustrate her lectures with the finest pictures, using the very best stereopticon. The first lecture will be illustrated with sixty leading pictures of the world, which portray Christ's life on earth. The Washington lecture will be illustrated with pictures of notable persons and places of the Capitol.

Passed Away.

THE PRESS told Monday of the dangerous illness of "Daisy" Pound, the seven-year-old and only son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward D. Pound of West Fourth street. Tuesday it is with sincere regret that it records the little one's death which occurred soon after one o'clock of above morning from membranous croup. Death thus robbed a happy household of a bright and promising member. The deceased, though young in years, had endeared himself to all who knew him, and his loss will be especially felt by the bereaved parents, who have had the misfortune to lose three other children by the same complaint.

A German Church Sociable.

A very pleasing entertainment arranged by the ladies of the Aid Society, was held 14th inst. in the lecture room of the German Reformed church, and the congregation present was thus further indebted to the ladies for additional hours of enjoyment. There was a programme of readings and vocal music, followed by refreshments served by willing hands. Mr. Hasselman presided at the organ, and others who took part, were:

The Misses Scholling, Fick, Hulda Pieschinski, Beckstein and L. Seibel. Messrs. V. Utzinger, Heckmann and Jaeger, and Masters Fred and Alf Koechl.

But the Explosion That was Watched For Never Came.

There was great excitement in New Market Saturday. For a while it was supposed that the safety of the town and its inhabitants, was threatened by bold, bad anarchists.

When Mr. Otto returned to his grist mill at noon, he discovered a suspicious looking package just inside the door. It was just large enough to contain a bomb, and as Mr. Otto had let his mill pond out and thereby killed a fine lot of fish, some time ago, and had since been trying to prevent anybody sailing or fishing on his waters, his conscience worked upon his imagination and he felt sure the package contained dynamite or an infernal machine, and that some fish protective society was after him.

The assistance of Mr. Coriell, who appeared on the scene, was secured, and preparation was at once made for an expert investigation of the contents of the package. A shovelful of hot coals was obtained and carried to one corner of a vacant field some distance in the country. The package wrapped in paper, was then dropped on the coals and all hands speedily sought shelter in the suburbs.

But the explosion that they watched for never came. After the paper wrapper burned off, the contents were found to be a bunch of old waste that some one had placed where found.

The Entertainment Given at Music Hall, Thursday Night, a Pronounced Success.

The children of the Loyal Legion of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, gave an entertainment in Music Hall, 14th instant, that was the cause of attracting a large audience. The children were assisted in their efforts by local talent, and on the whole the entertainment was a pronounced success. No admission fee was charged and this fact alone served to comfortably fill Music Hall.

The entertainment was of a miscellaneous nature, and commenced with a temperance ode by Miss Jessie Ellis, followed by prayer by Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes. One of the best delivered numbers on the programme was the address of welcome by Master Henry VanNest, and another number equally deserving of praise was a song by Master Joseph Dunham, entitled "Have courage my boy." Miss Alice Smith followed with a skillfully executed piano solo, "Home, Sweet Home," with variations, and Miss Ellis recited "Jack, the Fisherman."

Messrs Elmer Runyon and R. T. Barnes sang a duett and responded to an encore, Mrs. Barnes accompanying on the piano. Little Harry Mattox recited "The price of a license" and the scholars of the Loyal Temperance Legion sang "Down with the rum curse." Miss Ellis again favored the audience with a recitation, after which the farce of granting or rejecting license applications was enacted. The piece was styled "Home vs. License," and the following characters took part:

President—George Firethrook.
Secretary—Alex. Muir.
Mr. Vampyre—Wesley Thorn.
Teddy O'Rarity, Janitor—Arthur Drake.
Councilmen — Clarence Rittenhouse, Eddie Jennings, Walter Higgins, Elias Pangborn, Clarence Vail, Harry Mattox.

Miss Minnie Martin sang "Has father been here." The Legion sang one verse of America, and after a collection was taken up the audience dispersed.

The Cable Completed.

Manager Runyon of the Telephone Company, Friday completed the cable which spans the space in front of the Winter's property on West Seventh street. The cable is 495 feet long, and is composed of 37 separate wires. All of that district which was cut off from telephonic communication when the telephone war was raging a week or so ago, has again been connected up, and the service is again in working order.

No Flying Switch for the Gilt-Edged Car.

There is a hitch in the arrangements for the special parlor car which was to have been chartered by a select few of the Plainfielders, and which was intended to be connected with the 7:58 A. M. train for New York, and the 5:30 P. M. train for Plainfield.

The Central Company object to detaching the car from the fast 5:30 P. M. Philadelphia train, fearing accidents, but will attach the car to any train stopping at Plainfield.

—In no line of trade is there such an oppportunity for deception and fraud as in the piano and organ business. The ordinary buyer of one of these instruments notices only the case and general appearance and rarely looks at the action work, which is of the greatest importance and should be of the very best material and workmanship: or even if he does, he can tell nothing about it and a salesman, if he is proficient in his business, can almost make him believe white to be black or vice versa. Moral—Buy of a good responsible house like that of S. D. Lauter & Co., of Newark, whose reputation is established, and who can be relied upon for honest and upright dealings. See their advertisement, which appears elsewhere.

Just time enough since the Holidays to take breath and settle down to business. We have been looking about a bit to see what others engaged in the same line of business as ourselves are saying and doing.

It's funny, to say the least, to read the announcements. Here's one who thinks he has a monopoly of all the good clothing made in the world; no clothing but his is fit to wear. Here's another who thinks his method of business the only proper one; all others are "dead" wrong. A third says his clothing is 30 per cent. cheaper than any other. All sorts of inducements are offered, on paper, to attract buyers.

What are we doing? Well we find that the old method of giving an honest dollar's worth for a dollar, without bragging, to be more popular than ever, judged by the growth of our business during 1888. We say this and know it to be true: Not a real point of advantage to be obtained anywhere will be forfeited by dealing with us. Our bid for your patronage for 1889 is the same which we have made for a quarter of a century.

Honest statements about our goods; garments perfect in fit; minute attention to all details connected with the manufacture; and prices which, comparing the goods, cannot be beaten. It will pay you to watch our announcements during the present year. It will save you not a little uncertaintw and a good deal of time and money to patronize us when in need of clothes for self or children.

HIS FIRST DUEL.

W[illegible] had been [illegible] ing, in the [illegible], the interesting subjects of duels, duelists and dueling, when the spirit moved our usually silent Major to [illegible] thus:

"I fought my first duel when only a month or so over twelve years of age, and it would take much wrong to make me fight another under the same conditions.

"My antagonist was a boy of about thirteen, a natural born tiger, with the temper of a fiend. His name was Chalky Parrs. I was then attending a private school in the interior of the State, my over-indulgent mother having sent me there. I lived with my uncle, a doctor, who had a [illegible] of children of his own, and mother hoped that he and the school 'would do something with me.'

"Before my arrival Chalk Parrs had been king bee of the institute. I disputed his [illegible] sway and soon had a following. This galled him terribly, and after much [illegible], one day at recess, on my return to my desk, I found there a note containing a challenge to mortal combat, signed by Chalky Parrs.

"I never thought of refusing. Immediately I wrote a note of acceptance and passed it to him, naming time, 'next Saturday afternoon;' place, '[illegible] the big creek;' weapons, 'pistols.' I added a P.S.: 'I want to see you after hours.' After hours we met. Our consultation resulted in this: First. We must fight without seconds, for we could trust none of the boys with such a serious matter. Second: I was to procure the weapons, etc. Third: We were to meet on Saturday morning to perfect arrangements.

"Saturday came. I had been unable to induce any merchant to sell me one or two pistols, and borrowed a common little brass-barreled affair from the room of an absent older cousin. A quarter of a pound of powder I had been furnished by a storekeeper. Bullets or shot or lead I could not buy. I met Chalk at the school yard and reported.

"'Well,' said he, after long thought, 'if you can't buy bullets or shot you can buy [illegible].'

"'[illegible]?' I said.

"'Yes, go get two [illegible] and we can cut them up and hammer 'em into slugs.'

"The [illegible] were at once and easily procured. We adjourned to the stable of Chalk's father and there, with old knife, cut and hammered until we had a handful of [illegible] slugs and bits. The Parrs family [illegible] was under the shed. I proposed that we get in it. But the Parrs family horse was away in the wagon.

"Now, my uncle had in his stable a fat old horse, Old Jack, who was [illegible] off and [illegible] for faithful services. I knew the family, with carriage and coachman, were away, for I had refused to go with them. I could take Jack! Together we went to the stable, placed a set of harness on the fat old [illegible], and drove him by back streets to the Parrs stable, where he was quickly hitched to the Parrs buggy.

"Then we departed, side by side, for the [illegible] of action some four miles away. Arriving, we tied Jack to the fence, climbed over the rails, went down to within twenty feet of the [illegible] side and started to prepare for work.

"As we only had one pistol it was necessary that one of us should take first shot. It was agreed that we were to stand ten paces apart, that the man having first shot could advance from his stand while he counted one, two, three, and at the word three he was to fire.

"Chalk cut a big, old copper to toss for first shot. Up she went. 'Heads!' yelled Chalk, and heads it was. He [illegible] and [illegible] looked [illegible] for my head.

"I shall never forget the actually fiendish look of joy and rage that came over his face when he found he had won. Before that he was cool, or seemed to be, now his temper was let loose and he was a young demon. I am free to say that had I gained first shot I would have tried to 'wing' him in the arm or shoulder. But he meant murder, I could see it and I knew it.

"He made a [illegible] at the bundle in which [illegible] our munitions of war, bore it [illegible] and proceeded to load the weapon. First, the powder, of course, then a little paper, which [illegible] down with [illegible]. Then all the slugs and bits he could get in the barrel. Then he forced lower [illegible] with a stone on the [illegible]. Then a little more powder and then he carefully packed in all the powder he could until [illegible] from the [illegible].

"'Ready!' he said.

"I took my place, he at my side. Then he stepped off ten paces and came to 'bout face.' Ten paces never looked so short before, boys, in my life.

"I stood there with folded arms; a little fool who had no more sense than to be there, but not sense to think, and I don't think I did think.

"'One!' and he took a step. Thunder! what a long step it seemed.

"'Two!' and another step that lessened the distance horribly.

"It seemed as if at the next fatal count he must be pressing the muzzle of that confounded brass barrel against me.

"He 'made ready' by raising the piece in his right hand and [illegible] it opposite his left eye at about the distance the [illegible] sight of a musket would be after a leveling [illegible] he held his left arm extended, with [illegible] closed and thumb pointing upward.

"Sure by the position he was aiming at my face and about to give the final step and word.

"I closed my eyes.

"'Three!'

"And a roar like a young thunderbolt, a [illegible], a stinging in my forehead, and a yell like [illegible] Comanche.

"I was at first so dazed that I really thought I had uttered that yell. I opened my eyes and put my hand to my forehead, then withdrew it and found a small amount of blood on it. [illegible] my head and began to believe it was still all there.

"Another yell and groans made me look about me. Rolling over the ground, [illegible] his left hand [illegible] right, was my late antagonist.

"I ran to him just as he turned very white and stretched out. I rushed to the creek, filled my cap with water and dashed it over him. Revived somewhat, he let me [illegible] the damages.

"Poor Chalk! In his haste and eagerness he had failed to take down his leading [illegible]—the left thumb—before he pulled the trigger, he had also so overloaded the trashy [illegible] that it burst. That's why I'm here to-day. A small piece of pewter took me in the forehead and made a slight flesh wound. But Chalk's thumb received the full benefit of the [illegible]; from the joint it was gone, and the rest of the hand was in a terribly [illegible] condition.

"Tearing up handkerchiefs and other white goods I bound up the remains with [illegible] still, as I had seen uncle [illegible] wounds; and then helped him to and into the buggy and started to town.

"[illegible] Chalk was in the bottom of our vehicle when I passed a [illegible] wagon on the road and was hailed to halt. The driver of that wagon was Parrs, Chalk's father, and he knew the buggy.

"Explanations were in order. They were [illegible] given in a satisfactory manner. We were taken in tow of the wagon and meekly [illegible] to the Parrs stable. I was told to [illegible] home; that Mr. Parrs would return old Jack. He did so; because no interviewer [illegible], and I did not feel myself [illegible] of a [illegible] when ordered at once to bed, supperless [illegible] I was [illegible]. To bed, however, I went and there I remained until next day, when I was fed and shipped off to my mother in Philadelphia, with the simple explanation that it was found that neither the school nor Uncle Doctor 'could do any thing with me.'

"That was my first duel, and, as I said, it would be something very serious that would make me fight on the same terms again."

A NIGHT IN NEBRASKA.

A [illegible] of Terrors as Well as of Errors.

Whenever I hear or read of nights of terror, I recall a night that I spent in Nebraska on the borders of an Indian reservation. There were two women and five children in the family, but neither man nor boy.

I was visiting there and my mind was filled to overflowing with pictures of horrors perpetrated by the Indians who had terrorized the community with their depredations.

On this particular night we had retired early, the children sleeping above stairs, my friend and myself in the second of the two rooms which constituted the lower floor. We had both been asleep when we were awakened by a stealthy footstep under the one window which was at the foot of the bed. One pane of glass was broken out, and, as there was no glass nearer than Omaha, it had not been replaced.

"Indians," said my friend, in the sepulchral [illegible] in the dead hour of night.

I was so frightened that I literally thought I should die. My heart pounded like an engine, and I felt as if it certainly would smother.

"Are they breaking in?" I asked.

"No; they have been stealing more chickens. They won't trouble us [illegible] the [illegible]."

"[illegible]" I took hold of it and walked to [illegible] from the floor. It was not loaded, and if it had been I could not have hit a barn door with it, but I intended to threaten [illegible] with it.

Then some horrible black thing loomed into the pane where the glass was broken.

"It's an Indian's head," gasped my friend, in a whispering voice.

As [illegible] Indians were not a product of the country, I began to wonder as to whether the aborigine could get in through that hole or not. A lamp burned very low in the other room. I could only discern a [illegible] bulk in the window.

"If you will get up and turn on the light, I will frighten him away with the gun," I suggested valiantly in a blood-curdling whisper. At that moment something happened. The head bounded into the room, and I could distinctly hear it say:

"Ugh! ugh! how!"

This is a true story. I shall never know how I did it, but in a twinkling I stood over the "head" with the lamp in one hand, and the [illegible] in the other. It was an old black hen! The Indians had visited the chicken house, and stolen a lot of the poultry, and one frightened forlorn thing had escaped and flew, blindly—or attracted by the light—into the empty pane. My vivid imagination supplied the rest.

MRS. M. L. RAYNE.

Two Souls, Etc.

She was a bride—a dimity-made sort of a little woman who clung to her new lord with the tenacity of an octopus. Every body at the hotel table [illegible] and laughed at her. She and her hubby ate out of the same plate, drank from the same glass, and sipped out of one spoon, possibly to show their conjugal clingingness. But one day a gloom overspread the entire [illegible]. The model couple had quarreled. The chambermaid reported the facts in the case as overheard through an intelligent keyhole. He had been heard to assert his rights. "As long as I have the spirit of a man I will reserve the right to my own toothbrush," he had said, and the mere baby woman was ready to declare marriage a failure.

Beginning Young.

The youngest pupil of a Sunday-school in Washington was told to learn a couplet of poetry to repeat at an exhibition. She was [illegible] studying her mother's volume of Tennyson, and when called upon for her selection the little miss arose and promptly recited:

"'Tis better to have loved and lost
Than never to have loved at all."

Then she sat down gravely, amid shouts of laughter.

AUNT MEL.

She was thin as a lathe, and straight as [illegible]. Her face was wrinkled and weather-beaten like an old sailor's. But her eyes were bright and her voice soft and musical—just as when she was a girl. Her hands [illegible] a little, but that did not matter [illegible], for, as she laughingly said, she was old enough to be somewhat "shaky"—being fifty, she averred, if a day.

[illegible] sat around the kitchen fire-place, [illegible] had known three generations, and were talking of flowers. One preferred the violet; another the pink; Miss Dolly, whose cheeks were very red, loved the rose best.

"I'll tell you, children," said Aunt Mel, taking the pipe from her mouth and [illegible] it up [illegible] the mantel [illegible] of you [illegible]

[illegible] asked.

[illegible]

"Well, I think so, any how; an' if you [illegible] know why, I'll tell you."

She told them this story:

"When I was er gurl, I had er cousin, [illegible] as you all know. We was raised up together. He was never way from home [illegible] in all his life till the war broke out, when he went off an' never came back. It was in the fall uv the year when he left, an' them althy bushes [illegible] there by the front gate was full uv white, purple an' red blooms. I took three uv 'em an' pinned 'em to his gray coat—he was as [illegible] a young man as ever made [illegible]—then I pressed some between the leaves uv his Bible. 'Mel,' he said, an' his voice was so high up in his throat he could hardly speak, 'I allers loved these althy blooms, an' blossoms, an' now I love 'em more'—an' then he kissed me, and was gone. He was killed at the battle uv [illegible]. Jesse Sykes was wounded in the [illegible] an' come home. He fetched [illegible] that Bible an' Tom's coat. Tom's leg was torn by a shell, an' the doctors cut it [illegible]

"'Jess,' he said, 'you ain't hurt, but I'm goin' ter die. In my coat there's er [illegible] uv althy flowers, an' my Bible; take [illegible] an' give 'em to Mel.' An' Jesse fotch [illegible] back to me. 'Miss Mel,' he says, when he give 'em to me, 'I've fotch back all uv [illegible] I could,' an' then he bust out cryin' [illegible] child. I've got 'em all yit, children, in my trunk, but nobody never sees 'em but me. When them althys bloom out, there, I never git tired lookin' at 'em, an' they seem to grow purtier an' purtier the more I look; [illegible] sometimes [illegible] b'lieve Tom's soul is [illegible] looks out through 'em at me."

Dolly's cheeks were pale, and wet with [illegible]. She loved althys best [illegible]. They [illegible] in universal favor around that fire-place ever after.

FLOWER-MAKING.

A Delightful Pastime for the Long Winter Evenings—How to Make Tissue-Paper Roses, Azaleas and Poppies.

Summer is a beautiful dream of the past, autumn has gathered up her gorgeous draperies and glided away, and nature has donned her spotless robe of glistening white, giving us the long evenings of winter. How pleasant then for the family circle to be gathered round the cheerful fireside, each happily occupied with some [illegible] employment.

A delightful pastime is the making of paper flowers. The necessary outfit is simple and inexpensive, consisting of:

A white cashmere cushion, five by eight inches, filled with cotton.

A blunt-pointed bodkin with which, by pressure upon the cushion, to crease the upper edges of the petals of the wild-rose and poppy.

A fine knitting needle for curling the petals of the Marshal Niel and La France rose.

Fine wire for fastening together the various parts of the flower.

Tissue-paper, stamens, pistils and foliage, which are usually kept in stock by the stationers.

The French tissue-paper is the best for the purpose, being stronger and coming in finer tints. It is very essential to have a great many tints of yellow to place between other colors. For example, a narrow strip of pale pink between a deeper double strip of yellow produces the magnificent yellow rose known as Mme. Eugene [illegible]. By reversing the order of the colors and placing yellow between the pink we get the true color of the rose La France. The genuine color of the "Marshal Niel" is obtained by using pale yellow between brownish yellow paper. Pale rose-pink or faint yellow [illegible] of paper of a brownish yellow result in the most beautiful [illegible].

Roses of pure white paper without a [illegible] of pink or yellow are not effective, and are appropriate only as [illegible] of mourning. To prepare the paper for use it is drawn between the hands, [illegible] to soften.

The great point which insures success in the making of these roses is a faithful knowledge of the natural rose, [illegible] a true [illegible] of the same, to be used as a pattern, [illegible] the proper [illegible] of the petals, the [illegible], etc.; [illegible] must also be [illegible] in the [illegible] foliage, pistil and stamens to be true to nature.

After a little practice one can make magnificent clusters of roses, so perfect in tint and form that the deception, were it not for the absence of fragrance and rustling touch, would scarcely be detected.

The azalea is another flower which is readily made. Its natural colors are from pure white to dark crimson. A strip of paper two inches deep is folded five times (for the five petals), each being one inch in width. The strip of petals is wrapped about the stamens and wires are extended any desired length to serve as stems. A moss-green is the correct shade of the foliage.

The poppy is made in exactly the same manner as the azalea, with the exception that the upper edges of its petals are creased upon the cushion (same as in the wild rose) and the stamens are ranged around the prominent pistil, which is characteristic of the poppy.

The fashioning of these paper flowers is a source of much enjoyment. They are in great demand in the winter as garnitures of ball dresses, center-pieces for the dining table and various other decorations.

If sprigs of rose geranium be arranged with the flowers it imparts a delightful perfume and makes them appear even more like nature's own creation.

ANNA H[illegible]

He Hated Christmas.

"I hate Christmas, dog gone it," said little Johnny Nelson, as he came rushing into the house without his sled and minus a portion of his ear.

"Goodness gracious! You little torment. What has happened to you?" inquired his frightened mother.

"Bob Dickens wanted to ride on my sled, and I wouldn't let him 'cause he washed my face with snow. Then he tried to take my sled away, and I hit him with a piece of ice. Then he bit my ear, and I hit him again. Then he jumped on me and slapped me, and took my sled, and kicked me; and I came home, 'cause I wouldn't fight."

"LONG JOHN" ANECDOTES.

Some Good Stories That Recall Early Days in Chicago.

New stories occasionally crop out about "Long John" (the late John Wentworth), says the Chicago Tribune. "When he first came to Chicago he served for awhile as a clerk in one of the general stores here, and dealt out calico, molasses, shingle nails, flour and hair-pins with equal impartiality. Among the customers of the store was an Irishman who was a constant irritant to John's bump of animosity on account of a habit he had of always wanting 'some thing thrown in' whenever he paid a bill or made a purchase. So sure as he invested a dollar or paid a bill he requested the salesman to 'throw in' a lead pencil, or a pipe, or a paper of pins, or some other little article.

"One day this Irishman came into the store and, among other articles, purchased a two-gallon jug of molasses. As usual he wanted the investment topped off with a gift.

"'And now, Johnny, dear,' he said, for John was waiting on him, 'can't you throw in a small bit of chewing tobacco?'

"John looked at the customer a moment in disgust, and then, a bright idea seizing him, he pulled the cork from the jug, crammed a lot of tobacco into the molasses, and handed it to the astonished Irishman with the remark that there was his 'tobacco thrown in.'"

"I've heard a story regarding Wentworth and his connection with that store also," said a man to whom this was told. "And, by the way, it was the store conducted by John S. Hogan, in connection with the post-office. Hogan was the postmaster in 1837, and the mail wasn't heavy enough to worry him to any great extent. Whisky was cheap in those days, of course, and it was a custom with many of the store-keepers to keep a bottle or jug handy, at which their customers could refresh themselves. There was one old fellow who drank more of John Hogan's free whisky than, in Wentworth's view, the purchases he made warranted, and so he put up a job on the old man, who, as in the former story, was an Irishman. Pouring the real whisky from the customers' jug he inserted a liberal dose of raw alcohol, cayenne and ginger, and told the habitues of the store to look for results when the mixture touched the bottom of the drinker's stomach. Presently the Irishman came in and made the usual call upon the whisky jug. He poured out a generous tumblerful and gulped it down, while those in the secret prepared to enjoy the look of surprise and astonishment that would come over his face. The old man said nothing for awhile, but stood gazing at the empty glass. He rubbed his stomach and appeared to think. Then he turned around to the crowd, and with the tears running down his face and his voice filled with emotion, gasped out:

"'Holy—mither—of—Moses—bye—but that was good stuff!'"

GIRLS' CORRESPONDENCE.

Why Young Women Should Never Write Letters to Married Men.

A habit very common with a number of our thoughtless young ladies, who do a great many things quietly which they would not like to have known at home—a habit deserving of the strongest condemnation—is that of promiscuous correspondence with gentlemen, whether the gentleman be married or single.

The young ladies who find pleasure in this habit, says Harper's Bazar, use their pens on any pretext that turns up, and sometimes on no pretext at all. We are not really sure that this does not come less under the head of an undesirable habit than a sin, for there is an indelicacy about it quite amounting to immodesty, of which no girl who deserves the respect of others will be guilty.

These young letter-writers, however, generally get a fit reward for their thoughtlessness or their culpability. If their correspondent is a man of systematic habits, their letters are docketed and ticketed, and the clerks have as much of a laugh over them as they wish; and if he is not a systematic man then those letters are at the mercy of any and every one who chooses to waste time in reading them. If their correspondent is a married man then his possession of their letters, even of the most trivial kind, places the writers at a disadvantage. Sooner or later the letters fall into the hands of his wife, who reads the folly or the wickedness with clear eyes, and holds the writer not only in contempt, but in her power.

No young girl can be sure that her correspondent is not merely amusing himself with her; and it is often the case that her letters are unwelcome and a nuisance, and he does not check them and does reply to them not from interest in her, but merely manly chivalry. When the writer has recovered from her folly, or forgotten about her [illegible], there is the letter ready to rise, like an awful betraying ghost, after she herself has possibly undergone a change, that will make her face burn, branded with shame, should the letter ever chance to confront her, or perhaps even the memory of it. Her motive may have been all innocence at the time, but it is left forever under doubt, and, in fact, except in the baldest business affair, there can be no excuse, and, therefore, no innocence, in the matter of a young girl's writing letters to any man not her personal relative or guardian, for about most of those letters there is an [illegible] almost amounting to indecency, and in the end her correspondent himself never thinks other than light of her on account of them.

Something New in Foot-Gear.

"Of all the astonishing inventions," says Invention, "that which is credited to a Japanese gentleman for walking on the waters is one of the most surprising. He is stated to have triumphed after twenty years' labor and sorrow, study and experiment and has now applied for a patent. It is described as something in the nature of foot-gear, made of iron, paper, gum-elastic and wood, elliptical in shape, having gutta-percha tubes and a life-belt attached. It is not announced how locomotion is to be achieved, but it is said that three miles an hour will be the pace. The apparatus weighs two and one-half pounds only, and the wearer will be able to carry a load of twenty-five pounds."

What Becomes of Reporters.

Julian Ralph, a well-known New York newspaper man, in an article in the Epoch on "What Becomes of Reporters?" furnishes these data: About thirty men reporting in New York fifteen years ago are still reporting, and more than half that number died in the harness. In the same time possibly as many as 150 men drifted into the business, made no mark, and drifted out. Of 200 or more reporters the writer had known in New York 30 are still reporting, 50 others are in journalism and 30 of the remainder, who are now in other callings, are conspicuous before the public. The daily press of New York employs about 350 reporters. Mr. Ralph concludes that journalism seems to have but a small outlet into commercial callings.

An Expensive Joke.

An English joker took down the calendar of a business office and hung up one two years old. Dates for important papers were taken from it, and a loss of $20,000 was the result.

A Monarch's Reflection.

When Charles V., after a long and turbulent reign, resigned the crown of Spain and other dominions to his son Philip, reserving to himself merely a small pension, he retired to St. Just, near Placentia, where he amused himself with mechanics. One day he placed before him upon a table a number of watches, which he had vainly endeavored to make agree exactly in their time. Having looked at them for some minutes, he said: "How foolish was I to endeavor to make religious sects all agree in [illegible] doctrine. I might as well expect this as hope that these watches would all move with the same regularity."

A GUESSING MATCH.

Simple Tests Which Illustrate Common Errors of Judgment.

A crank who is an occasional visitor to a down-town office entered the place the other day when nobody appeared to be very busy, says the Pittsburgh Dispatch. Some one was telling a story in which he made mention of some object "about the size of a silver dollar," when the crank interrupted the speaker with the remark:

"I'll bet five dollars there isn't a man in this office who can tell without measuring what the exact size of a silver dollar is."

The bet was not taken, for nobody knew. The crank went on:

"I am also willing to give five dollars to the man who will take his pen or pencil and draw a line which shall represent the exact diameter of a silver dollar."

Upon this all hands made the attempt. A piece of paper was taken, and each took his turn at drawing a line upon it. When all had finished the crank took a dollar from his pocket and placed it successively over each of the marks. Some of them were too long by half an inch, and some lacked almost that much in length. There wasn't one which was not as much as an eighth of an inch out of the way. The eccentric visitor said:

"For men who handle as much money as you do, it is strange you are not more familiar with its size and appearance. Now let me test your judgment in another matter. Here is a long sheet of white paper, which I will place upright against the wall back of this table. Now take your pencils and mark on the paper what you think is the height of an ordinary silk hat. Some of you have a silk hat here, I suppose?"

"Mine is in the other room," answered one of the clerks.

"Well, let it stay there until we want it. Now try to guess how tall the hat is, and mark the paper accordingly."

The estimates afforded a curious illustration of the way men's opinions will differ even about a small matter. Between the shortest and the longest mark there was a difference of nearly four inches. When the hat was brought out and set upon the table against the paper, all the marks, with two exceptions, were from one to three inches too long. The nearest guess was made by a man who made a mark about three-quarters of an inch too short. Then the crank asked for an estimate of the difference in the height of his derby and the silk hat. The guessers didn't come as near as before.

"That is the way it is," said the crank. "People have an idea that a high hat is ever so much higher than a common one, yet you will find if you measure both that the difference is very little. The eye that is not trained in measuring distances will lead its possessor into some serious errors of judgment."

LOVE AT THE WASH-TUB.

A Queensland Cattle-Raiser Wins a Bride in Very Short Order.

Marriageable young women are in great demand in this part of the Queen's dominions, writes a correspondent from Rockhampton, Queensland, Australia. The sexes in this colony are in the proportion of one hundred and twenty-five males to eighty-eight females. The towns, however, retain more than their share of the fair sex, and in the sugar planting districts there is a deplorable dearth of women. Nearly all the land-owners and large planters are married, but most of the whites in their employ are bachelors, and, what is worse, many of the poor fellows haven't a chance to change their condition if they wish to. The result is that whenever a nice white girl goes into the interior on the plantations she has to get married in self protection or else she is so pestered with attentions as almost to drive her out of the country.

A remarkable case of sudden and almost unpremeditated matrimony occurred on a plantation near Winton a few weeks ago. A planter had been to Rockhampton, and had here engaged a strapping good-looking girl to assist his wife in her household duties. After she had been in her new home several days she took her wash-tub out of doors one morning to do the family washing. While hard at work, with soap-suds up to her elbows, along came a squatter who kept a small herd of cattle in the neighborhood. He didn't intend to lose this chance to make the acquaintance of a woman. So he sidled up to the wash-tub and began to talk, and it wasn't long before she was giving him more than half her attention.

After awhile the young man owned up that it was a case of love at first sight as far as he was concerned and he popped the question without any ado. The girl said she was willing if her mistress would indorse him as a worthy young man. That lady thought it would be a good match, and said so; and a quarter of an hour later the brand-new lovers, in their work-day clothes, were footing it three miles away to the house of a magistrate, where the knot was legally tied in short order. The bride finished her washing in the afternoon and that evening she transferred herself to the home of the squatter, which she now adorns, apparently as happy a woman as there is in Queensland.

A great many people do not like this climate, for we are twenty degrees nearer the equator than the residents of New York. But those who do not object to our superabundant sunshine, which makes most of our days pretty warm, though not unhealthful, are doing well; and any presentable young woman who ventures into this colony is apt to have her name changed almost before she knows it.

Majolica and Faience Ware.

Majolica was the name at first given by the Italians to a certain kind of earthenware, because the first specimens that they saw came from Majorca. But as subsequently a large manufacture of the same kind of earthenware was carried on at Faenza, Italy, the name "Majolica" was dropped and "Faence" substituted. The term Majolica is now used to designate vessels made of colored clay, and coated with white opaque varnish, so as to resemble "faience," but it is of much less value than the latter.

A New Cause of Fires.

At the office of the Insurance Commissioner of Massachusetts an annual record of fires in the State is kept, the engineers in the different towns and cities being expected to furnish a list. These lists are compared with one cut from the papers as they occur and verified. A letter received at the office recently contained the following original reason for a conflagration: "Caused by friction generated by rubbing a large insurance policy against a very small stock of goods."

THE PINK LAMB.

BABE SCOTT was but six years old, yet she had no friends to take care of her. So she was sent to the poor-house, where sad, dull folks worked and moped, and no child had much love poured out on her.

Babe was put in a stout dress and had her curls cut close. And when she went to school more than one rude child called her poor-house girl. But she had a glad heart, and in it laid up no pain or spite. She was kind and would do a good turn to those who used her worst. When frost nipped her plump hands she smiled to see them look red.

Babe loved her book, but when school was out she loved to run home and help feed those poor mad folks who were kept in a stone house in the yard. They were barred close in cells, and some would not speak, while some would yell and sing.

It made Babe's heart ache to see them shut up, and she did not dread to walk the hall by their bars. On hot days she brought them cool leaves or sweet buds. And when snow came, she loved to bring them the hot food which was cooked for them.

One man had long been called Blue John, from the stout blue gown he had to wear. He would tear up a brown sack. He said his name was Blue John, and he must have a blue case or none at all.

So when Babe's face looked through his bars, and he saw her clear eyes and bright cheeks, he gave her a new name, too, and was glad to see the Pink Lamb.

"Blue John," Babe would say, as she rapped on the bar with a tin spoon, "where are you?"

"Here I am, Pink Lamb," he would say, as he rose from his straw.

"Do you want your mush and milk, Blue John?"

"If the Pink Lamb has brought it."

"Well, here it is. Don't burn your mouth."

"I will take care, Pink Lamb."

Then Babe would watch him eat, and say: "Put your hair out of your eyes, Blue John. Don't make a noise with your spoon. I learned from the [illegible] at school it is not nice to smack your mouth when you eat."

At first Blue John would glare at Babe when she chid him, but he grew to love her call and to do just as she wished. His mind was not so black as it had been, and he shocked all the mad folks with soft words when they would yell in the night.

But one night there was great cause for them to yell, and yell they did with throats full of fear. The huge pipe which brought heat up to their cells brought up flame, too, and the stone house was soon in a roar with fire. Hot air shot high up the sky and sparks flew so they could be seen for miles.

All the folks ran out of the poor-house and screamed as they saw the mad-house burn, but the man who kept them could give but small help from them when he tried to put out the fire.

Babe had sat down by the warm flue in the stone house that night when she gave BLUE JOHN BEAT WITH HIS MIGHT.

Blue John his meal, and then her head sunk to the wall, and she slept and was not missed from the young herd till the fire broke out.

She gasped for breath, and ran through the hall to the door, but it was locked. There were such sounds in the cells it made her quake. But Blue John stood still at his bars when Babe ran by.

He saw her by the light, and at once cried out:

"O, my Pink Lamb! Have they shut you up in this place?"

Babe came to his bars and said she was locked in, but she would not make a fuss.

"If we burn up, Blue John, we shall go to a good world, and then your head will not get wrong like it did in this world."

"You shall not burn up, Pink Lamb, if I can break out."

Blue John beat with his might and wrenched with his knee on his bars.

"Do not hurt you," urged Babe. "You will break your bones as well as get burnt. I can't get much more breath for the smoke. And now I can't see you. Are you there, Blue John?"

"Yes, I am here, Pink Lamb. And I could cry tears that would cool you if these bars would break. Stand up and let me smash once more." So he tried and tried, and the hot bars rung with his fierce blows.

"Won't you hold my hand, Blue John?" choked Babe.

Then he thrust his arm through the hot bars and took her hand, and let his flesh sear while he held up the child.

By this time men broke the hall door, in and some took Babe out, while some beat with sledge or axe on the locks of the cells.

They got out all the mad folks but not before some were killed by the heat.

From that day Blue John was a sane man. His mind had been knocked out of its old state.

He had some means, and when he was let out of the poor-house he took Babe to make her his own child.

They went to the far West, where, no doubt, the Pink Lamb suns her bright fleece and rose cheeks to-day. And no doubt, too, she does sweet deeds and has kind words still for all the poor folks who come in her way.

MARY HARTWELL CATHERWOOD.

He Got There.

It was in a boarding-house conducted on the time-worn economic principles of oyster-like closeness.

When he said "Come in," the landlady found him with three chairs piled, atop of each other, at the apex of which were stretched his feet, towards the dimly-burning gas.

He said he guessed his feet would thaw out if the chairs didn't wear out first.

He Was Accomplished.

"Can yer talk hog Latin?" asked the farmer's boy of the city guest at the dinner table.

"No; but I can speak Turkey backwards and forwards," replied the latter; and his eyes glistened as the big carving-knife severed a drumstick.

THE FREEHOLDERS PROCEEDINGS

[OFFICIAL.]

ELIZABETH, N. J., Feb. 7, 1889.

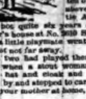
LOST AND FOUND.

The Thrilling Adventures of Annie Tessie Redmond.

Kidnaped by a Female Fiend—After Nearly a Year of Suffering and Abuse She Is Discovered and Restored to Her Parents.



THE pages of fiction tell no stranger story than that surrounding the case of Annie Tessie Redmond, who was kidnaped from her home in Chicago May 23, 1888. About ten o'clock on the day above mentioned little Annie, who was then not quite six years of age, left her father's house at No. 2610 State street, and with a little playmate went to play in a vacant lot not far away.

The two had played there about half an hour when a stout woman, dressed in a black hat and cloak and a yellow dress, came by and stopped to caress little Annie.

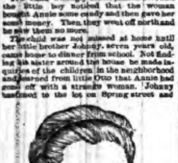
"Is your mother at home, little girl?" she asked.

"Yes," responded the child.

"Come along with me and I'll buy you some candy."

The child willingly accompanied her, and the little boy noticed that the woman bought Annie some candy and then gave her some money. Then they went off north and he saw them no more.

The child was not missed at home until her little brother Johnny, seven years old, came home to dinner from school. Not finding his sister around the house he made inquiries of the children in the neighborhood and learned from little Otto that Annie had gone off with a strange woman. Johnny hastened to the lot on Spring street and questioned all the children he met, but none of them had seen his little sister. After a vain search of two hours the little fellow came home and told his father what had happened. Mr. Redmond questioned Otto closely, but the boy became frightened, and beyond describing the woman and the conversation she had with Annie, he could give no information. He could not locate the candy store where the woman purchased candy for the child. Mr. Redmond and his wife were almost prostrated.



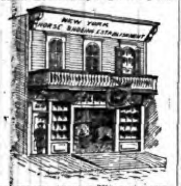
ANNIE TESSIE REDMOND.

The father made a thorough search of the neighborhood, and after two hours returned with a faint clew. Florence Lamb, the six-year-old daughter of a saloon-keeper at No. [illegible] State street, had seen the woman, accompanied by the child, cross Twenty-sixth street, going north on Dearborn. Annie cried "Hello!" to Florence, and when the latter beckoned to her replied that she was going off and couldn't come. Mr. Redmond put the case in the hands of the police, and four detectives were detailed to hunt up the mysterious woman.

The days went on with the police active in the search, but no trace of the missing child could be discovered. Meanwhile the press had given the matter wide circulation, and the strongest public sympathy was aroused in behalf of the crushed and grief-stricken parents.

On that terrible May 23, 1888, not only did John Redmond have a prosperous business, but his prospects in life were the brightest. Six days in the week did the merry clink of the hammer on the anvil ring out in the blacksmith-shop and the glowing coals in the forge cast forth their brightness. On May 23, 1888, this ceased. No longer was John Redmond attending to his business. Where was he? Scouring the city for some trace of his darling. For days, weeks and months he kept up the search. Night after night he would return to his heart-broken wife and repeat: "No news, no news." In the silence of the night the anguish of these bereaved parents would break forth in lamentation and prayer. The next day the father would again start forth on his unavailing search.

He neglected his business, bills began to pile up, creditors came in, and soon the shop was closed. This was the crowning blow to the father. His reason began to waver. He sat all day long brooding over the loss of his girl. Doubts came into his beclouded mind. He even began to think that poor Mrs. Redmond had something to do with it. So at last it became necessary to have the poor man confined. He was adjudged insane. Even the eyes of the judge were moist when this terrible sentence was pronounced.



NEW YORK HORSE SHOEING ESTABLISHMENT

THE REDMOND HOUSE AT 2610 STATE STREET.

And what of the wife and mother during all these darksome days? Poor woman! If ever any one bore a heavy cross it was Mrs. Redmond. Her beautiful darling was—she knew not where. Possibly dead, but more possibly suffering a living death. Her husband worse than dead. No wonder the poor woman broke down. No income now, and, too, heart-broken to work, had it not been for the kind offices of friends and relatives, sad, indeed, would have been her fate.

And what of little Annie? Her story is one to wring the heart of the most callous. Stolen from her cheerful home and her playmates; compelled to wear boys' clothes; her beautiful ringlets clipped from her head; if she happened to speak of "mamma" or "papa" a blow descending on her poor little suffering head; at last, beaten so brutally, bound with cruel, cutting cords, thrown into a damp cellar and a ladder placed across her weak little breast to prevent her escape, is it any wonder that her cries were such as to attract the attention of the neighbors? She is rescued and taken from her cruel abductors, and all the time she is so terrified by their threats that she is afraid to tell new-found friends that she is none other than little Annie Tessie Redmond.

The story of Annie's recovery, and of her wanderings and adventures while in the hands of her kidnapers is as follows:

On Thursday afternoon, February 9, Mrs. James Harper, who was acquainted with the Redmond family, in company with a lady friend, went to pay a visit to the Home for the Friendless on Wabash avenue.

Here her attention was drawn to a pretty child by the expression of sadness that clouded her dimpled face. When she examined her closer she was startled at the close resemblance between her and the missing Annie Redmond.

"That is Annie Redmond as sure as I'm alive," said Mrs. Harper to her companion. Then she asked the girl for her name.

"Flora Della Gurley," was the frank reply.

"But have you no other name?"

"Oh, yes; my other name is Annie Redmond."

The ladies turned away to a consultation with the matron, Mrs. Moody, and there [illegible] long investigation and much questioning of the child, which finally convinced all that the little girl was the missing daughter of the blacksmith.

The police were communicated with, and Annie told her story in all its details to Lieutenant Gerald Stark, who obtained a complete description of the Gurleys and the location of their former abode. He cautioned secrecy, and, at Mrs. Moody's request, the two ladies remained at the home until late on Thursday night. It was even deemed advisable not to carry the tidings to Mrs. Redmond on that night.

The police immediately secured warrants and went to Englewood only to find that Gurley and his wife had left their home a few days after the trouble about Annie. They had gone first to live with Gurley's father at Seventy-first and Throop streets, but, after staying there four days, came to the city and were said to be living at some place on Madison street.

It was Josie Gurley who kidnaped Annie Redmond, although at the time of the abduction it was said that the woman was one entirely unlike Mrs. Gurley in appearance. There were a number of arrests made at the time on the description given, but, of course, all search on the clew offered did not avail.

After the child had been restored to her parents, her father having in the meantime been brought home from the asylum at Kankakee, she told, in her own childish way, the story of how she was taken:

"I was playing on the prairie out there with Otto Miller," she began—"but you mustn't say he was my beau—when a woman with black hair came to me and said: 'Come with me and I will give you lots of pennies and candy.' I went with her and Otto ran away crying. The woman was Josie Gurley, and when she took me to her home on State street she told me about her little girl Josie who had died, and said she was going to keep me in her place, and that I must tell everybody that my name was Flora Della Gurley. I cried to go home, but she wouldn't let me, and then the man came. His name was Harvey. They said I must call them papa and mamma, but I said I had my own papa and mamma. Soon we moved over to School street, and there they both began to whip me, and if I didn't say my name was Flora Della Gurley they would lick me. They did it with a cat-o'-nine-tails that they made of a stick and pieces of harness. Then we moved again to Kensington, and they used to make me go after beer and whip me and make me wash the dishes and scrub the floor and every thing. Sometimes I would run away and hide. And they would put boy's clothes on me, too."

At the remembrance of which indignity Annie grew very sad. She then told of a brief residence the Gurleys made on Sixty-third street.

"They were going away, way out of town from there," she said, "for I know they sent a big trunk away. But the landlord man found it out, and wouldn't let them go, so he wouldn't."

Annie could not give in correct detail or connection accounts of the many removals of the Gurleys, but she gave very clear accounts of their last home on Throop street.

"I know about Throop street, because there is where they tied me down in the cellar. And they used to make me go for beer there, and send me to a drug store for brandy. And they made me tell every body that my name was Flora Della Gurley, and told me whenever I saw a policeman to run into the house. But I knew a policeman who used to come to my papa's shop, and I liked him and wanted to see him, and then I would get whipped. They didn't like me at all."

"Wasn't anybody kind to you?" asked the reporter.

"Oh, yes; sometimes Grandpa Parsons was. He lived with us and he would hide me when they wanted to whip me, and he let me sit on his knee. And I know Grandma Parsons, too, and her first name was Martha. But they both had some other names. I had to call them my grandpa and my grandma or I would get licked. I had to stay there, too, until the Humane man took me and gave me back to my papa." Then she said to her father:

"But I'll go with you, papa, and I can show you all the people and all the places."

"Yes, and we'll find them, too, my child," said the father.

How Annie came to be taken from the Gurleys and placed in the Home for the Friendless is told by Officer Mitchell, of the Humane Society. He says:

"It was on Friday, January 18, that I received a telephone message from Englewood to hurry down there and investigate a case of cruelty to a child. The person who telephoned was Mrs. Lena W. Wilkie, the owner of the house on Throop street, between Seventh and Seventy-first, where the Gurleys lived. Mrs. Wilkie said that Harvey U. Gurley had tied his little girl in the basement, after whipping her, and had left her there for hours. I got out a warrant at Justice Underwood's court, State and Twenty-ninth streets, that evening for Gurley's arrest on the charge of cruelty to children, under the State law. I gave the warrant to Underwood to take with him and give to Officer Hogan, of the Englewood force for service. Hogan arrested Gurley early the next morning and brought him before Justice Underwood for trial. The child was not brought into court. Mrs. Wilkie testified that she had heard the child's cries, and opening the cellar door found the poor little thing with two ropes across her back and shoulders and a big ladder across her body. Mrs. Wilkie called to her assistance a neighbor, Mrs. Moore, and together they descended into the cellar. Mrs. Moore cut the child's bonds and sent her up-stairs. Gurley pleaded that his wife was ill and near confinement, and that it would be a terrible thing for him to be sent to the county jail. Justice Underwood took this circumstance into consideration and fined him fifty dollars and suspended execution.

"Hogan and myself got into a buggy and drove over to the house to get the child. Underwood had given us the custody of it. I found Mrs. Gurley a very young woman, somewhat to my surprise, and she seemed somewhat startled when I remarked upon a woman of her age having a child six years old. The little girl seemed afraid to talk. I asked her what her name was. She said: 'Flora Della Gurley.' I immediately conceived the idea that it was not their child. Mrs. Gurley said to me:

"'I know you, Mr. Mitchell. You used to be a policeman at the Twenty second street station.'

"I replied that I did not remember her and she said she used to live on State street, near Twenty-first, which is not a great ways from the Redmonds.

"The little girl had no warm winter clothing to wear, and Gurley's mother, who was in the house at the time, covered the child with her own jacket. We drove away with the child and got a cape and hood for it at the Englewood police station. I then brought the child down-town to the Home for the Friendless and left it there. It was registered under the name of Flora Della Gurley."

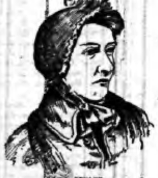
THE ABDUCTORS.

Johanna Gurley, the woman who stole the child, together with her husband, H. Gurley, were arrested February 9 and taken to the station. The woman denied taking Annie, and said that the little girl was given to her by a Mrs. Maggie Gordon. She said: "Mr. Gurley and I were married May 16, 1888. We took rooms at No. 2131 State street. I had met Mrs. Gordon and was quite well acquainted with her. She said she had two little girls, but was too poor to take care of them, and asked me if I would take one and bring her up. I said I would and the next day she brought this little girl to our home. That was Thursday, May 25. She was a sweet little thing and said her name was Flossy Gordon."

The woman then detailed the story of their wanderings, exactly corroborating the tale told Friday night by the stolen child. From No. 2131 State they moved to Sixty-third street, near Honore, and from there to Sixty-ninth and Throop. They then went to live with the Parsons, at Sixty-ninth and Throop. About a month ago they left this place and rented a house near Seventy-second and Throop, where Gurley was arrested for cruelty to the child. They then moved to No. 2227 State street, where they were living when arrested.

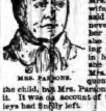
The husband's story differed from the wife's. He said:

"I met my wife at Mrs. Stevens' boarding-house, No. 2122 State street, about May 1, 1888. She was rooming there and Mr. Stevens introduced her to me as a widow. We became acquainted, and I proposed, and she accepted right away. We were married May 16. Her maiden name was Johanna Driscoll. She said she had been married to a man named Ellis, who had two children when she married him. They had a little girl who was living at 'the Sisters,' on Wabash avenue. I supposed it was all right, and, after we were married, I told her to bring the child home. She said she would, but failed to do so. I thought it was strange, and asked her mother about it. She laughed and said Josie was joking with me; that she was never married and had never had a child. I went to my wife and asked her what she meant by such talk. She then confessed that she was never married, and that the child was illegitimate. I told her that she should have told me that before, but that I would forgive her and try to forget it. The next day she brought the little girl home. She seemed fond of Josie and called her mamma. After a while she called me papa. She was contented, and we got along nicely together until my wife was taken sick. She was cross to Flora, and often punished her. She would not mind, and I whipped her two or three times. I tied her up down-stairs just to scare her."



MRS. GURLEY.

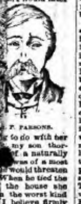
D. P. Parsons and his wife, the step-father and mother of Gurley, were also arrested and taken into custody. It soon became apparent, however, that neither of them had any guilty knowledge of the child's abduction. Speaking of Mrs. Gurley, her son's wife, Mrs. Parsons said that the child was never treated badly at her house. She said she had taken it riding almost every day in her carriage, and she had clothed it. Mrs. Gurley had frequently tried to abuse the child, but Mrs. Parsons would not allow it. It was on account of this that the Gurleys had finally left.



MRS. PARSONS.

"She told the child to go down-stairs and curse its father," said Mrs. Parsons. "I told her I would never allow the child to be taught to use profane language. This made her furious. She sprang up and asked me whose child it was and if she didn't have a right to do what she liked with it. I told her no, that the law wouldn't allow a child to be taught to curse. She told me she would slap my face if I interfered. I threatened to take the child away from her. It was on account of this that they moved to Winkler's in October last.

"Often at the table, when she would not allow the child to eat enough, I would interfere and say that it must be allowed to eat. Then she would ask me whose child it was, hers or mine.



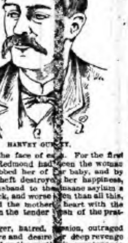
D. P. PARSONS.

"She drank brandy all the time, for her health, she said. The doctor, when he came, allowed her to use it. She was sick about all of the time but never lost her appetite. She really suffered from an ailment of an aggravating nature, which might have something to do with her violent temper. She kept my son thoroughly afraid of her. He is of a naturally timorous disposition, and she was of a most aggravating disposition. She would threaten him in all kinds of ways. When he tied the child in the basement of the house she had them threatened him in the worst kind of way if he didn't do it. I believe firmly that whatever he did was through the fear of her. When angry, and this was often the case, she would curse and swear and use awful language."

When Gurley and his wife were first arraigned in the justice court little Annie, who was present with her mother, identified the woman at sight, saying: "That's her, mamma, that's her, that's the woman that took me."

The child had pulled her mother's dress till Mrs. Redmond stooped to catch her child's words, and when the long-suffering mother stood erect again she was within a few feet of the woman who had stolen her child.

There was a moment of intense silence in the court-room, during which the two women took a look at each other that must have seemed very long to them, so deep was the feeling produced in the mind and shown on the face of each. For the first time Mrs. Redmond had seen the woman who had robbed her of her baby, and by that cruel theft destroyed her happiness, sent her husband to the insane asylum a mental wreck, and worse even than all this, had scarred the mother's heart with the blows laid on the tender flesh of the prattling child.



HARVEY GURLEY.

All of anger, hatred, passion, outraged maternal love and desire for deep revenge was pictured on the mother's countenance as she looked full into Mrs. Gurley's eyes. For a moment her face was suffused with the blood which rushed to it, and then a paleness almost as of one dead followed, while the blazing eyes shining through the tears which filled them completed a picture of the maternal instinct at bay defending its child, which is often read about, but seldom seen.

The cases were soon continued for further hearing and court adjourned. Public feeling is strong against the abductors of the child, and regrets are heard on every side that under existing law no adequate punishment can be meted out to them for their fearful crime. There is little or no doubt of their guilt; indeed, it is believed that before her case comes to a final hearing the woman will make a full confession.

SHAM LARD FOR JEWS.

A New Product That the Hebrew Housewife Will Bless.

The Trouble Jewish Cooks Are Put To in Preparing Food—Substitutes for Lard—Goose Grease and Beef Fat Supplanted by Cotton-Seed Oil.

In a recent issue the editor of the Hebrew Journal made this statement:

"The other day I received a circular extolling the merits of kosher lard, that is, lard made from cotton oil. And now the only thing left for the ingenuity of the American inventor is to discover some process by which bacon and ham can be rendered kosher enough to meet with the approval of Rabbi Joseph himself."

To the Christian reader this probably has little significance, but it means a great deal to the Jew. For many generations the Jewish housewife has been beset with vexations and difficulties from which her Christian sister was altogether free. The Mosaic laws, with their minute regulations concerning both the preparation and serving of food, hampered her in many respects and made for her much labor that would, without their interference, have been unnecessary.

Of course, every body knows that pork does not enter into the Jewish house, but further than that the knowledge of only the minority outside the faith extends. Chapter xi. of Leviticus contains a bewildering list of animals, fowl and fish that were declared unclean, but the restrictions that appear in the Bible were of little moment compared with the many that were added afterward by the rabbis or wise men, so that now the orthodox Jewess stands in continual fear of transgressing some of the regulations of the household as they are laid down by Rabbi Joseph and his kind.

The ban against the hog was pronounced in the sentence that forbade the eating of any animal that did not divide its hoof, and also chew its cud. This, of course, ruled against the fat of the hog also, and never has lard been used by any Jew who at all respected the tenets of his faith. In fact, many Jews who have departed from the ways of their fathers and who have thrown aside the traditions of their religion would not use lard under any circumstances, and it is undoubtedly true that what is originally the flesh and fat of the hog was considered as worse than those of any other of the forbidden animals, they became many centuries ago the most sinful of all in the eyes of Israelites and no more severe persecution was ever attempted by their enemies than when they forced the obnoxious food down their abhorrent throats. The New England wife who has made her toothsome doughnuts and flaky pie-crust with the aid of lard will no doubt wonder how any cook could ever get along without it; but the Jewish cook had to stand even greater privations. In making doughnuts and pie-crust she could use butter, provided, however, that these dainties were not eaten with any other dishes that contained meat or its products. The rabbis have interpreted the Mosaic laws to mean that flesh and milk must not be eaten at the same time, and the orthodox Jew will not eat them within an hour of each other. As butter is the product of milk, pie-crust containing butter could not, of course, be served at any meal in which meat was also a part. In frying meats their regulation prevented the cook from using butter or lard, and left her the choice between vegetable oils and beef fat.

Even in regard to these there were some restrictions. All beef fat is not kosher, or clean. All chalef, that is, tallow, is not kosher. Chalef includes the fat around the intestines and kidneys. Nisker, the fat between the intestines, is kosher, and this is what the strict Jewish cook has used mainly as long as there is any record. In European countries, where the Jews still live together for the most part in certain quarters of the cities, towns and villages, no other grease is used than the beef fat and goose grease. Polish Jews are especially addicted to the use of goose grease, which is very fine and much more expensive than lard. German Jews use beef fat more.

In either case the cook tries out all the fat she uses herself, and is thus doubly sure that it is kosher. In fact, unless the assurance can be given that it has been tried out in kosher vessels and that it has not come in contact with foreign substances, it would be just as unclean as the hog itself. Of course, the trying out of the fat means a great deal of extra labor, and, what with keeping two sets of dishes, one for milk and one for meat, which were never allowed to touch each other, and observing all the other regulations, the Jewish housewife has nearly twice as much work as any other. In this country and some of the southern countries of Europe olive oil was used instead of fat, but not every body cares to have meals prepared in oil, and the use of it was confined within narrow limits.

The words of the editor of the Hebrew Journal will bring joy to the hearts of all Jewish cooks. They mean that one of their most vexatious trials in the past can now be obviated.

The New York Sun reporter who inspected this new "lard" found it very appetizing in appearance. It resembles ordinary lard. It has a slight odor of the oil, but it is not at all objectionable. It is said to be made of cotton-seed oil and pure beef fat. It sells at the same price as the best lard, but the manufacturers claim that it is cheaper, inasmuch as it requires a lesser quantity to accomplish the same purpose. It is necessary, in using it to put it in a cold pan with the meat or other food, and let them get hot together. If it were put in a hot pan the oil and fat in the lard would separate. Although this lard is made for the use of the community at large, and is not controlled by Hebrews, the manufacturers have taken especial pains to disseminate their literature on the subject among the Jews of the country. Their pamphlets are all headed with the word "Kosher" in Hebrew characters. Editor Davis, of the Hebrew Journal, said to the reporter that the new lard was being extensively used by the Jews in this city, and that it was saving labor for a great many Jewish cooks.

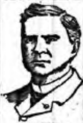
Chinese Disguised as Squaws.

The smuggling of Chinese men and women from British America into United States territory is a lucrative business at various points along the border from Vancouver to Winnipeg. If the venture fails at one place it is repeated at another, and sooner or later the pilgrims get in. A new trick just discovered at Whatcom, W. T., has almost taken away the breath of the Federal officials, for they know that it must have been successful for a time. The large number of squaws coming into the country from British Columbia finally attracted the attention of an official, and he took a party of them to jail. On close inspection it was found that the creatures were not squaws at all, but able-bodied Chinamen who had painted and otherwise disguised themselves so as to resemble the typical Indian squaw of the frontier. In one instance two young and rather comely Chinese women came across in the garb of American women, but closely vailed. An ungallant official lifted their vails and found them out. These girls were billed through to San Francisco, and were worth to their owner about $2,000 apiece.

JOHN R. THOMAS.

An Illinois Congressman Who Has Achieved Distinction Through His Inventive Genius.

Congressman John R. Thomas of Illinois, has all of a sudden achieved fame by devising a new armored cruiser. He has been a member of Congress ten years, all that time serving on the Committee of Naval Affairs. No man has given more study to the plans of the various cruisers built by the Government than Mr. Thomas. Had his party been in a majority he would have been chairman of the Naval Committee. He is an adept in naval science, and would undoubtedly if his career had been in the navy, have made for himself a brilliant fame as a naval commander.



J. R. THOMAS.

Mr. Thomas is a young man, born in the State of Illinois in 1846. He received his education in the schools of the place where he was born, and until he entered the army had never been out of the State. For him four years of service in the South was a liberal education. He rose from the ranks to be Captain, and spent his spare time in camp studying law. He was admitted soon after the war, and has been a practicing lawyer ever since. His plans for an armored steel monitor cruiser propose a submerged vessel. She is to have 3,000 tons displacement, to be 235 feet long, 55 feet wide, to draw 14½ feet of water when cruising and 17½ feet in a fight, her cruising speed being 17 knots an hour. The Thomas cruiser would be very much like any other gunboat when cruising, but on coming into a fight pumps would be set at work to fill ballast tanks with water, which would submerge the vessel so that water would come up over her gunwale, but leave her crowning deck four feet above the water at the highest part. Upon this deck would be a revolving turret similar to the Ericsson monitor turret. This would contain two ten-inch breech-loading rifles. In the rear of this turret is to be a deck-house for the accommodation of the officers and crew. But the guns in the turret would fire over it and could be aimed in any direction. The fifteen-inch Zalinski dynamite gun would be placed in the bow, capable of throwing eighteen hundred pounds of nitro-glycerine one and a half miles. Two torpedo firing tubes are placed in the bow under water. Congress will undoubtedly make a large appropriation for this cruiser this session, as it is approved by the Navy Department.

Most people who receive an uncomplimentary valentine get as angry as a moist hen, or the man who makes his thumb tender with a tack-hammer, particularly if the reference is made to some physical defect. The woman with a foot like a raisin-box usually gets a not too flattering picture of herself in the act of persuading her half-gallon foot to crawl into a quart shoe.

No wonder the woman with a large mouth and hand begins to get red around the roots of her hair when she sees an alleged portrait of herself in which she is represented as wearing a hand like a five-barred gate and a mouth big enough to swallow her head, if the red paint on her cheeks didn't gag her, particularly if she is so vain about her personal appearance that she regrets that she hasn't got eyes in her shoulders so she could look up and admire her own back hair, and who holds a dress rehearsal for an hour before going to a party.

All persons who are sensitive to criticism should follow the example of Stanley when he first explored the region of the headwaters of the Nile. They should consider the source.

The amatory valentine is another thing altogether. It is merely a form of love letter. A New York editor writes: "A valentine means a good deal to a widow." Yes, and, occasionally, a few months later, when a suit for breach of promise is brought, it means a good deal to the sender.

A VALENTINE.

MY LOVE is like a blue-bird
Upon a broken spray,
That trembles with delight to bear
The burden of its lay.

My love is like a dew-drop
Upon a withered flower,
That thrills and blushes through and through
At love's reviving power.

My love is like a white pearl
Within a rugged shell,
That dreams content though lashed by wave
That cruel stories tell.

O heart of mine, how blessed
To be considered meet
To represent the broken spray
That bears thy carol, sweet,

To typify the blossom
That wakens after blight
To proudly wear a little while
Its crown of diamond light.

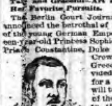
To stand the happy emblem
That holds within its breast,
Above the wrangling waves of strife,
The precious pearl of rest!

JULIA H. THAYER.

GREECE'S FUTURE QUEEN.

Princess Sophie, of Prussia, to Wed Prince Constantine—She is Eighteen Years Old, Tall and Graceful—Art and Languages Her Favorite Pursuits.

The Berlin Court Journal not long ago announced the betrothal of the third sister of the young German Emperor, the eighteen-year-old Princess Sophie, of Prussia, to Prince Constantine, Duke of Sparta, and Crown Prince of Greece, always provided that the Greeks for a sufficient period will tolerate the reign of the present dynasty, the second since 1830.



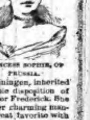
CONSTANTINE, CROWN PRINCE OF GREECE.

The Duke is a tall, rather gawky young fellow, and physically decidedly inferior to the handsome Prince Alexander, of Battenberg, whose betrothal to Princess Victoria, of Prussia, Emperor William II. and Prince Bismarck so bitterly opposed.

Although Emperor William has never shown great love for his sisters, whom he accuses of being too English, still Princess Sophie is his favorite sister and her betrothal to Prince Constantine has always been a pet scheme of his, a scheme that has been heartily indorsed by the Iron Chancellor, for the future King of Greece, as brother-in-law of the German Emperor, may prove useful to German diplomacy, as a barrier to Russian progress in the direction of Constantinople.

Princess Sophia was born in Potsdam on the 14th day of June, 1870. She has been carefully trained for her high position in life under the watchful eye of a loving mother, herself a brilliant woman. Brought up like all her sisters on the principles of the strictest simplicity, Princess Sophie has also inherited her grandmother Queen Victoria's habits of methodical economy and love of needlework; like her mother she is an enthusiastic artist and sits for hours at her easel.

A brilliant linguist, she speaks and writes fluently English, French, German and Italian, and she is now trying to master the modern Greek language, so as to be able to speak to her future subjects in their own tongue. Her favorite language, however, is English, which she, like her sisters, uses nearly exclusively when at home.



PRINCESS SOPHIE, OF PRUSSIA.

Princess Sophie has, like her eldest sister, Princess Charlotte, hereditary Princess of Saxe-Meiningen, inherited the good looks and amiable disposition of her father, the late Emperor Frederick. She is tall and graceful, and her charming manners have made her a great favorite with every body. Added to her other accomplishments, the Princess is an excellent and fearless horsewoman. During the last weeks of Emperor Frederick's life the Princess used to accompany her father's carriage on horseback while driving in the Charlottenburg Park.

Princess Sophie is at present with her mother, the dowager Empress Frederick, in England on a visit to her grandmother, Queen Victoria. The date for the wedding is not yet definitely fixed, but it will not take place till the court mourning for the late Emperor is over. There is at present a great coolness between the Princesses and their brother, Emperor William, of whose unfilial behavior toward their mother, Empress Frederick, they thoroughly disapprove.

The bridegroom, Prince Constantine, of Greece, is a grandson of the King of Denmark and a nephew of the Princess of Wales and of the Empress of Prussia, and through his marriage he will become related to the three most powerful countries in Europe—Germany, England and Prussia. Another of his aunts is married to the Duke of Cumberland, son of the ex-King of Hanover.

The man who has a spite at a dentist will find numerous valentines to cover the case. The dentist is denounced as a tooth carpenter, and is occasionally portrayed as yanking the desolate victim around with a large pair of self-gripping forceps, or filling his teeth so vigorously as to suggest driving a crowbar into frozen ground. Occasionally reference is made to the robustness of his bills. Some dentists do make more profit per acher than a farmer. They are the ones who advertise to draw teeth without pain.

If the mean man desires to prod the feelings of the inebriate, innumerable pictures of men with noses that more resemble Chinese lanterns than nasal organs are at his disposal. Very frequently the man who smiles, and smiles and smiles, and gets tight, and smiles and smiles some more, and who goes to bed with his boots on, is not such a bad fellow after all. A New York paper advertises for a bar-keeper who must be recommended by his pastor. The party who sends the inebriate a valentine generally keeps a demijohn in the barn and puts flattened buttons in the contribution plate.

THE CABINET.

It is a commendable feature in the Administration of President Cleveland, and in marked contrast with those of some of his predecessors, that the Cabinet selected four years ago has remained virtually intact, the only vacancies being caused by the death of Mr. Manning, Secretary of the Treasury, and the resignation of Mr. Lamar, Secretary of the Interior, to accept a Supreme Court Judgeship.

Like their Chief, each and every Cabinet Minister has stood at the post of duty laboring for the public weal.

They, too, have earned the reward of Honor.

CLEVELAND.

On Monday next will expire the official term of Grover Cleveland as President of the United States, and we deem it just and proper to publicly express regret that he is so soon to vacate the Executive chair.

We deplore the coming change of National Administration not solely because the retiring President is a Democrat, the representative of our own political party, and neither for the purpose of casting any reflections upon his legally proclaimed successor, but for reasons far nobler.

President Cleveland has proven himself to be an honest public servant, dedicating every possessed ability, with untiring zeal and industry, for the faithful discharge of official duty.

That constitutes the very highest grade of honor, and that is why we regret his retirement from the Presidential office, and furthermore, thousands of Republicans, when divesting themselves of mere partisan prejudice, will concur with us in this avowed sentiment.

Doubtless he has, as President, committed errors of judgement.

Nothing strange about that, as no human being is infallible, but, it can with safety be asserted, that he has made fewer mistakes than any Chief Magistrate of the Union since the days of Washington.

He has striven to fulfill every requirement of duty regardless of personal interest.

He who does that is of truth a patriot, and so will stand recorded the name of CLEVELAND.

Thomas Hooker Replies to His Nameless Correspondent, Again.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—There lived a man by the name of Balaam, who had an educated ass, and it would appear that some of his race still exists. However that may be, I turn to my friend "Mr. Nameless," the other cheek also for him to smite, and if that will not satisfy, I will give him my coat also.

On a certain day two men went up into a temple to pray, the one a Pharisee and the other a Publican. The first-named stood upright and prayed thus: "Lord, I thank Thee that I am not as other men are," and so on, but the Publican fell upon his knees and cried "God be merciful to me, a sinner"—and it is declared that this man went down to his house justified rather than the other. The former might have been a Prohibitionist.

In yours of the 16th, I find my name used more than once, and evidently by some one who is not accustomed to a name with a hook to it, or he would not misconstrue and do so much growling without the slightest foundation. Still he seems to possess a spark of generosity, inasmuch as he says, "We must make allowance for every man." How liberal! And then he takes things for granted, as he says, and so jumps at the conclusion that Hooker was educated in the saloon. It often occurs that blind men try to lead blind men, and the result is that both fall into the ditch together. I am glad, however, that the State of New Jersey can boast of one individual who has been highly educated, and not only that, but is perfect in every respect, that is if gas can be relied on.

Now, sir, the name of saloon as used so frequently is evidently only a signal term for a public house, or a house set apart for the comfort and convenience of the public, and is not called saloon in any other part of the World but in the United States. While we take in all "Mr. Nameless" contempt for this class of our community, allow me to ask just here about our large and so-called first-class, high-toned hotels in our land of liberty and freedom. Let us look into one for a moment. Take the largest one you can find and the most popular, with four hundred guests in the house. Let us watch their proceedings. There at a billiard table are four gentlemen, apparently smoking cigars and at play. We will ask the clerk "who are they?" "Yes, sir, they are city detectives." And in the four hundred we find one hundred who have taken shelter for the night, men who have eloped with other men's wives, and one hundred more who are busy packing their trunks with other men's money. Many ready to leave for Canada by the first train in the morning, and a few others who are already contemplating suicide, or a deal with the man who got away so far with the partner of his joys. Now, my friend will tolerate all this, because it is among the classes of the so-called gay and high-toned members of society.

It may be useless for me to direct my friend's attention for a moment to the marriage at Canaan. When they had consumed all the wine on hand, and when the Creator, whose presence filled the place, was applied to, like His loving character and readiness to bless and help at all times, was pleased to manifest His wisdom and power by creating all the wine, there and then, that was required, and when served to the guests it was generally acknowledged to be the best which kept to the last. I suppose he will say this was not so.

Some of his remarks contained in your issue of the 16th, no sane person would venture to advance, and as to the allusion to Joseph and his brethren on the return journey, there is no such statement as Joseph accompanying his brethren, but on the other hand we have proof that he did not do so. I hope my "nameless" friend is not a glutton. It seems strange, nevertheless it is sometimes true, that a person will [illegible] everyone but himself and his own [illegible] views. A glutton is worse than all the rest.

But, Mr. Editor, least I encroach on your valuable space, I will close, for it is written: "cast not your pearls before swine lest they turn again and rend you." With this admonition we conclude with the preacher—"vanity of vanities, all is vanity." Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter. Fear God and keep His commandments, for this is the whole duty of man. "Man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn."

I am, yours truly,
THOMAS HOOKER.

May Interest the Women.

There is said to be an unrepealed law of New Jersey, passed while the State was a British Colony which provides "that all women, of whatever age, rank, profession, or degree, whether virgins, maids, or widows, who shall after this act impose upon, or betray into matrimony any of His Majesty's subjects by virtue of scents, cosmetics, washes, paints, artificial teeth, false hair, or high-heeled shoes, shall incur the penalty of the law now in force against witchcraft and like misdemeanors."

"Cruelty Kills Her Affection."

Under this caption, the New York Star says:

"Proceedings for divorce have been begun against Daniel J. Runyon, Secretary of the Bolton Drug Company of Brooklyn, by his wife, for alleged cruelty.

"Sixteen years ago Reuna Runyon, father of the defendant, a well-to-do citizen of Plainfield, N. J., died, leaving an estate valued at about $10,000, but no will. Daniel was appointed administrator. He had five sisters, and he has been in almost continual litigation with them up to the present time. Suit was also brought against him by his aunt, Rhoda Runyon, who had a mortgage of $1,500 on the property. It is said that Runyon has been defeated in nearly all of his suits, and his wife will be able to gain but little in the way of alimony in the event of a decree in her favor."

A Gem in Water Colors.

In the show case of a Front street dealer in artists' materials, the attention of a PRESS reporter was attracted the other day by a miniature in water colors by George Wharton Edwards, that was a perfect gem. It was but a few inches in dimensions, and framed in a broad flat frame of plain gilt, yet inquiry proved that its present owner had paid a big price for it.

The name of it is "The False Note," and the interpretation, treatment and tone of it all were marvelously effective. The title is wondrously realized in the expression of an old musician's face as he thrusts his head forward past the neck of his cello and so close into his note book that the candle illuminating its pages, throws upon his face patches of light and shadow that are used to accentuate most skillfully and artistically the pain in the old man's soul over that unexpected note struck falsely.

Action that Should be Reconsidered at Once.

The action of certain Councilmen Monday night, in postponing the settlement of the question of license or no license for the city of Plainfield, was unjust and unavailing.

It was unjust because the applicants should know at once whether they shall renew their leases or seek business openings elsewhere. They have rented premises and invested a great deal of money in carrying on a perfectly legitimate business under the endorsement and sanction of past Councils. It is right that they should know whether renewals of their licenses are to be refused.

The Council's action was unavailing because more "rum" will now be drunk in Plainfield than before. Already the bottlers of North Plainfield are making arrangements to meet the demand of Plainfielders for probably hundreds of boxes of beer, within a very short time, delivered anywhere in the city; and the holders of Government licenses are already soliciting orders for whiskey and other "hard drinks," by the quart-bottle or jug.

MASS MEETING AT WESTFIELD.

A temperance mass meeting was held in the Presbyterian church at Westfield, Tuesday, for the purpose of inaugurating a movement which the originators of the meeting hope will ultimately result in holding a local option election in Union county. The meeting was extensively advertised, and delegates were present from all parts of the county; many of them being clergymen.

The beautiful little church, which by the way, is the largest in the place, was comfortably filled, many ladies being included in the audience, when Rev. C. R. Patton, pastor of the Congregational church, called the meeting to order. Mr. Frank S. Miller, a son of the popular Senator Miller, read the call, and the Rev. Mr. Blauvelt of Roselle, offered prayer.

Nominations being in order for Chairman of the meeting, Rev. N. W. Cadwell, nominated Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis of this city. The nomination was unanimously confirmed, and upon taking the chair Dr. Lewis spoke a few words acknowledging the honor thus conferred upon him. Mr. F. S. Miller was elected Secretary.

Freeholder James T. Pierson made a motion, which prevailed, requesting the chair to appoint a Committee on Nominations. The following were appointed: Messrs Ely Smith, Jno. S. Irving, A. Vanderbeek, J. S. Pierson. The Committee took a recess of thirty minutes. Meanwhile Dr. Lewis and others devoted the time to making addresses.

Dr. Lewis said: "He does best who is in the presence of the enemy; positive defeat cannot be near in this matter. Temperance men irrespective of political views are standing together on this important question; to vindicate American principles. Americans are law making people, and their sentiments must be entertained." The learned and eloquent Doctor said he thought local option would not be repealed, as the rum power was not strong enough to accomplish its design. The people, he continued, are awakened sufficiently to attain victory—they must be thoroughly fighting mad on the subject.

Five-minute addresses were also made by Rev. Mr. Ballard, Freeholder Van Name of Cranford, W. D. Wood of Cranford; Prof. Watson of Elizabeth, Rev. Mr. Wallace of Cranford, Rev. Mr. Owens of Westfield, Rev. Mr. Smith of Westfield, Mr. Geo. F. Opdyke of Plainfield. The latter read the following letter from the Woman's Temperance Aid Society of this city:

To the Union County Mass Meeting at Westfield, N. J.

The Woman's Temperance Aid Society of Plainfield, offer their most cordial support in the matter of circulating the petitions, for signatures of the voters, calling for a "local option" election in Union county, to determine whether license or no license shall prevail.

MRS. P. M. FRENCH, President.
MRS. H. N. KING, Secretary.
Plainfield, Feb. 26, 1889.

The Committee on Nominations reported the following names as members of the County Executive Committee, which report was adopted:

Plainfield—George F. Opdyke, John H. French, Wm. J. Leonard.
Fanwood—George Kyte.
Westfield — Frank S. Miller, Pierson Greaves.
Cranford—W. D. Wood, Peter D. Van Name.
Roselle—Wm. F. West.
Elizabeth—J. Madison Watson, Wm. Maxfield, James Mackey.
Union—Rev. Mr. Converse.
Springfield—Rev. Mr. Harbaugh.
Summit—Rev. T. F. White.
New Providence—Rev. R. K. Lockwood.
Rahway—Mr. Durand, W. H. Howard.
Clark—Frank Bulman.

Rev. Mr. Ballard explained the duties devolving upon the Committee, and answered numerous questions in relation thereto.

The following were elected permanent officers of the County Committee: President, Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis; First Vice President, James S. Pierson; Secretary, F. S. Miller; Treasurer, Mr. Austin.

A resolution was adopted, requesting the Legislature not to repeal the local option law, after which the meeting adjourned.

PLAINFIELD MAY BE DRY FOR MONTHS TO COME.

The annual "circus" in the City Council took place Monday night, and the attendance was unusually large. So large in fact that the doors had to be locked after the lobby was comfortably filled, and officers were stationed on the outside to preserve order among those who sought to gain admission to the room, but were barred out by reason of coming late. The occasion which attracted so large an audience, was the announcement that the Council would act upon the liquor license applications sent in at the last meeting.

In the audience were noticed the veterable Mayor Male, Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, Mr. A. M. Powell, Craig A. Marsh, John Ross, President French of the Reform Club, Geo. F. Opdyke, Col. Deitrich, Geo. M. Angleman, Manager Moore of the Electric Light Co., John M. Crane, J. W. Murray, Jr., A. Vanderbeek, T. D. Doane, L. L. Manning, B. O. Bowers, F. M. French, Ethee Lanphear, Chas. A. Reed, W. J. Leonard, M. B. Long, J. F. Hubbard, Capt. Phillips and others.

President Dumont called the meeting to order at 8:30 o'clock, and the roll call showed all the members present but Mr. Jenkins. He came in later. The minutes were read and approved, and petitions and communications were presented and referred as follows:

From R. A. Mumford and others, asking for cross-walk on Park avenue, at Arlington place. Referred to Street Committee.

From Mary B. Stickle, for permission to erect a frame house on East Fifth street. Referred with power.

From Geo. W. Doty, foreman of the Union County Grand Jury, stating that attention had been called to the bad condition of the roads leading from Elizabeth into Rahway, Plainfield and Summit. The communication expressed a hope that immediate steps would be taken to have the roads put in good condit on before the next Grand Inquest met. Filed.

Electric lights were asked for as follows: One on West Second street, between Elm street and Plainfield avenue; one on Sycamore street, between Fourth and Fifth streets; three on LeGrande avenue, East of Richmond street. Referred to the Committee on Public Lights.

Austin B. Fischer, on behalf of himself and others, communicated with the Council with reference to water works and sewerage, and at the same time asked for a franchise for the same. Referred to Committee on Water.

Chas. Potter, Jr., sent in a communication, urging the introduction of a system of water works and sewerage. First for the health of the city; second, for fire purposes; third because the future prosperity of the city demanded it. He placed a fair estimate of the cost of ground, houses, engines, mains, hydrants, etc., for the construction of the same at $125,000. The document was lengthy, and was referred by Mr. Marsh to the Committee on Water, before the clerk had finished reading it.

Hack, peddlers and cartmen's licenses were presented, referred and subsequently returned with the Committee's recommendation, as follows:

Hack—Jno. Sullivan, V. Utzinger, Geo. Belcher, F. Day, Christian Sorenson, Thos. Burns, M. A. Higgins, (3), D. S. Roberts, P. T. Kiely (2), H. Hansen, Max Newman, Wm. Callahan, P. Lynch (2), E. Galbraith, H. McDonnell, Samuel Bolden, Daniel Hibbits (2).

Carting—J. H. Albert, Geo. M. Angleman (2), A. McLean, Moses Carey, P. Voorhees, L. D. Coddington, P. Hoagland (3), Wm. Hand, U. S. Express Co., C. H. Holmes (3), Benj. W. Hand, J. N. Jenkins.

Peddler's—Munday & Gaddis, Geo. T. Larkin, E. J. Dunn, W. T. Trainor, Edw. Cleef, E. S. Elliott, Frank Mobus, Thos. Newman.

The ladies of the W. C. T. U. sent in a communication stating that they had reconsidered their application for a personal conference with the Council, and left their hope with the Christian gentlemen present, whom, they felt assured, would advocate their sentiments. The paper was filed.

Remonstrances and protests against granting licenses were sent in as follows, all of which were filed: From members of Hope chapel; from the Reform Club; from the city pastors; from the Woman's Temperance Aid Society; from Howell Division, No. 97, Sons of Temperance.

The following regular police were nominated by Mayor Male and confirmed by the Council: T. J. Carey, Geo. W. Grant, P. Lynch, T. McCue, P. J. Flannagan, C. Gibbs.

Mr. Erickson from the Fire and Building Committee, reported that the petition of Asa Collier to erect a bowling alley on Sycamore street, had been granted. He also offered a resolution, which prevailed, authorizing Chief Doane to have new tires put on the wheels of Zephyr truck.

Mr. Moffett from the License Committee, made a report on the petition from the grocers sent in at the last meeting, asking that peddlers be charged a license fee of $25, and recommended that the petition be referred to the Corporation Counsel, he to draft an ordinance in compliance with the petition. Corporation Counsel Marsh said that such an ordinance would be illegal, inasmuch as any law compelling outside peddler's to pay more than those in the city would be in direct conflict with the government of the United States. The matter was referred back to the License Committee.

Mr. Moffett further reported on the license application of Otto Arend, stating that it did not comply with the ordinance. It was sent back for correction.

The License Committee reported the application of John E. Beerbower as "regular," and moved to grant the same.

Mr. Marsh made a motion to lay the application on the table, with the request that the Committee report on all the license applications at one time. The motion was carried, Messrs Gallup, Moffett and Watson voting "No."

The clerk then read the Committee's report on the following applications submitted, each of which was reported as correct and in conformity to the requirements of the ordinance: Chas. Bock, Jacob Bliman, James Conneely, Fred. Casper, Patrick Day, J. H. Force, J. B. Miller, Jas. O'Neill, John Rafferty, Joseph Sullivan, Chas. Smith, E. P. Thorn.

At this point in the proceedings Mr. Squires sprung a neat an unexpected trap on the Council, by introducing the following resolution:

"WHEREAS: An election for the purpose of voting under the local option law of the State is to be held in North Plainfield on May 14, and

"WHEREAS: There is a probability that within a short time the voters of this city will have an opportunity to express their will at the polls on the license question, therefore

"Resolved, The further consideration of all applications for hotel or saloon licenses be postponed until after such election in Somerset county and in Union county if such election be ordered by the Court."

The vote on the above resolution was as follows: Ayes—Messrs Dunham, Jenkins, Marsh, Myers, Newhall, Squires—6.

Nays — Messrs Dumont, Erickson, Gallup, Moffett, Watson—5.

Before a vote was taken on the above resolution, Mr. Erickson stated that its adoption would inevitably postpone the action on the license question indefinitely; he said that in all probability the Legislature would to-night repeal the local option law. Nevertheless the temperance element got in with both feet, and this city may be legally "dry," at least for some months to come.

Council then adjourned.

—A change of advertisement for J. C. Pierson, Jr., the Front street hardware merchant, will appear in our next issue.

How the Local Option Law Works.

It is a strange thing that a minority should carry an election. But that is just what happened in our recent local option election, says a Hunterdon county paper. The tickets—the wording of which was ordered by Republican law—read: "For the sale of intoxicating liquors," and "Against the sale of intoxicating liquors." And although a majority of nearly 700 was cast "against the sale of intoxicating liquors," yet the result is the jug taverns and dives go on with their business entirely undisturbed.

Is there not a good deal of hollow mockery about an enactment that can thus cheat and trifle with the people? The courts should have properly pronounced the local-option law unconstitutional if for no other reason than that its wording for the tickets to be used in the elections is contradictory and ineffective.

New Jersey's local-option law simply drives the retailers of liquor out of business and gives a monopoly to the wholesalers. It does not abolish the sale of strong drink.

Services at Warren Mission Chapel.

Warren Mission chapel was densely filled with spectators, Sunday, at the regular Sunday evening service. Rev. W. E. Honeyman presided, and Councilman Dunham's choir led the singing. Owing to an engagement in Philadelphia, Mr. Crittenden, the founder of the Florence Mission in New York city, was unable to attend, but Rev. Mr. Janes and two of the lady workers, Mrs. Eva Randolph and Mrs. Charlotte Ressicue, were present in the interest of the Mission.

Rev. Mr. Janes made the opening address, and Mrs. Randolph followed by singing "A sinner like me." She also told of the wayward life she had lived in years gone by, and how she had been converted by attending the Florence Mission. She said that although she had lived next to a church for a long time she had never seen the inside of one until a year and a half ago. She made a strong appeal to the young people present, and closed her address by singing "A little word for Jesus."

Mrs. Ressicue also gave an interesting address, contrasting her former life with the life she has been leading since her conversion. Mrs. Randolph sang sweetly "Good night, Jesus," after which Rev. Mr. Honeyman made an appeal, and four persons raised their hands for prayer. The meeting adjourned with the benediction.

Middlesex Gun Club.

There was a large attendance on the grounds of the Middlesex Gun Club, 22d ult., to participate in live and inanimate target practice. Trenton sent a delegation of six members of the Mercer Gun Club, all good fellows and good shots. Representatives were present from Albany, N. Y., Philadelphia, Pa., Mulford, N. J., and even distant St. Paul, Minn. Under the Keystone system, inanimate targets were rapidly shot off, and general satisfaction guaranteed. Indeed yesterday was a red-letter day in the history of the Club.

Not a "kicker" was present to mar the pleasures of the day. Mr. S. Wilbur acted in the capacity of referee in a fair manner, while Nief Apgar superintended the management of the traps in satisfactory form. Refreshments were served by caterer W. Squires while Mr. John Mortimer doled out the winnings to successful competitors. The Middlesex Gun Club has a reputation for successful management second to no other Club in the country, and it is not unlikely that one of the coming tournaments under the management of the U. S. Sportsmen's Association, will be shot on their grounds the coming Spring.

On account of experimenting with that "blarsted" stuff—Schultz powder—Charley Smith, the German element of the Club, had to send his "old reliable" gun to the factory for repairs, and in consequence had to shoot a strange gun. This fact accounts for his "mistakes" made in the scores.

A Recherche Reception in the Borough and its Guests.

Mrs. Chas. Matthews gave an afternoon tea, Thursday last week, from 4 till 7 o'clock, at her home on Grove street and Prospect place. There were present the higher society people of both this city and the Borough.

Mrs. Matthews' daughter, Mrs. B. Arrowsmith Hegeman, Jr., assisted her in the reception of the guests.

The interior of the spacious house was fragrantly and profusely decorated with flowers, and illuminated principally by candle light. The supper by Mareti, of New York, was also especially excellent.

Receiving with Mrs. Matthews and Mrs. Hegeman, were Mrs. William J. Boome, Mrs. T. Logan Murphy, Miss Annie Murphy, Mrs. Edward Turrill, Mrs. David Thompson, Mrs. Thomas H. Taylor and Mrs. Mason W. Tyler.

Among the guests were:

Mrs. Frederick Mead, Mrs. Talmage, Miss Helen White, Mr. and Mrs. Bowen, Mr. and Mrs. Burnett, Mrs. Chas. Hart, Miss L. Hart, Mrs. Herring, Mrs. C. Ames, Mrs. Chas. Brooks, the Misses Tweedy, Dr. and Mrs. Murray, Mrs. Wm. E. Lowe, Mrs. Baldwin, Mrs. O. T. Waring, Mrs. L. Timpson, Mrs. J. K. Myers, Mrs. J. B. Dumont, Mrs. Smalley, Mrs. Pliny Fisk, Miss J. Acly, Mrs. Herbert Brooks, Mrs. G. Almy, Mrs. Walter McGee, Mrs. Massett, Miss Massett.

Mrs. Walter Stewart, Mrs. Joseph Sandford, Mr. and Mrs. Woltmann, Mrs. A. Hooley, Mrs. Lucy Hooley, Mr. and Mrs. Graydon, Mrs. Lawson, Dr. and Mrs. T. S. Davis, Miss L. Cook, Miss M. Ackerman, Miss M. Manning, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Place, Mrs. C. Mitchell, Mrs. E. Long, Miss M. Long, Mrs. Warman, Miss Helen Warman, Mrs. E. Brown, Miss Grace Brown, Mrs. Chas. McCutchen, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Dupee, Mrs. Hotchkiss, Mr. and Mrs. Henderson, Miss E. Thompson.

Mr. and Mrs. St. John, Mrs. Rhoss, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Case, the Misses Day, Miss D. M. Groendyke, Mrs. J. G. Foster, Mrs. John Clapp, the Misses Lloyd, the Misses Embury, Mrs. Taggart, Mr. J. B. Bacon, Miss Mulholland, Miss Daisy M. Mulholland, Mr. and Mrs. B. A. Hegeman, Miss E. Hoome, Mrs. Henry McGee, Mrs. Chas. Horne, Mrs. Edward Waring, Mr. Clarence Murphy, Mrs. Wm. DeForest Curtis, Mrs. Chas. Reed, Miss Clark, Miss Hunter, Dr. and Mrs. Carman, Miss A. Prior, Mr. T. C. Zerega, Miss L. Lyons.

THE REFORM CLUB'S CELEBRATION.

Feb'y 22 was the fifth anniversary of the organization of the Plainfield Reform Club and exercises commemorative of the day were held in Reform Hall, that evening. The entertainment was varied in its nature, and included both vocal and instrumental music, recitations and a brief address by Mr. John H. French, President of the club.

On account of the mislaying of the programme, there was a long and tedious wait before the entertainment commenced, and this coupled with the fact that an unusually large number of children gained admission to the place and were continually whistling and "talking out in church," was extremely annoying to the more conservative members in the audience.

Rev. W. E. Honeyman presided, in his usual pleasant style, and announced as the first number on the informal programme, a solo by Miss Sarah Manning, which was well rendered, and received a hearty encore.

Dr. T. W. Pucey, of Thomaston, Conn., and a man of more than the average elocutionary abilities, next favored the audience with a recitation entitled "An old man in a stylish church." In answer to an encore he very favorably impersonated "A school boy's first speech before the School Committee."

The Misses Manning gave an alto and soprano duett, responding to an encore, and Mr. Moon followed with a tenor solo, both of which were warmly received—Mr. Moon, singing "Under the Stars there is rest," in response to an encore.

Dr. Pucey recited the piece "I've been a sister, kind and true," etc., and later impersonated two stuttering individuals, and "Snoring on a 'sleeper' between Elizabeth and Plainfield," all of which was creditably performed, as was evidenced from the loud and continued applause he received.

Miss Alice Smith, whom President French said the Reform Club owned, by reason of her having been connected with the club in a musical capacity, almost since the club's organization, then deftly manipulated the piano keys, and wrought out the ever popular "Home Sweet Home," with variations.

Miss Hattie Manning pleasantly sang "High up in the Lighthouse top," an alto solo, and responded to an encore.

Rev. Mr. Honeyman announced that Mrs. Monroe would give two illustrated lectures in Vincent chapel on Monday and Tuesday evenings next.

He also announced that Mrs. Coard would address a mother's meeting in Reform Hall, Tuesday afternoon next, on the subject of hygiene and other matters.

President French of the Reform Club, spoke a few words of encouragement, adding that the people of Plainfield do not want license and won't have it if the moral influence of the community is brought to bear upon the Councilmen who favor it. He submitted the following, which was almost unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, The efforts of the Plainfield Reform Club to save men from the power and the evils of the drink habit, are thwarted, in many instances, by the open saloon; and

WHEREAS, The efforts hitherto made, through the license system, to lessen the sale of intoxicating drinks, and the ruin resulting through their use, have proved wholly ineffectual in this city, therefore,

Resolved, That the Plainfield Reform Club, in its fifth anniversary meeting assembled, does hereby most earnestly petition and pray the Common Council of the city of Plainfield, to refuse all applications for license to sell intoxicating liquors during the coming year.

Mr. Geo. F. Opdyke read the following congratulatory telegram from Mr. S. A. Haines of Netherwood, who is at present traveling in the West:

"Indianapolis, Feb. 22, 1889.
"To Plainfield Reform Club,
"I regret that I cannot be with you to-night. Liquor men are all favoring high license as a last resort. The right to regulate concede— the right to prohibit. Long live the Reform Club. 'No revenue from sale of morals' should be her motto. Have courage and go forward,
"S. A. Haines."

A collection amounting to $51.10 was taken up, and by special request Miss Sarah Manning sang "The cows are in the corn."

Dr. Honeyman said that the musical and literary half of the programme had been completed, and that the remainder of the evening's festivities would be enacted in the basement. The audience then partook of a collation, provided by the ladies of the Temperance Aid Society.

Thus ended the fifth and perhaps the most successful anniversary of the Reform Club.

Reception at Rodman Seminary.

A reception was given to the pupils of Rodman Seminary on Thursday, Feb. 21, which included a play entitled "Beanville," with the following characters:

"Mother Bean," Miss Anna Teale; "Daughter Dorcas," Miss Anna Daft; "Torza Ann," sister of "Mother Bean," Miss Bessie Brower; "Mrs. Crumple," the gossip, Miss Sophie Brower; "Joshua Barnyard," a lover, Mr. A. E. Holmes.

The balance of the programme consisted of dancing, vocal and instrumental music, and a laughable piece called "St. Valentine's Auction." The following ladies constituted the Committee of Arrangements: Miss Matilda Daft, the Misses Brower and Miss Anna Teale.

Their Eighth Anniversary.

The delegates from the Y. P. S. of the various churches in this city joined with the Christian Endeavor Society of the Trinity Reformed church Monday evening, in observing the eighth anniversary of the National organization in this country. The attendance was large, and great interest was manifested. Mr. E. S. Thatcher presided.

The subject of Christian Endeavor was discussed at length by some of the members present, who eulogized the Society for the good it had done them.

Since the Christian Endeavor Society was first introduced in this country, eight years ago, the organization has grown so rapidly that it now numbers about 400,000 members.

Mr. Fender's Heart Displaced by Fright.

The fire that destroyed the residence of Mrs. J. Beck, on East Front street, on the morning of November 20, last, was also the cause of a singular sad accident to Mr. Jacob Fender, who resides on Green Brook in the rear of the residence of Mr. J. L. Ludlum, in whose employ he was and is as general manager, gardener, etc. Mr. Fender was asleep at the time and being suddenly awakened by the cry of fire and seeing the flames, for an instant thought his own home was on fire.

So great was the shock to his heart a severe hemorrhage followed. Recently his heart has failed to properly perform its work, and as a result the blood does not circulate as it should, and one of his hands and both of his limbs are badly swollen and black as ink from the settling of stagnant blood in the veins. An examination of his heart would seem to indicate that it has really become displaced by the sudden fright he received, as above stated, and there is but slight hopes of his recovery. Although he is at times a great sufferer, yet we are happy to inform his many friends that his Christian resignation to God's will is another evidence of the blessedness all experience who are firm in their belief that "God doeth all things well."

—Complaints are made to Postmaster Force, by the letter carriers, that mischievous boys tamper with the locks on the street mail boxes, by inserting sticks, etc., in the key slot. It is well to remind these persons that there is a severe penalty attached to this offense against the property of the Government, which will be inflicted if the guilty persons are detected in the act.

Death of Mr. Isaac B. Atwood.

At his home on West Seventh street, Thursday, Feb. 21, occurred the death of Mr. Isaac B. Atwood, an old and respected resident of this city, after a lingering illness from a complaint known as chronic cystitis. The deceased was in the 60th year of his age, and for the past six years he has been a resident of this city. He was a member of the firm of Davis, Atwood & Co., provision dealers, with headquarters at the fort of West 39th street, New York city, with which firm he has been connected for the past twenty-five years, but of late he has been obliged to give up active labor.

Mr. Atwood has been married thirty-five years, and his death is the first which has occurred in the immediate family during that time. A widow, and three children, one of the latter being the wife of Mr. W. M. Stillman, survive him.

Rum Will be Sold By the Quart, Now.

The following from the New York Tribune of Tuesday is so full of erroneous and ridiculous statements that it plainly emanated from the Plainfield evening news.

No rum may be legally sold in Plainfield outside of the drug stores after March 1. At that time all barrooms and hotel liquor licenses expire and last night the Common Council adopted resolutions postponing the consideration of all license applications until local option elections should have been held in both Somerset and Union counties. That in Somerset is to occur on May 14, but in Union county, only the first steps have have been taken toward securing an election. If the local option law be repealed by the present Legislature, the matter of renewing licenses must lie dormant until the new Council of 1890 meets. At any rate Plainfield will be a dry place for months to come.

The only correct assertion of the many above, is that the barroom and hotel licenses expire March 1. Those holding Government licenses will supply Plainfield with more rum than it can hold, from now on, but if the Council chooses it may take up the applications next Monday evening and grant or refuse such as the majority pleases. This refutation of one phase of the matter may be taken as a sample to show how far wrong is the whole article.

GRAND PRELATE ULRICH.

At New Brunswick, Friday, was announced the result of the election for officers of the Grand Lodge, Knights of Pythias, of New Jersey, and it was then known that a most unusual honor had been paid the Hon. John Ulrich by his election as Grand Prelate over Grand Master at Arms, Thomas W. Getty, to whom the office, by the courtesy of promotion, would probably have gone had any other competitor been named against him.

Mr. Getty had been Grand Outer and Inner Guard, and Master at Arms, by successive elections, and the office of Grand Prelate was in the line of his promotion, but recognizing how particularly Mr. Ulrich was fitted for the office and how much he deserved the honor, the Lodges of the State went down "on the floor" and raised their popular Brother up to the third office in rank in the Grand Lodge.

Among the other officers elected was Mr. Eugene V. Lorton, also of this city, one of the most faithful and hard-working officers that any subordinate lodge can boast of. He was made Grand Keeper of Records and Seals, with a salary and a certain amount—that should be increased —for traveling expenses.

A Great Success and Those Who Contributed to It.

The "Lady Washington Tea and Musicale" given February 22 under the auspices of the young ladies branch of the Ladies Auxiliary Society of the Church of the Holy Cross, North Plainfield, in the Sunday school building, was a perfect success. The room presented a beautiful sight, decorated as it was with flags and bunting, and crowded to its utmost capacity with friends and relatives of the young ladies—fully three hundred persons being present, representing many of the best families of this city and the borough.

The success of the entertainment is largely due to Miss Julia Acly who took entire charge of the musical part, and to Miss Grace W. Luther who took charge of the sale of tickets, the decorations, and the supper, assisted by the young ladies and lady members of the church.

All had worked hard to make the entertainment a success. One little girl, eight years of age, and a member of the Sunday school, anxious to assist, sold seventy-two tickets of admission to families in Washington Park alone.

At the close of the entertainment a sumptuous supper was served by the ladies to all who remained, and fully two hundred partook of it. One hundred and forty dollars were realized which will be devoted towards the purchase of a piano for the use of the Sunday school.

Miss Agnes D. Smith impersonated Lady Washington, and Mr. Willie Tyler, George Washington, and the following was the programme for the evening:

Glee, by Messrs Hardy, Vail, Ackerman, Mc Clymont, Williams, Mackey, Taggart, R. D. Spencer and H. T. Spencer, all members of the new choir.
Spring-song—(Mendelssohn) and "Polish dance" by Miss Daisy M. Mulholland.
Jingle Bells—Frank W. Thompson, Arthur Albertus and Willie Taliamy.
Songs—Happy Day, and Mistress Prue by Mr. Paul Tapley of Holy Cross choir, New York.
Polonaise by Miss Helen E. Warman.
Romance (by Henri Ernst) Master Ed. E. Waring assisted by Mrs. E. J. Waring.
The Deacon's Masterpiece, or the Wonderful one horse shaise, by Oliver Wendell Holmes, Master Cornelius Tyler. At the close of this recitation young Master Tyler received great applause.
Tarantelle (by Sidney Smith) Miss Helen A. Hasbrouck.
Spanish peasant ballad—Master Herbert Schutt. So pleased was the audience with the sweet singing of Herbert, he was obliged to repeat the ballad amid tremendous applause.
Home Again—a double quartette—Miss Helen E. Warman, Miss Emily M. Thompson, and the Misses Elizabeth M. and Annie G. Hasbrouck, Willie E. McClymont, Howard Spencer, Chas. Donaldson and Edward Hasselmann.
In der Fremde—Violin solo—Eli Long, Jr.
Songs—Happy Birds, and Annie Laurie—Miss Emily A. Thompson.
Military Galop—(Lichner) Messrs Hasselmann and McClymont.
Good Night, my child—Edward Hasselmann.
"America"—by the choir and entire audience, all standing.

—One of our North Plainfield residents fell into the area way at Reform Hall, on Friday evening, in his eagerness to get into the basement. He requests us not to enlarge on the matter.

Wreck at Dunellen.

A coal car on an empty West bound train jumped the track just West of the Dunellen station on the Central Railroad about 11 o'clock, Tuesday morning, and delayed travel over the road at that point for some time. No one was injured.

The Latimer Will Case.

Tuesday citations were issued by the administratrix of Sarah M. Latimer's will and served upon C. Parse and W. H. Gardner, of Plainfield, notifying them to appear before the Orphan's Court on March 6, and state their reasons for opposing the probating of the will.

Lost His Toes.

Edward Townley, Jr., a lad about fifteen years of age, and a resident of Westfield, attempted to alight from a coal train at the Broad street crossing, in that place Tuesday, when he slipped and fell under the wheels, terribly crushing the toes of his left foot. A physician dressed the wounds.

Plainfield has no option at All in the Matter.

Any assertion that the postponement of the liquor license question is to await the people's voice in the matter to be expressed in a "local option" election, is nonsense. There will be no such election probably, and if there was, the denizens of Elizabeth's lowest wards and the hundreds of laboring men about the "Port" would overcome with their votes all the temperance element in Plainfield.

As Others See Us.

Business called us to Plainfield last Saturday, and we were surprised to witness so much life and bustle on the streets, and so much business doing in the stores. It is seldom one sees at this season of the year so much business activity, and we congratulate the residents of the beautiful city over the hill at the bright prospects before it. Plainfield has but just commenced developing, and he who lives thirty years in the future, will recognize it as the leading inland city of the State. —Summit Record.

The Chess Tournament.

The fourth annual tournament of the New Jersey Chess Association took place in this city Friday. Thirty-two members played. Sixteen entered in a special open to all contest for a medal given by the Plainfield club. This was won by Edward Hymes, a Newark boy, and the youngest member of the association. W. H. Rowe won second place. Of the Plainfield members, Mr. F. A. Dunham won 2 and lost 1; A. Collier won 2 and lost 1; Long and C. Thiers each won 2 and lost 2.

In the championship contest, Messrs R. B. Keyes and C. Murphy of this city took part. The contest was not finished but before March 15 the following will play off for the medal:—Murphy, who won three games; R. W. Pope, who won two; N. Hymes, who won one, and R. B. Keyes, the present champion, and C. Hymes, who played three drawn games each.

The Plainfield Club feel particularly grateful to Mr. G. Q. Packer for his kind loan of the furniture necessary for the Tournament.

ANNUAL STATE CONVENTION

The following notice concerning the approaching Y. M. C. A. State Convention has been sent out from the headquarters of the Executive Committee:

EX. COM., Y. M. C. A.,
OF NEW JERSEY,
NEWARK, N. J., Feb 15, 1889.

DEAR BRETHREN OF THE ASSOCIATION—The twentieth annual convention of the Young Men's Christian Associations of our State will be held at Bridgeton, March 14-17, 1889.

It is difficult to estimate the benefit which the enlarged and prosperous work in our State has received from the last two State Conventions. We look for like results from the one to be held at Bridgeton. This is the first time the Convention has been located in Southern New Jersey.

The Bridgeton Association is the oldest in the State, and is the only one organized before 1860 that has continuously prosecuted its work.

Several vigorous Associations have been organized in that section during the past two years, and other places are arranging to do so. The influence of a good State Convention will be immediate and lasting. We ask the brethren of Associations at a distance to make some slight sacrifice in time and money in the interest of the young men in this part of our State, believing that results will follow that will fully justify it.

Members of the Y. M. C. A. of this city will attend, and participate in the interesting exercises arranged for this occasion.

Washington's Birthday in Washingtonville.

An entertainment was given in the Washingtonville school house, last Friday, for the benefit of the Sunday School library, as the school has increased so rapidly of late as to necessitate the procuring of more suitable books in order to supply the scholars with good reading matter.

The committee in charge of the library are very much pleased at the success of the entertainment, as the sum of money procured, $25, will go far toward furnishing the library with works by standard authors.

The first number on the programme was a reading by Mr. Robert Doyle, "The Darky Philosopher's Address on the Apple." Next, a duet by the Misses Minnie Spencer and Nettie Beeching—Mrs. Luersson playing the accompaniment—which was loudly applauded.

This was followed by a recitation by Master Robbie Clark, entitled "Columbia," after which all enjoyed a solo by Miss Georgie Spencer—"Let Me Hear Thy Voice Again," by Millard.

A duet by Robbie and Eddie Clark was very admirably rendered, entitled, "The Old Familiar Place." A reading by Mrs. Geo. Bullman, "The Doctor's Story," was so good as to receive an encore, when she read "Hopspider's Boy."

A duet by Miss Nettie Beeching and Mr. B. Luersson, was one of the most enjoyable features of the evening. An encore to it was demanded, but owing to the lateness of the hour and the length of the programme, it was not repeated.

A quartette of young ladies sang "Good Night," which ended the literary and musical part of the programme. Iced cream and cake was then served to an appreciative audience, by Messrs Geo Howard and Isaac Winings, the caterers of the evening, who were busy until the supply was exhausted.

BELFORD'S MAGAZINE.
DONN PIATT, Editor.

Though BELFORD'S MAGAZINE is the latest comer in the field of periodical literature, the best proof of its prosperity is the fact that its paid up subscription list has reached a figure eminently satisfactory to the publishers.

BELFORD'S MAGAZINE is distinctly American and commends itself to all intelligent and thoughtful persons who wish to keep themselves posted on the great questions of the day.

Under the able and brilliant management of Col. Donn Piatt it will each month in its editorial department speak out fearlessly but fairly, and with thorough independence, on all questions of public importance.

The long novel, given in each number complete, by some one of our popular authors, such as Julian Hawthorne, Edgar Saltus, Edgar Fawcett, Mrs. Elizabeth Bellamy and a score of other well known names, is a characteristic of BELFORD'S MAGAZINE.

Prof. Sumner, David A. Wells, Henry George, Henry Watterson, John G. Carlisle, Frank Hurd, are some of the contributors to BELFORD'S MAGAZINE on political and economic subjects.

Short stories, two or more of which are contributed to each number, sketches, dramatic notes, passing events and book reviews, combine to make BELFORD'S one of the most readable and interesting periodicals now before the public.

Send for a three months' trial subscription, 75 cents. $2.50 a year; 25 cents a number. Enclose 4 cents for sample copy.

W. L. FORCE, Postmaster.

—The police of this city Feb. 20 captured in New York, "Jack" Dudy, who is charged with committing a crime here several weeks ago. Dudy's home is on West Third street, this city.

—The coffee cart which the ladies of the W. C. T. U. donated to the Plainfield Fire Department, was used for the first time after the Peterson fire, Sunday morning.

—Even the temperance reformers are not enthusiastic admirers of the position taken by those Councilmen who postponed action on the license applications instead of settling the question at once.

—A prominent sight at the station this morning, was a big refrigerator car that seemed to have just arrived with a load for delivery by the quantity now that the sale by the glass is postponed."

—The eighteenth anniversary of the Locust Grove Union Sunday school located near Westfield, was observed Sunday. Addresses were made by visiting clergymen and officers of the school.

—One of the men employed by Mr. John H. Tier in cutting ice, fell in the pond on Monday, and was only rescued from a watery grave by the exertion of those of the other [illegible], at work near by.

—John Duffy of East Third street, has been committed to the County Jail at Elizabeth, for medical examination. He has been suffering from alcoholic mania. Justice Nash committed him on Saturday.

—The Longfellow [illegible] of the Congregational Y. P. S. C. E., appointed for Friday, March 1, has been postponed one week, and the Congregational Chautauqua Circle will meet Friday evening of this week.

—Fifty copies of the Latimer will were reprinted from the columns of THE PRESS and sent by the Surrogate, according to law, to the heirs and all others interested, with his official endorsement as correct and true.

—A large audience greeted Mr. Ernest E. Ackerman, Thursday evening last, at the Y. M. C. A., rooms, at which time he described in a very interesting and instructive manner a trip to Cuba, by way of Richmond.

—So soon as the "City Fathers," venerable or otherwise, are through wrestling with the license and street railway question, THE PRESS trusts they will turn their attention to the town clock. It tells not, neither does it [illegible].

—Jack Dudy, the young man from this city whose arrest in New York city on Friday, was told exclusively in THE PRESS on the following day, was Tuesday extradited to New Jersey and locked up in the county jail at Elizabeth.

—The plates, copyrights and publishing contracts of the late firm of Knight, Loomis & Co., were sold at auction by the receiver, in New York, Tuesday. The entire property including the books on hand, was knocked down at $80,100.

—An unsophisticated bachelor wants to know if the "woman's exchange" is a place where a forlorn husband can exchange a woman who translates Greek poetry and paints [illegible] sonnets on red plush for one that can broil a beefsteak and sew on a suspender button?

—At the present time there is a great demand for small houses and parts of houses in this city. Advertisements inserted in THE PRESS to that effect, of late, have almost invariably been the cause of property-owners securing desirable tenants, provided, however, that the rent is not unreasonable.

—Councilman Moffett has received letters from the Hartley family in the South, relatives of the late Sarah M. Lattimer, of this city, asking for information concerning the deceased's will, and as to what part of the estate, if any, was left to them. Mr. Moffett has communicated with members of the family.

—Mrs. Monroe gave an interesting illustrated lecture in Vincent Chapel, last evening, on "The City of Washington." The lecturer exhibited over eighty views of the public and other buildings in Washington, and fluently described them, showing her familiarity with the subject.

—Westfield at night is about the darkest place on the face of the earth. The people as a rule become settled for the night soon after the streets' go-to roost, and about the only light in the village after nine o'clock is that furnished by the Central Railroad switch lamps. Has Westfield's street lighting contract run out, or did the lamplighter consult an old almanac?

—A circular has recently been issued by the New Jersey Central Road to station agents, prohibiting the use of coal, wood, oil, etc., for the agents' individual use. In the future all agents will be held strictly responsible for the use of the company's fuel in any instance. Heretofore agents, in addition to their salary, have been allowed the free use of wood, oil and coal.

TWO MORE FIRES.

The frame barn belonging to Isaac Ottman, a gardener and truck man, located on Elizabeth avenue, this city, was fired by an incendiary soon after midnight on Sunday morning, and totally destroyed, together with a hot-house and about 10,000 tomato, egg and cabbage plants.

The owner of the place was in the adjoining hot-house at 10:30 P. M., Saturday, and Mr. Ottman himself was in the building a half hour later, but neither of them saw any fire. Mr. Ottman moderately estimates his loss at from $250 to $300 on the barn, which is total. He had full insurance on the hot-house. The alarm was telephoned from the house of Mr. C. A. Runkle, on Eighth street.

About an hour later, fire was discovered in Mr. Carl Peterson's green-house on Prospect street, and before the flames were extinguished, the building and contents were damaged to the extent of about $1,000.

The fire originated in the centre of the building, and destroyed several hundred young rose bushes and other plants.

Mr. Peterson told a PRESS reporter that when he first discovered the fire it appeared to him to be of little magnitude. The flames spread rapidly however, and completely gutted one section of the building. While the fire was in progress, Mr. Peterson received some severe flesh wounds by the flying glass.

The firemen responded to both alarms promptly, and in the latter instance did commendable work in confining the flames to the portion of the building where the fire started. Mr. Peterson did not have a cent of insurance either on the green-house or contents.

Personal.

Miss Florence Runyon entertained a few of her friends at her parent's residence on West Front street, Saturday evening.

Mrs. George P. Dupee gave a luncheon to a select few of her friends, Wednesday at her home on Rock View avenue, Washington Park.

Mrs. Andrew Vanderbeek of Second place, has gone to Washington, D. C., to remain until after the inauguration of President-elect Harrison.

Mr. Wm. R. Martin has resigned as precentor of the Park M. E. church of Elizabeth, to take effect April 1, having accepted a position in Plainfield.

At the residence of the bride's mother at 'Fanwood,' Friday, Justice George Kyte united in marriage Mr. Matthias Schmidt and Miss Leonie Emma Guerrier.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank King and son, of Jersey City Heights, accompanied by Miss Ida Adams, of London, Canada, are the guests of Mrs. L. Prescott, of West Second street.

The Alpine Social Society of Dunellen, held a party at the residence of Justice Cole, last evening. About 40 persons were present, and danced to Prof. Franse's excellent music.

Dr. T. W. Pucey, who entertained the audience at Reform Hall Friday evening, was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. H. Schermerhorn of North avenue, during his stay in this city.

The last dance of The Tuesday Evening Club, a private organization formed this season for social pleasure, was given last evening at the residence of Mr. Tracy, No. 49 West Eighth street.

The Rev. R. Rush Rhees asked last week for his letter from the First Baptist church, and received it. He has accepted a call to the pastorate of a church at Portsmouth, N. H.

Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Ginna gave a large reception, Feb. 21, to many of their numerous friends, followed by a dance later in the evening, for which Miss Ginna's friends received special cards.

Mr. Wm. Cook and Miss Sarah Harrison, both of this city, were united in marriage Thursday Feb. 21 by Rev. Wm. R. Sears of Fanwood. The ceremony took place at the residence of Mr. James Radin, in this city.

A musical was given Tuesday night, by Mrs. J. B. Dumont, at her home on Seventh street and the Crescent. The invitations were restricted to the most intimate friends of the hostess and Miss Dumont.

Mr. Aaron Darby, the second son of Mr. Levi Darby, is lying seriously sick with consumption, at Newark. The patient recently returned from a nine months' Western trip, but little improved in health.

At St. Mary's church at five o'clock Wednesday Mr Daniel McCarthy and Miss Elizabeth F. Carney, both of this city, were united in marriage by Rev. Father Smyth. A reception was held at the residence of the bride, No. 40 West Third street, at 7 P. M.

Thursday evening at 8:30 o'clock, Mr. George W. Cole, of this city, was married to Miss Maud B. Herbert, at the home of the bride's parents, Rutledge street, Brooklyn. The groom is a member of the firm of Terrill & Cole, undertakers, East Front street.

Mr. David R. Weaver, formerly of the firm of Weaver Bros., has connected himself with Mr. Edward Love, and will hereafter have charge of the latter's extending business in paper hanging and interior decorating. Mr. Weaver is the right man in the right place.

Miss Mamie Cameron, daughter of ex-Councilman John Cameron, who is finishing her education at St. Elizabeth's Academy, Madison, N. J., spent Washington's birthday with her parents at Force's Hotel, returning to her studies this morning. Her many friends were delighted to meet her.

New York's great society and literary weekly, Once a Week, publishes in issue Feb 23, "Baltimore's Four Hundred," a list of that city's highest aristocracy and swells of society. Among the bachelors of this gilded circle, is published the name of Mr. Clark Wright Evans, well-known in this city.

Mr. Christian Snyder, an old and highly respected resident of Scotch Plains, died on Saturday from paralysis, aged 75 years. The deceased was the father of Mrs. Chas. Gimms of this city. The funeral took place from the house on Monday at two P. M. Interment was made in the Methodist cemetery in this city.

The Newark News is about as bad as the Plainfield paper by that name, for exaggerating matters. Recently it stated that Mrs. Simeon Harris of this city had dragged her husband by the hair to a red-hot stove, and placing his hands on the stove, the flesh was burned off to the bone. Which of course is not so.

Mr. Frank E. Miller, proprietor of The Netherwood, and Mrs. Miller, are spending the balance of the Winter in New York city, after a number of enjoyable trips South, West, and in fact wherever interest and pleasure were obtainable. Mr. Miller expects an early season, and is already accepting requests to reserve rooms from May 1.

During Thursday last, at Newark, Mr. Charles L. McBride—who has recently connected himself with the pharmacy of Mr. H. P. Reynolds—passed with honor the examination of the State Board and is now a registered pharmacist of New Jersey. Mr. McBride is a graduate of the Albany College of Pharmacy, and already a licentiate of New York State.

Mr. Harry Lewis Dunn, son of Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Dunn, formerly of this city, celebrated the fourth anniversary of his birth, at his home on Chestnut street, Elizabeth, last week. There was the usual cake and candies, and about thirty young guests enjoyed the music, games and supper provided. Quite a number of presents were tendered the little lad.

Miss Bell E. Vail was given a surprise sociable at her home No. 17 Pearl street, North Plainfield, last week. Relatives and friends old and young to the number of forty-five were present from Philadelphia, Quakertown, Dunellen, and this city. The evening was spent in a social way, interspersed with parlor games. All partook of the refreshments furnished by the committee in charge, and separated at a late hour well pleased with the evening's entertainment.

A few days ago it was Wm. E. McClure, Esq., attorney-at-law, but now it is Counsellor McClure, if you please. Before the Supreme Court, on Thursday, Mr. McClure passed the prescribed examination and was admitted. A candidate for Counsellor must be a practising attorney for three years and over, but Mr. McClure did not let pass a day more than the law required. He presented himself for examination at the very first term of Court after a prescribed limit.

Congressman-Elect Fowler spent Sunday in this city, the guest of Miss Clark.

The Misses Annie and Lena Maier of Dunellen, returned home Monday evening, after visiting friends in Phillipsburg, N. J.

Runaway.

While Mr. Wallace Sage of Union Village, was driving a young horse attached to a new buggy along Somerset street, Saturday morning, the animal sprang suddenly forward at some object in the road and snapped the king bolt of the vehicle. The horse attached to the front running gear broke loose from the buggy, thus throwing Mr. Sage out on the road and hurting him slightly. The horse ran up the street as far as Jacob Miles' where it turned in the yard and was caught. The front wheels were badly wrecked.

An Evening Sociable.

The second of a series of select sociables, given under the management of Messrs John L. Force, Frank Putnam, Frank Smith and James Blair, at the Park House, on the eve of Washington's Birthday, was a grand success. Over 50 couples participated in dancing to such excellent music as only Prof. Franse knows how to furnish. A feature of the music on this occasion was the playing of the piccolo by Mr. Ed. Webster, who kindly volunteered his services for the occasion. An elegant repast was served during the night's enjoyment, and everyone went home pleased and anxious for the next sociable.

We Warned Them During Leap Year.

Girls, do you know your chances of marrying? Well, representing a chance at 100 ratio it is said to be about as follows:

From 15 to 20 years..........14½ per cent
" 20 to 25 " ....52 "
" 25 to 30 " ....18 "
" 30 to 35 " ....15½ "
" 35 to 40 " ....3¾ "
" 40 to 45 " ....2½ "
" 45 to 50 " ....¾ of 1 "
" 50 to 56 " ....¼ of 1 "

Once in a while an old girl of sixty or so catches on, but the percentage is very small, hardly worth mentioning, in fact, although of course the event is of considerable importance to her.

False in All Things.

The news in a rigmarole of incorrect grammar and worse rhetoric, last week, stated it would not publish anonymous communications, and in another column of the same issue published a letter signed "A member of the W. C. T. U.," which was sent the news anonymously and which the publisher did not then nor now know the writer of.

The same communication was sent THE PRESS a week before, but it was not given space in these columns because it was anonymous and because it contained a statement that was undoubtedly false and calculated to injure someone. Probably that was the reason the news published it.

Laid at Rest.

The funeral of the young son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward D. Pound of West Fourth street, who died a few days ago, took place from his parent's residence, at 1 o'clock Thursday afternoon, Rev. Dr. Ketcham officiating. The reverend doctor spoke in sympathetic terms to the bereaved family, and on several occasions the speaker was himself moved to tears.

The dead was laid out in a handsome white broad-cloth casket, and the countenance on the dead child's face betokened peace and composure. The floral display was something grand, and included bouquets and set pieces sent in by classmates and teachers in the Crescent Avenue Sunday school, of which the deceased was a member, and from relatives and friends of the family.

At noon time the scholars in the primary department were given an opportunity to look for the last time upon the features of their late companion, and many of them availed themselves of the privilege. After the services the body was taken to Bound Brook and laid at rest with other members of the family.

Another Hitch in the Searing Matter.

Several years ago, Mr. A. V. Searing, then a grocer on Park avenue, leased what is known as the Mountain View Farm, owned by W. Kelly, situated in Washington Valley, to which he removed his family, giving up his business in this city.

Not having been brought up on a farm, he found, like many others, that farming is a business of itself, not to be learned in a single season. Therefore, while the crops were fair, they did not come up to a standard of profit that left any margin to the farmer.

The city denizen in Summer finds his way from the heat and toil of the great city to the delights of the country. In time some came to Mountain View Farm. There was a large, old farm-house, a good well of water—such as the whole Valley is noted for—and an abundance of shade. Situated as it was near the famous Washington Rock, the city boarder sent word to his friends that he had found Arcadia at last.

His friends came, so did their wives and little ones, to enjoy meals under the shade of giant elms, with plenty of grass for tables and seats. With the departure of Summer, however, the boarders though loath, were obliged to leave the generous hospitality.

Promises of a return next season in still larger numbers, induced Mr. and Mrs. Searing to secure plans for a large house to accommodate an increased demand for rooms. In fact some of the old boarders had selected rooms in advance, paying for them before the house was begun. Mr. Daniel Acker received the contract to build the house and it was to be finished in time for occupying the next season—Mr. Searing paying most of the expense from the money saved during the previous Summer.

The house was finished in time, and to furnish it Mrs. Searing applied to a Front street dealer for furniture, and he generously let her have what she wanted—on credit. The house was ready in time, but although people came from New York, Newark and Plainfield, they did not come in numbers large enough, it is said, to pay expenses. The quiet charm of the old farm-house was wanting in the new, and thus things ran behind until Mr. and Mrs. Searing were forced to surrender the place, after having made an honest effort to keep up under these difficulties.

To Mr. A. M. Griffen, to whom they owed quite a large debt, they sold several bedroom suits; but when he undertook to remove them, the furniture dealer served an injunction, restraining him, claiming the furniture as his until paid for. Mr. Griffen then consulted his counsel, who told his client to remove them forthwith. He did so, storing them in a house belonging to him.

That part of the matter so rests at present. What the furniture man will do in the premises is not yet known. Friday last Mr. Searing engaged Mr. Daniel Acker to move a load of furniture for him. A large farm wagon was loaded with things, but while coming down to town it was met by Marshal Job Coddington, who asked to whom the load of furniture belonged. On being told, "Mr. Searing," he informed Mr. Acker that the load was attached—at the same time placing his hand on the wagon—and that it must not go any further. Mr. Acker explained his ignorance of any trouble, and offered to cart them back, although he might have left them on the side of the road. His offer was accepted and the goods were brought back to to Mountain View Farm, where they remain.

Mr. Searing is more to be pitied than blamed, as he was the victim of misplaced confidence in the festive city boarder.

Conductors Suspended.

Within the past week, five Central Railroad conductors have been "laid off." A commutation ticket had been issued by Agent Rawlins at the Roselle station, and the name of the passenger inadvertently omitted. An officer of the company detected the omission and the conductors were blamed for having passed the ticket.

He Helped Himself.

Little Stevie Bullman—who the readers of THE PRESS will remember was so severely burned one day last Spring, while playing with a brush fire which his father, Freeholder Bullman, had kindled in order to get rid of some brush which was in his way of plowing—is so far recovered from his burns as to be able to walk about his room, much to the joy of his parents who, at one time, supposed he would be a cripple for life.

A story is told of Stevie, upon his overhearing a conversation in which it was intimated that he might never be able to walk again. When his mother returned to the room, to her surprise the boy was trying to walk by the side of his little cot, and when admonished he said to his mother that he did not want to be lame all his life. From that time he has increased in strength every day, to the great delight of his little brother and sisters, with whom he has been a great favorite. Many have been the means used by the other children, to while away the long hours of their brother's confinement to the house.

To Whom Honor is Due.

The members of the young ladies' branch of the Ladies Auxiliary Society of the Church of the Holy Cross, who made such a success of the Lady Washington Tea, are:

Miss Julia Aely, President; Elizabeth N. Hasbrouck, Secretary; Helen E. Warman, Treasurer; Annie G. Hasbrouck, Grace T. Brown, Adelaide R. Storm, Margaret J. Long, Emily S. Thompson, Bertha F. Warman, Annie M. Murphy, Lizzie J. Brock, Mary F. Thompson, Bertha Mooney, Daisy M. Mulholland, Julia Philpit, Cornelia Clara Woltmann, Mary B. Wells, Helen A. Hasbrouck, Agnes D. Smith, Sarah L. Long.

They were all attired in fancy costumes, and with powdered hair presented a beautiful group, resembling the costumes worn in the days of Matha Washington.

The special committee having the entertainment in charge were, Miss Julia Aely, Miss Grace W. Luther, Mrs. Chas. Wann, Mrs. Emma S. Brown and Mrs. J. C. McClymont. The ushers were Messrs. George P. Dupee, Chas. W. Case, Chas. Wann and Clarence Murphy.

A WIFE AND FOUR CHILDREN LEFT BY A WAYWARD HUSBAND.

A scandal which implicates a married man and a widow, is now being ventilated at New Market. The story is to the effect that Michael Kreuger of New Market has eloped with a neighbor, and the tongues of the gossiping villagers are wagging in consequence thereof.

In order to ascertain the true facts in the matter, a PRESS reporter went to New Market Tuesday A. M., and interviewed several persons, one of whom was the deserted wife. It appears that nine years ago, Kreuger, who was at one time employed as hostler at the Farmer's Hotel in this city, married a Miss Somers at Medford, Long Island, and immediately installed her as mistress in his home, then as now, about a quarter of a mile South of New Market. Their marriage relationship was until a year ago happy, and four children blessed the union, viz: Oscar, aged nine years and a cripple; Emma, aged 7; Willie, aged 3 years, and a baby six months old.

The Kreugers occupy a farm of thirty-seven acres, all of which is under cultivation. The place is said to belong to an uncle of the occupant who allows Kreuger to live there, upon payment of $200 rent annually, and also the taxes and insurance. The rent is considerably in arrears, but this is not given as a reason why he should desert his family.

A few years ago Mr. Henry Strauss, at one time a bottler doing business on East Second street, this city, purchased a farm about a quarter of a mile South of the Kreuger place, and went there to reside. About two years ago Mr. Strauss died, leaving besides his estate, a widow and an adopted son, aged fifteen years. Soon after Mr. Strauss' death, Mrs. Kreuger asserts, she noticed that her husband frequently visited the widow, and oftentimes remained out late at night. On many occasions she says she has seen him coming from the direction of Mrs. Strauss' house, and on several occasions she has upbraided him, but it had no effect.

About the first of January, Mrs. Strauss sold her farm to a man known as "Deaf Jim" Crawford, for $2,100, and on Feb. 6, last, she auctioned off her household effects. Three days later she shipped from the Lehigh Valley depot at New Market, a number of trunks and boxes, marked: "Foot of Liberty street, New York; to be called for," and on the same day she disappeared, and no trace of her has since been found.

On Saturday, a week ago, Kreuger brought a load of produce to this city, which he disposed of and spent most of the money in purchasing a half-dozen white shirts and some underwear from a West Front street dealer. The goods he did not take home. Without informing his wife of his intended departure in the afternoon, he put on his best clothes, and hastened to the railroad station, arriving there in time to take passage on the 2:17 P. M. train, bound East. Kreuger told Willie Weigel, a boy employed on the farm that he was going to Spottswood, N. J., and asked him to look after the stock until he returned. No tidings have since been had of him.

Thursday of last week one of Kreuger's cows was taken ill, and Mr. Herman Danz, proprietor of the Lake House Hotel, at New Market was sent for. Mr. Danz considered it a wise plan to telegraph to Spottswood for Kreuger and the following message was sent to him: "Mike, come home; cow sick." Michael Barringer, in whose care the telegram was sent telegraphed back: "Mike has not been here." On Sunday Mr. Barringer went to New Market, and was then told of Kreuger's relations with the widow, Mrs. Kreuger does not hesitate to state her belief that her husband has eloped with Mrs. Strauss, and is inclined to believe that the couple are now on their way to Germany. It is thought that the widow, who is in the neighborhood of 37 years of age, realized about $3,000 from the sale of her land, stock and farming utensils, and that Kreuger, who was instrumental in selling the farm, is now with her and acting as her financier.

Mrs. Kreuger told a PRESS reporter this morning that she had good proof of the criminal relations, which she alleged existed between her husband and the fair widow. She further stated that she was left without money, and with only provisions enough in the house to last the family a few days longer. She declares that she will not again live with her husband, who has so cruelly deserted his family, but will exert every effort to bring the alleged guilty party to justice. Mrs. Kreuger's stepfather came on from Medford on Sunday, and is now stopping with the family. The affair is very freely discussed at New Market, but it has heretofore been kept a secret in the hope that Constable Pierce would ascertain the whereabouts of the wayward husband. The wronged wife will doubtless apply for a divorce, on the ground of desertion.

Kreuger is spoken of as a moderate drinker, but the neighbors declare that he is hard-working and industrious.

PLAINFIELD'S THIRTY.

They Will Ride Within a Special, Far From the Madding Mob.

(For The Press.)

Thirty nobs of Plainfield—
Right good fellows they—
Soon to have a "Special"
To ride in ev'ry day.
Soon to have a "Special"
To take them up and down;
Thirty dudes of Plainfield,
The flower of the town.

Hi! make way for Plainfield!
Big is she with pride;
For has she not Thirty who
By themselves must ride?
Thirty Jersey Bluites,
Whew! but ain't they proud!
For they cannot mingle
With the common crowd.

O you dainty darlings,
Won't you grow too sweet!
Riding in a special un-
Contaminated seat!
If upon the ferry-
Boat we touch by chance,
Prithee! do not kill us
With your scornful glance.

What are all the Biddles
Of Philadelphia? What
Boston's royal Cliffords,
Or Gotham's chosen lot?
McAllister's Four Hundred!
What are they to these?
Plainfield's Thirty High-hats
Riding at their ease.

Make way for the special,
When she comes along;
Gayly is she flying.
Girlies, sing your song!
Thirty Plainfield Princes;
Pockets full of cash;
Riding in a special,
Cutting quite a dash.

"Hoop la! bust my buttons!
Dang my toplights! We
Posing are as scions
Of folks of high degree"
Are there any others?
Let them upward bob,
Join the Thirty Angels who
Won't mingle with the mob!

Thirty of the Elegants,
Each worth quite a pile,
Riding to the city
In right royal style.
Riding to the city
In a palace car.
Wonder who the dickens
And what the Thirty are?

TO THE TRAIN HANDS.

"Say, Jimmy, get your dress-coat,
And get your purple kids;
Prepare to dance attendance
Upon their royal nibs.
Watch, and when the Thirty
Make their grand exit—
Bow and scrape before them
Or else you'll lose your sit."

A New Jersey Commandery Proposed.

All New Jersey Companions of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion are invited to assemble at Trenton, on Tuesday, Feb. 26, at 11 A. M., at the Trenton House, to consider the advisability and practicability of establishing a separate Commandery of said Order for New Jersey.

There are hundreds of officers in New Jersey eligible to membership, and it is believed by some that a "New Jersey Commandery" would soon largely increase the Order here. A full attendance is requested, that the matter may be decided wisely.

OBITUARY.

It is with sincere sorrow that we record today the death of Miss Alice Tallman, the youngest daughter of Mr. William M. Tallman, which occurred at her home on Maple avenue, Washington Park, North Plainfield, at a quarter before three o'clock Tuesday afternoon, from consumption. The deceased was in the twenty-first year of her age, and has been confined to the house for the past three months. During the last days of her illness she recognized the fact that the end was near, and oftentimes expressed her willingness to go.

The deceased is the eleventh, out of a family of fourteen children, who has been called away. The deceased was a member of the Park Avenue Baptist church with which she united in early life. As a righteous woman she was untiring in her efforts to advance the cause of christianity. She was also an influential member of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the Trinity Reformed church, and had many warm friends among the members.

The funeral will take place from the house on Friday at twelve o'clock, noon. Interment will be made in Greenwood on Saturday.

An "At Home" At Councilman Myers' Residence.

From four until seven o'clock of Tuesday afternoon, Mrs. J. Kirtland Myers was at home to about 150 of her friends, at her residence on Seventh street, East. The hostess was assisted in the reception of the guests by her cousin, Miss Myers of Poughkeepsie, while the entertainment of all was the pleasing duty of Mrs. Frederick Mead, Mrs. Charles Brooks, Miss White and Mrs. B. A. Hegeman, Jr.

A few of the many present were:

Mrs. Mary S. Stillman, Rev. and Mrs. W. R. Richards, Mrs. Charles Hyde, Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Reynolds, Miss Reynolds, Mr. Frederick Mead, Mrs. D. N. A TRUE LOCAL OPTION LAW.

It looks now as though the Werts bill would pass the Senate without a ripple in spite of so many predictions to the contrary. It will be reported favorably to the Senate today and will be at once put on second reading.

A conference was held Tuesday afternoon, at which the Democratic Senators were all present and ex-Governor Abbett, U. S. Senator McPherson and other leaders. The conference was held merely to discuss the situation and to arrive at some way, if possible, of disposing of the bill to the satisfaction of all parties. Senator Baker told what amendment he proposed to make. The chief one is the one he has so long been fighting for, which gives the people in the townships the privilege of voting on the amount of the license fee to be fixed. There will be no limit to the maximum fee, and each township can make it as high as it pleases, bringing about the same results as local option. In towns, boroughs and cities where Boards of Excise grant the licenses, the people can elect Boards to suit their views. These Boards will be given the privilege of fixing the fee, and if the people want a high fee they can elect Boards favorable to such a license fee. If they want a low fee they can elect accordingly.

Senator Baker thinks that this will bring the matter right down to the people, where it belongs. He argued his point before the conference, and gave them to understand that he could not vote for the bill in its present form.

After considerable discussion the conference virtually agreed to adopt such an amendment. Other amendments, which are of no material effect, were also proposed, and agreed to by the conference. Senator Baker, it was said, was satisfied with the result, and will vote for the bill in its amended form.

WILD ASTERS.

How They Took the Place of Orange Blossoms.

It was a very charming little [illegible], and Sadie had wanted such a [illegible] for a long time. When she discovered it on her dressing table her birthday morning it pleased her more than all her other presents combined, though some were more valuable.

Later in the day she said to her mother:

"Now, mother, you know—and if you don't, I do—that the very first time I carry this bag I'd leave it somewhere as sure as fate."

"Yes, but Sadie, you would [illegible] be more careful."

"Very true, mother, but then I'm not and I never shall be, I very much fear."

"Perhaps if you lose this it will be a lesson you will remember."

"But I don't intend to lose it, even if I do leave it, for I mean to have my full name engraved on the silver plate, instead of simply initials."

She had it engraved that afternoon, and displaying it to [illegible], said:

"There, mother, see that! Now [illegible] may read: 'Sadie M. Farnham, [illegible], Mass.'"

[illegible]

[illegible]

Then Harry's eye happened [illegible] "Miss Sadie M. Farnham, [illegible]," [illegible]

"The idea! I kept the plate out of [illegible] all the way, but I left it on the seat [illegible]"

"It's wonderful to me," said Harry, [illegible]

Autumn passed, and early summer. [illegible] in care of her father. The box, opened, was found to contain a beautiful [illegible] the dainty sprays of asters, [illegible] Mrs. Cranstone. Later came a very charming letter from the lady, begging Sadie's acceptance of the gift.

All the young readers are saying: "Why doesn't she hurry up and tell when Mr. Cranstone came to see Sadie, made love and was accepted?"

My dear girls, I leave you to imagine that part, and I will simply tell you that Mr. C. came up with Charlie Livingston in the winter, and when the asters bloomed again, there was a quiet wedding, in which Sadie Farnham and George Cranstone were central figures.

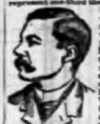
And the bride wore asters instead of orange blossoms—how odd!—Anabel C. Andrews, in Woman's Magazine.

NEW LEGISLATORS.

Men New in Congress Who Are Likely to Become Active Members of That Body.

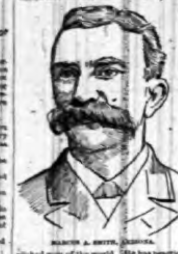
[Special Washington Correspondence.]

Eight men sitting in the Fiftieth Congress represent one-third the area of the United States or 950,000 square miles of territory. Through them the Mexican population of New Mexico and Arizona; the sturdy blue-shirted lumbermen of Washington Territory; the rustling, hardy cowboys of Wyoming; the thrifty, industrious and calculating Mormons of Utah; the brave, enterprising and prosperous people of Dakota, and the bonanza miners of Montana and Idaho have a voice in the affairs of the Nation.



FRED T. DUBOIS, IDAHO.

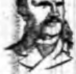
Mr. Marcus A. Smith represents the Territory of Arizona—a young Kentuckian, thirty-seven years old, a graduate of Lexington law school, and a bright, accomplished man of the world. He has practiced law in Kentucky, California and several other States and Territories, and now lives at Tombstone.



MARCUS A. SMITH, ARIZONA.

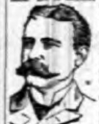
Dakota's representative is Judge Oscar S. Gifford, who will undoubtedly be one of South Dakota's Senators as soon as that Territory becomes a State. He represents 82,000 people, a larger constituency than any other man ever had in Congress.

Idaho's representative, Fred T. Dubois, is a Yale College graduate. He was secretary of the Illinois Board of Railway and Warehouse Commissioners in 1875-78. He went to Idaho in 1880, and was for four years United States Marshal of the Territory. He is thirty-seven years old.



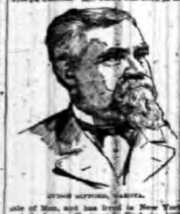
JOHN T. CAINE, UTAH.

Major Joseph K. Toole represents Montana. He is another Kentuckian, thirty-seven years old. He was educated at the Western Military Academy at New Castle, of which J. Kirby Smith was principal. Mr. Toole is a fine lawyer, and has been prominent in the Congress. New Mexico's delegate in Congress is Antonio Joseph. He is a pure Castilian and is a prosperous business man and banker. He was born at Taos, N. M., in 1846, and educated there.



C. S. VOORHEES, WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

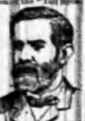
John T. Caine represents Utah, being the successor of that well-known Mormon, Joseph Cannon. Mr. Caine was born in the Isle of Man, and has lived in New York and St. Louis. He went to Utah in 1852. He founded the Salt Lake Herald in 1870 and has been in Congress since 1882.



JUDGE GIFFORD, DAKOTA.

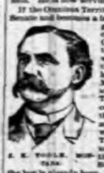
The delegate from Washington Territory is C. S. Voorhees, the son of the "Tall Sycamore of the Wabash," the Senator from Indiana. Mr. Voorhees is a graduate of Georgetown College and a prosperous lawyer. He is an able speaker and an influential Congressman.

Joseph M. Carey is Wyoming's delegate, a big, strong, hearty looking man, who has made a good deal of money in stock raising. He is often compared in appearance to President Garfield. He is now serving his third term.



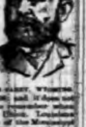
ANTONIO JOSEPH, NEW MEXICO.

If the Omnibus Territorial bill passes the Senate and becomes a law, several of these gentlemen will become full-fledged Congressmen, having the right to vote as well as debate. By that bill South Dakota, North Dakota, Montana, New Mexico and Washington Territory will become States within the next twelve month, and there will be left but three Territories. It will not be long before these will become States, and probably the boy is already born, who, at the age of twenty-one, will be able to vote for President of the United States anywhere throughout this broad land.



J. K. TOOLE, MONTANA.

Three-fourths of the men now in Congress can remember how they could count on the fingers of one hand all the States west of the Mississippi river when they were boys and went to school. The man of forty-six remembers easily when California was made a State; the man of fifty can remember when Texas and Iowa were admitted; the man of sixty has no difficulty in remembering when Arkansas became a State, in 1836; and it does not need an octogenarian to remember when Missouri came into the Union. Louisiana was the first State west of the Mississippi to enter the Union, and she was admitted in 1812. There are now twelve States west of the Father of Waters. [illegible]



J. M. CAREY, WYOMING.

CABANEL.

The Famous French Artist Recently Deceased—Something About His Life and Career.

Alexandre Cabanel, the famous French artist, is dead. He was hardly less famous as a teacher than as an artist. His father died when he was two years old and the family was left in poverty. From his earliest years he was given to drawing and painting. In 1845, at the age of twenty-two, he won the grand prize of Rome by his picture of "Christ in the Prætorium." Two pictures exhibited in the salon of 1855, "The Preaching of St. John the Baptist," and "The Death of Moses," attracted great attention. His first picture, painted when he was eighteen, was bought by the native city of Montpellier. It represents Christ on the Mount of Olives. The prize of Rome entitled him to residence as a student in Rome. While there he made great progress in his art.

One of his most intimate friends at that time was Mr. Sartoris, the husband of Adelaide Kemble and the protector and relative of Nellie Grant. His most important picture in this country is "The Death of Moses," in the Corcoran gallery at Washington. He was most successful as a portrait painter and had the audacity to paint Napoleon III. in the dress of every-day life, which greatly provoked the critics. At the same time that this portrait was exhibited in the salon one of his earliest American portraits also attracted attention. The original of this was the Countess de [illegible], formerly Miss Ridgeway, of Philadelphia. These portraits won him the medal of honor.

When the Empress Eugenie fled from Paris she carried with her the much-prized portrait of the Emperor. Many of his pictures were bought by Americans, among whom he was well appreciated. Mr. Mackay owns his "Rebecca at the Well" and the "Marriage of Toto." His "Boniface and Aglae" are owned in Cincinnati. His "Birth of Venus" belongs to Mr. Gibson, of Philadelphia. His "Salamite" hangs in the Metropolitan Museum in New York. Mrs. Leiter, of Washington, owns his "Insomnia of Phedre." For twenty-five years Cabanel was the favorite teacher of American artists. He was one of the first professors in the Ecole Des Beaux Arts to introduce life classes.

The doctor catches it. As a general thing doctors get more insults than money. They require a large pocket for the insults and a small one for the fees. Of course, there are members of the profession, young doctors, generally, who snatch people from the grave—after they are dead and buried—and explore their inner works in the interest of science. At the same time, the man who sends the doctor a valentine is the one who has to be sued for medical attendance. He is the man who never carries but one cigar with him, and who, when called on to subscribe to the Grant monument says Grant needs no monument, that he already has a monument in the hearts of the people.

The old maid is reminded of her isolated condition and the utter hopelessness of her expecting to capture a husband, although the Bible assures that Naomi was only five hundred and eighty years old when she donned the orange blossoms. The fact that it is much better to be an old maid than to get up at one o'clock five or six times a week to shove a drunken husband up several flights of stairs, is not taken into consideration. Very likely the man who mails the old maid a valentine was jilted by her, and now being married knows perfectly well how to manage his wife—if she would only let him.

He Tumbled.

"Look here, captain," began the prisoner who had passed a couple of days in a cell at headquarters, "I want some information!"

"About what?"

"Why don't you provide these cells with beds, carpets, rocking-chairs and other comfortable things, so as to make a prisoner's stay pleasant?"

"Why didn't you go to a first-class hotel instead of coming here?" queried the captain in reply.

"Ah! I see. I tumble. Nuff ced. It all depended on me, and I skipped the tra-la-la."—Detroit Free Press.

Wanted His Share Unconsumed.

Uncle John—You know, my boy, that every one of these advances is charged against the amount I intend willing you. At the rate you're going on, there soon will be nothing left.

My Boy—Well, uncle, you can't blame me for wanting to have a little of it myself before the lawyers get hold of it.—Puck.

A Valuable Suggestion.

Mrs. Smith—When John and I were married he stayed at home every night during the first year, but since that time he is never at home except for his meals. Can you suggest any plan by which I can induce him to stay at home?

Mrs. Jones—Employ a pretty servant girl.—Arcola Record.

There is a great deal of power attached to Sullivan's left, but if John L. keeps on drinking prior to his fight with Kilrain, Sullivan's left for certain.

ABOUT OLD MAIDS.

An Article Calculated to Make Them Satisfied with Their Lot in Life.

There are few people that have not looked into the dictionary especially who know how the term "spinster" originated. We often find it in Shakespeare and other of the English classics, but it is used to define the spinner. This is its specific meaning. Its general significance is wider. There was an old practice in the years agone, that a woman should never be married until she had spun herself a set of body, table and bed linen. It is not difficult to see, says the Detroit Free Press, how easily the term became applicable to all unmarried women and finally became a law term and fixed. It is not the fashion among lawyers nowadays to specify the maiden by the word "spinster." "Single woman" is the phrase employed in its place, and, perhaps, with more satisfaction, because there is something about the spinster which is objectionable. It is associated with acerbity, wrinkles, moroseness and general disagreeableness. The term "spinster" is decidedly objectionable to an unmarried woman. It occupies a close position to "old maid," which is certainly and always resented with scorn and oftentimes indignation.

Really, there is nothing reproachful in the term old maid, provided, of course, the maiden lady is well on in years. To call any woman old when her face is not puckered up into a lot of wrinkles, when her eyes are bright, her figure erect and her step elastic is an unpardonable sin. But the term fills the bill. Around the word "maiden" cluster most of the fancies, and recollections of youth. To apply the term maid to an elderly spinster would be a misapplication, because in the abstract a maiden is to the average mind a combination of beauty, blithesomeness, buoyancy and youth. Hence, if the term maid is to be used in connection with one well on in years, the adjectival qualificator "old" must be employed to note the distinction in age.

It is unfortunate that there should be so great a horror felt on the part of unmarried women toward the epithet—"old maid." There is this to be said of the old maid: She has an individuality of her own. She has a place which is vital. It is symmetrical. She does not hide her light under the bushel of matrimony. She is not absorbed into another's legal existence. In fact, she has just as much personality as any man. Everything in this world is based upon the law of compensation. And in this fact may be found the compensation for the unmarried woman. If she has property she can do with it as she pleases without consulting a man, who possibly may be stubborn, or selfish, or mean. If she has no property, but has to work for her living, she is not compelled to spend a portion of it on a husband who is too lazy to work; or, if he is able and willing to work, is not able to earn enough to support two in reasonable comfort. These are compensations which are not without great value.

In the mind of every one that has a kindly nature the unmarried woman of mature years is clothed in peculiarly bright attributes. True, there are some mature maidens whose minds are so contorted that to them the world is turned upside down and every man, woman and child is their particular enemy. But these are exceptions, and it has often been said that the exceptions prove the rule. Not long ago a woman killed herself because, as she confessed in an ante-mortem letter, she had not the courage to be an old maid. This woman was one of the foolish virgins. The old maid becomes in many cases a hallowed character. Her poor and kindly face, unmarked by a single selfish impression, is significant of the struggle that has been carried on within and the final triumph of spirit over matter. It takes a great deal of courage to stifle the aspirations of womanhood, to banish the dreams of youth and to settle down to the life of self-abnegation and sacrifice which maidenhood imposes. The maternal longing is strong in the breast of every woman. Nature has implanted it there. She who is without it is not worthy the name of woman. And in extinguishing this longing there is a great burden of sacrifice. But this has its reward, too. There shines out of the eyes of nearly every unmarried woman who has reached "the old maid" period a light which speaks of gentleness and perfect serenity within. There are few old maids who, if they originally had lovable characters, are not really beloved by a wide circle of friends. She is more than esteemed. She is loved by every one that knows her. And, better than that, every one is ready and willing to show her those little courtesies and attentions which are so prized by all womankind. There seems to be a desire on the part of every thoughtful member of society to contribute as much as possible to the comfort and happiness of the old maid.

There was a time when the woman who was forced to live a single life was looked upon with a sort of pity. But that time has passed away. Spinsterhood is not now looked upon as discreditable. How can it be, when there are so many beautiful, charming and lovable women, not to say heiresses, who are included in its ranks? Some women remain old maids from choice. Some are old maids because they are true to the idols of other days. Some because they are fearful of the quicksands of matrimony. Others because their ideal has not yet come to them. The reasons in each one of these instances is not only creditable but honorable. Some one has said that every woman, whether she be ugly or beautiful, deformed or symmetrical, has at some time in her life a chance to marry. Society should honor the beautiful and lovable woman who, rather than throw herself away upon an unworthy object, so respects herself, and her sex that she prefers the single life. And what praise is enough for that woman's true heart whose life, on her own motion, is bereft of maternal joys and blessings because her affections are true to one that is no more! In whatever light we look at the old maid she appears to good advantage. Society honors its spinsters provided they have the character to win esteem and confidence. The old maid is a distinct institution of society. And it is not easy to imagine how society could fill her place.

Bow and Arrow Duel.

A duel was fought in Paris the other day in which those old-fashioned weapons, the bow and arrow, were employed. The principals were each given a six-foot bow and a quiver full of steel headed arrows. Then the seconds fled. Shooting began at will. After several shots had been exchanged one of the combatants started to run and the other chased him, shooting as he ran. The first fighter climbed a tree and the victor shot arrows among the branches until his stock was exhausted and then went quietly home to breakfast. The man in the tree was pretty badly wounded, but will recover. The fight, as usual, was about a woman.

At the Shoe Counter.

Salesman—"That's a perfect fit, lady." Shopper—"Yes, they feel quite comfortable (slips off shoes and looks at sole). Mercy they are a mile too big! Why, they are 5's, and I never wear any thing larger than 3's." Salesman—"Those are 3's, lady, but you see there's been such a demand for them we've been obliged to mark them up." Shopper—"Oh! Well, I guess I'll take them. I thought they couldn't be 5's."

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Cabinet Homes—Vice-President Morton and Mr. Blaine Have Selected Houses in the Capital City—Where Other Members of the Cabinet Will Reside.

[Special Correspondence.]

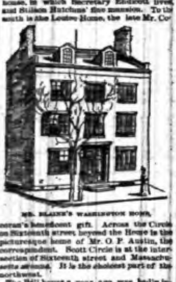
It is not only the politicians who are interested in the news from Indianapolis about the selection of the Cabinet. Society in Washington is all agog over the matter. To the future of a society woman in Washington, the choice of this man or that for the Cabinet is a matter of the highest importance. It may make or mar her happiness for the next four years. If by any chance the husband of a particular friend of hers gets into the Cabinet it insures to her prominence and an opportunity to be seen, to be courted and to display her charms in very fine dressing. It also brings into her following many friends who want to be in the center of observation.

It is also a matter of some importance whereabouts in the city these various new Cabinet Ministers are to live. Their homes become centers of fashion and social display. If a Cabinet Minister selects his house in a neighborhood that hitherto has been rather dull and prosy it very quickly stirs the whole region into life. Houses that have been empty are very soon occupied by prominent people.

Vacant lots that have been only a resting place for tin cans and beef bones suddenly have a very decided value in the eyes of the intending purchasers, and before long contractors are at work excavating and laying brick, and a beautiful new house arises. In spite of the fact that for years this has been going on, that houses have been built in all parts of the city, as it would seem, clear beyond all necessity, rents still keep up to higher prices than ever, and the demand for good houses is beyond the supply.

As far as General Harrison's Cabinet is now concerned, nothing can be said with any certainty. Speculating minds in Washington society are trying to tell where the next centers of social crystallization are to be. But three new society centers are known. Vice-President Morton has taken the house of Prof. Bell, of telephone fame, on Scott Circle. This is one of the finest mansions in the city. It stands on a little triangular lot, and so has light on all sides.

The outlook to the west is upon Scott Circle. To the north is Don Cameron's old house, the Windom house, the Pendleton house, in which Secretary Endicott lives, and Stilson Hutchins' fine mansion. To the south is the Louise Home, the late Mr. Corcoran's beneficent gift. Across the Circle on Sixteenth street beyond the Home is the picturesque home of Mr. O. P. Austin, the correspondent. Scott Circle is at the intersection of Sixteenth street and Massachusetts avenue. It is the choicest part of the northwest.



MR. BLAINE'S WASHINGTON HOME.

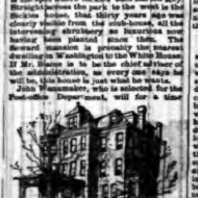
The Bell house a year ago was badly injured in the upper story by fire, but this has been thoroughly repaired by Prof. Bell. It is one of the largest, most spaciously arranged houses in the city.

There is a large entrance hall on the Rock Island avenue side of the house, with a grand staircase leading up to the upper floors; on the left to the laboratory, on the right to the reception room. Opening from this latter room is the parlor and drawing-room, behind which is the large dining-room which Mr. Morton will still further enlarge. The entire house is finished in hard wood, beautifully decorated. It is understood that Mr. Morton has leased this house for four years at a rental of $10,000 a year. Prof. Bell, with his beautiful wife and children, spends his summers up in Nova Scotia near Baddeck, the town that Charles Dudley Warner made famous, and when he is in Washington he makes his home out at Dupont Circle with his father-in-law, Gardner Hubbard.

Mr. Blaine has taken quarters at the Hotel Normandie, on McPherson square, built by John McLean, of the Cincinnati Enquirer. He is not satisfied with hotel life, however, never having enjoyed it, and of late has been looking about for a home. He has decided to take the Seward mansion on Lafayette square. This old house has been occupied for a number of years by the office of the Commissary-General of the army. It was in this mansion that Seward lived while Secretary of State and here it was that Payne, the assassin, forced his way to Seward's room and attempted to kill the old man.

The house has a rather tragic history. It used to be used as a club-house before the war. About three rods from the front door is the spot where Sickles shot Barton Key. Straight across the park to the west is the Sickles house, that thirty years ago was clearly visible from the club-house, all the intervening shrubbery so luxurious now having been planted since then. The Seward mansion is probably the nearest dwelling in Washington to the White House. If Mr. Blaine is to be the chief adviser of the administration, as every one says he will be, this house is just what he wants.

John Wanamaker, who is selected for the Post-office Department, will for a time make his home in one of the hotels, his preference being for the Arlington; but it is understood that he has been looking about for a house and has about decided that if the rental can be arranged he will take the old Riggs mansion, formerly occupied by Governor Curtin. This is in the heart of the ultra-fashionable northwest, but very far from the White House. Across the street is the block in which stands the Corcoran house, and the Adams and Hay houses, built by Richardson, the architect, which are regarded as two of the finest houses in Washington.



VICE-PRESIDENT MORTON'S HOUSE.

Warner Miller, when he was in the Senate, lived on K street, near Thirteenth, and had a beautiful outlook over Franklin Park. It is rather an able neighborhood. In the adjoining block stands the house of Garfield. Three doors away to the west is John Sherman's mansion. Mr. Miller, if he goes into the Cabinet as Postmaster-General, will prefer to live in this neighborhood again, his wife having become much attached to it, and doubtless he will find a house somewhere in this locality.

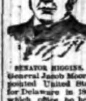
The house of a Cabinet officer is like the White House with the President—to some extent his office. Business will seek him at his home; he is nowhere free from it. Correspondents have always the privilege to pull the door-bell. But his home is especially important from a social point of view. The social obligations resting upon the wife of a Cabinet Minister are very burdensome, and, as a matter of fact, it is the social side of Cabinet life that causes a large part of the great expense following upon a Cabinet Minister.

J. A. TRUESDELL.

ANTHONY HIGGINS.

The New United States Senator from Delaware.

Anthony Higgins, the first Republican United States Senator from Delaware, was born in Red Lion Hundred, New Castle County, that State, on October 1, 1840. He entered upon a five years' course at Newark Academy and Delaware College at the age of thirteen, and in the autumn of 1858 entered Yale College, from which he was graduated in 1861 with the degree of A. B. During the two succeeding years he attended the Harvard Law School. He read law under William C. Spruance in Wilmington, and was admitted to the New Castle County bar in May, 1864. In September, 1864, he entered into partnership with Edward G. Bradford, of Wilmington, who was afterward appointed United States District Judge of Delaware. About the same time Mr. Higgins was appointed Deputy Attorney-General for Delaware under Attorney-General Jacob Moore. Mr. Higgins was appointed United States District Attorney for Delaware in 1869 by President Grant, which office he held until 1876, and since then has devoted himself exclusively to his large clientage.



SENATOR HIGGINS.

The Senator-elect's first appearance in politics was in 1863, when he championed the cause of Nathaniel B. Smithers, the Union Republican candidate for Congress. Mr. Smithers was elected, and during that campaign Mr. Higgins attracted general attention by his brilliant oratory. Mr. Smithers was also a candidate in the late Senatorial race, and ran well notwithstanding his fourscore years.

The most notable achievement of Mr. Higgins at the bar was his successful defense of William Neal, a negro ravisher, in 1881. Neal had been convicted and sentenced to be hanged, but his counsel appealed the case to the United States Supreme Court on the ground that no colored men were allowed to serve on Delaware juries, and thereby won a reversal and new trial. Neal was subsequently acquitted. The case attracted wide-spread attention at the time.

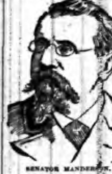
Mr. Higgins is a man of pleasant address. He resides at 806 Market street, in Wilmington, which is directly opposite to the residence of his colleague, Senator Gray. The Senator-elect is a bachelor, and his sister is mistress of his home.

He will succeed Eli Saulsbury in the Upper House of Congress, the latter having represented Delaware for eighteen successive years. After the 4th of next March, Delaware, for the first time since 1853, will be represented in the Senate by a person who is not a Bayard nor a Saulsbury, or who is in any way affiliated with either dynasty. In religious belief the Senator-elect is a Presbyterian.

MANDERSON.

He Is Returned to the United States Senate by the Nebraska Legislature.

Senator Manderson has been re-elected by the Legislature of Nebraska, an honor which he very justly deserves. Among his fellow Senators he is known as the Baby General, he entered the Union army when he was twenty-two years old, and when he was twenty-five was appointed Brigadier-General for long-continued and meritorious service during the war of the rebellion. At the battle of Shiloh he was Colonel of his regiment, the Nineteenth Ohio. He was in the campaign under General McClellan in West Virginia in 1861. In 1864 he was very badly wounded, so that in the following April, just as the war closed, he was obliged to resign.



SENATOR MANDERSON.

He was born in Philadelphia. At the age of nineteen he went West to grow up with the country, setting up at Canton, O. He practiced law at this place after the war. In 1869 he removed to Omaha, where he has since lived. He was elected to the Senate to succeed Alvin Saunders, and by his acceptable services fairly earned his re-election. He is regarded as a very safe and able lawyer, and in the Senate has proved himself a strong debater and a faithful, hard-working committee man.

NEGROES AS SOLDIERS.

General Lord Wolseley Pays the Africans a High Compliment.

I do not think Europeans learn drill as quickly as the Basuto or the Zulu. It is astonishing to see the zeal, the undisguised interest and application those savages bring to bear upon all military lessons given to them, writes Lord Wolseley in the Fortnightly Review. They take the utmost pride in being soldiers and in acquiring any art or drill or exercise connected with the management and handling of arms, or the movement of armed bodies. There seems to be something in the disposition and genius of the common stock from which they come, some hereditary bias in their brain, in their very blood, which fits them for the easy acquisition of a soldier's duties. And yet many of these races who thus quickly acquire an excellence in drill, etc., can not be taught any mechanical handicraft; indeed, many can never even learn to draw a straight line.

The African in our West India regiments has always displayed the child-like affection for and implicit reliance upon the officers who treated him well, which is so marked a feature in the character of the negro slave. His obedience to orders, especially when a sentry, was remarkable. Many amusing stories on this point were current at Government House when I was at Cape Coast Castle. A previous Governor, finding that his native servants were given to robbing him by daily carrying away bundles of things from his kitchen, had orders given to the sentry before his door that no one was to be allowed out carrying any parcel with him. Very shortly afterward the Governor, in a hurry to consult his Chief Justice, put some papers into a dispatch-box to take with him to the Judge's house. He sallied forth without his hat, however, for the sentry, standing in front of him with bayonet at the charge, would not allow him to pass with the offending dispatch-box. The Governor remonstrated, and urged that it was he himself who had given the order, but all to no purpose, for in the quaint and amusing gibberish which those men speak, and emphasizing his words in a very determined fashion with his bayonet, the sentry said that his "copral" had told him not to allow any one with a bundle to pass, and the "copral's" order was his law.

Nicolini and Adelina Patti.

Sig. Nicolini does nothing with his wife, says a Paris letter to the New York Tribune. He is her devoted care-taker. He watches to protect her from drafts the instant she quits the stage, watches that she does not talk between the acts after the carmine is laid on her lips, keeps intrusive bores away, and is attentive to all those whom she wishes to treat as friends. If her throat is parched he drops water down it so that no red paint will be swallowed with it. He sees that the water which is to wash off the face pigments is the right heat and oversees the make-up operations, and all this quietly, affectionately and without fuss. If Mme. Patti were in the hands of an old stager she could not be more tenderly used. When her gratitude wells over she stands up, takes her husband by the hand, and lowers her head, the top of which he kisses, the face not being in a state to be kissed. He does not strike one, he is so unassuming and untheatrical, as being the husband of a star or a professional tenor.

They Were a Host.

When Gambetta came into power he was much annoyed by being obliged to recognize many of his former associates who were rather of an unsavory character.

One morning after taking breakfast with a rather mixed crowd, a prominent official on taking his leave could not refrain from whispering to his host:

"Do you know that I almost imagined myself in the cave of Ali Baba with his forty robbers."

"Forty!" ejaculated Gambetta, with upturned eyes; "would to Heaven there were only forty!"—Texas Siftings.

Love Confessed

MY WIFE looked o'er a valentine,
And did not know that I was near;
She read it over line by line—
I could not help but hear.

What was it made my pulses stir,
And lit the lights of days long dead?
'Twas one that I had sent to her
The year before we wed.

'Twas full of young love's fondest terms,
Without regard to rhyme or sense;
Possession dulled and planted germs
Of mild indifference.

I listened to the words I heard,
While shame surprised me with its dart—
'Twas long since I had breathed a word
Of love to that true heart.

Then noiselessly I stepped behind
Her chair, and heard a sob of pain.
My heart cried out: "I have been blind!"
And love awoke again.

I drew her gently to my breast—
I soothed her, kissed her, called her mine
And all the love once more confessed
Told in that valentine.

"DE OLE BANJO."

An Instrument of Humble Ancestry That Is Winning a Proud Eminence.

That much-abused instrument, the banjo, for years identified with the plantation negro and the burnt-cork commedian, has recently sprung into popular favor, says the Chicago News, and is now found in nearly every high-toned residence. Although it is the typical American instrument the banjo, or an instrument similar to it, has been used from time immemorial. It was popular with the Greeks, especially at the Bacchanalian feasts, and they speak of it as being the most common stringed instrument among the Egyptians. Indeed, it is not at all unlikely that its strains were added to the sensuous music in the court of Cleopatra, or that she herself fingered the resonant strings. The Chinese and Japanese have an instrument similar to it covered with gazelle skin, and even the African bushman has a rude banjo-like affair, with which he whiles away the idle hours. The negroes first played or "thumped" the banjo with a thimble worn on the first finger, but the artist of to-day uses all the fingers, the same as in playing the guitar.

THE BANJO AS SHE IS PLAYED.

Teachers who formerly gave instruction on the guitar alone now find it necessary to teach the banjo as well, ladies especially demanding that a knowledge of its use be numbered among their accomplishments. In the hands of a skillful artist almost anything can be played upon it, and the most difficult overtures and fantasies find places upon the programme in banjo concerts along with negro melodies and lively airs. In fact, banjo-playing is quite the "fad," and many of the most prominent society people are adepts at fingering the strings. Among those might be mentioned Lady Randolph Churchill, Lady Manderville, Fred Vanderbilt, Arthur Claflin, Alan Arthur, son of the late President Arthur, Mrs. Hammersly, the Czar of Russia, the Prince of Wales, and Lord Dufferin. Mrs Langtry, Mrs. James Brown-Potter, and Kate Claxton are among the actresses who take delight in playing the humble instrument, and Christine Nilsson, Clara Louise Kellogg, Patti and Lotta sometimes while away leisure hours over the strings.

AT THE OAKS CLUB.

Chicago has many good players among its society people: Miss Florence Fuller, daughter of the Chief Justice; Phil Armour, Jr., Frank Avery, Miss Kittie Southard, Miss Wheeler, Mr. Charles Ritter, Miss Maud Osgood, Mr. Charles E. Rector, Mr. J. Geltmacher, Mr. J. R. Greenebaum, Miss Maud Hammer, Mr. Charles V. Whaley, Mrs. W. S. McCrea and Miss Lena Harrison all play very creditably. There are, however, very few clubs, the J. O. S., of the Farragut Boat Club being the only one that is well known. It has twelve members and will give a number of concerts during the winter. Of teachers there are many in the city, and some are true artists, who can play the instrument with such a delicacy of touch and feeling as to bring the tears to the eyes as they wake the fancy with the tender strains of "Home, Sweet Home," or glide into Mendelssohn's "Songs Without Words." Among those well known in the profession here are William S. Baxter, J. L. Robinson, Harry Keith, T. Reamer and R. B. Allen.

Keeping pace with the strides that have been made in banjo-playing is banjo-making.

The best instruments now used are made with a maple shell about which a nickel or German silver covered brass sheet is spun and bound at each edge with a heavy wire. The head is a most important part and is made of calfskin drawn very tight by from twenty-four to thirty bolts. The neck is made of walnut or mahogany, the latter preferred, and the finger-board and scale should be of ebony, with raised frets. In the old-fashioned instrument, which the minstrel "ping-panged" with eyes shut and mouth open, no frets were used, as he was supposed to be able to get near enough to the desired note without any such mechanical aid.

One of the largest banjo factories in the country is in this city, and turns out 700 instruments each month. The prices vary greatly. Ten dollars will buy a banjo and $20 a good one. But many are valued as high as $75, and now and then a highly-ornamental instrument made to special order, of the finest workmanship and best material, costs $200.

A 'GA SWEETHEART.

On the West side is a banjo-shop of the old style, where the "twang-twang-twang" instrument that delights the gallery gods is manufactured, and the manufacturer gives lessons to the aspirant for burnt-cork fame. The pupil is usually satisfied with knowing a half-dozen airs, and when he can thump out "Suwanee River" and "I Owe Ten Dollars to O'Grady" he feels that his musical education is complete and at once enters upon an engagement in a ten-cent minstrel troupe as a "celebrated comedian."

PROF. GEFFCKEN.

A Prominent Politician and Educator—Brief Sketch of His Life and Career.

Prof. Geffcken, whose controversy with Bismarck has given him a universal celebrity, was born in Hamburg, fifty-eight years ago last December. He comes of one of the old and rich patrician families who for centuries have been leaders in commerce. At the age of twenty-four Prof. Geffcken began a career of diplomacy, commencing as Secretary of Legation with the Hanseatic mission at Paris. In 1855 he became the commissioner for Hamburg at the Universal exhibition. The following year he was charge d'affaires at Berlin, and three years later he became Minister resident.

He remained there until, with his rare discernment, he foresaw the confederation of all Germany impending after the Franco-Prussian war, and he demanded his transfer as envoy to London. His career there was brief but gay. Hamburg soon abdicated its independence, and Prof. Geffcken quit the diplomatic service. In 1872 he became professor of international law in the University of Strasburg. From that time on he has been prominent as one of the liberal thinkers of Germany, his philosophy leading him to a very thorough appreciation of all things English. Anglo-Saxon law, he says, is the foundation of modern society.

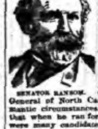
PROF. GEFFCKEN.

He has published a number of works in the range of diplomatic and political literature, among them a "History of the Alabama Question," published in 1872; his "History of the Eastern Question," in '81; and since then have followed a book of political essays, another on "Socialism," and another on the "Reform of the German Tariff." He is the father of a family and has two daughters, one of whom is the wife of a Senator from Hamburg. The other is the wife of a prominent official in Hanover.

SENATOR RANSOM.

His Re-Election to the United States Senate for the Fourth Time.

Senator Ransom, of North Carolina, has been elected to the United States Senate for the fourth time, his first election having occurred in 1872, when he was the first Democratic Senator from the South to take the place of a carpet-bagger. He was born in North Carolina and is sixty-three years old. He received his education in the Tar Heel State, graduating from the University of North Carolina at the age of twenty-one. He was admitted to the bar the same year. Five years later he was elected Attorney-General of North Carolina under most romantic circumstances. The story is told that when he ran for this high office there were many candidates, several of whom were also suitors for the hand of Miss Exum, the belle of the Roanoke valley.



SENATOR RANSOM.

The Senator was then a Whig, one of the true blues of the "Tar State." It was noised about that Miss Hattie would not accept his proffer of marriage if he were defeated. The Whigs and Democrats, who recognized in him one of the most popular young men in the State vied with each other in giving him their support. When the returns were counted Ransom was elected by an almost unanimous vote, and the accomplished daughter of Roanoke became the wife of North Carolina's favorite son. He was a member of the North Carolina Legislature for a number of years. His voice and influence were in favor of peace when the war broke out, but he went with his State and rose to the rank of Major-General in the Confederate army, being with the surrendered at Appomattox.

COMEDIAN ROLAND REED says he is fond of perusing novels when at sea, because he can roll and read.

AN INDIAN WEDDING.

How a Converted Sioux Couple Were Married at a Western Agency.

On we went, until quite abruptly we came upon a grove of trees, in the midst of which, following a winding path, we found the little chapel, writes Rosa T. Shelton in Chicago Advance. Small and rude in many ways, it had a quiet dignity, and we felt a solemnity as we approached it, listening to its bell which so regularly called from their sun and stone worship the Indian "children of the prairie." Inside the fading light came softly through the stained-glass windows, scarcely penetrating; making silhouettes of the faces, dark even in the sunlight.

Gradually our eyes became accustomed to the dim light, and we discovered a venerable Indian in his kindly way beckoning us forward to seats of honor just before the chancel. Indians are always kindly in their feelings toward those white men whom they can trust; warm-hearted and true are they to those whom they can prove their friends; more often is the smile seen than the frown, and only after bitter wrong does the cruel, savage part of their nature show itself. Treacherous they are not; suspicious, the white man has made them. Their true character is much distorted by us Eastern people, until we have lived among them.

Poor as was the little mission church, it still possessed a simple, embroidered altar-cloth, and the rector's chair was one of those made only for holy places. Gas was not known here, and wax candles were too costly, so the altar was lighted with simple kerosene, sending out feeble rays over the wooden benches below. A small cabinet organ stood at one side of the altar, but the wedding march would seem out of place at the simple Indian marriage, and was fittingly left out. Through those windows, which were open, tree boughs bent, and rustled, and mosquitoes innumerable entered unforbidden. But what more suitable at a marriage of Nature's children, than that all nature, animate and inanimate, should lend a presence there.

The church gradually filled. Indian squaws with babies predominated in the audience. The sad-faced rector, in gown and surplice, entered with book in hand. The hour arrived, but the bride was late. The father of the bride came, leading a little boy, followed by the mother and three small children. The father wore his citizen's dress, with a handkerchief knotted around his neck; the mother came in her shawl, the most important detail of an Indian woman's dress.

After a dead silence, broken frequently by the noise of babies and dogs outside, there sounded at the door a shuffling of heavy boots, unlike the soft, soundless steps of Indian feet in moccasins, and Winona and Chaka walked to the altar, side by side, but out of step and out of time, followed by bridesmaid and groomsman in like manner.

Winona was not yet sixteen years old, and like that of all Indian girls, her coiffure was simple. I mention that first since I noticed it first. The hair hung in a single braid over her shoulders, tied with a red ribbon in school-girl fashion. Her dress was short, of some dark stuff, the only adornment being a broad cotton lace collar around her neck. She wore a brown straw sailor hat and this completed her costume. The groom was dressed in ordinary citizen's clothes, a little the worse for wear.

They stood in bashful reverence while the rector stepped forward and read in the musical Dakota language the marriage ceremony. The responses were low and soft, almost indistinguishable even to us who were nearest.

A sadness came over me as I watched the girl-bride, for these Indian girls who marry while yet children so soon become old, wrinkled and haggard with hard work, when they should be strong and vigorous, in the prime of womanhood. And they are so ill prepared for the life awaiting them—no experience, no thought beyond the present! Yet this was a marriage of love, unlike the contracts made so often by the parents, in which those most concerned have no voice at all.

As they knelt in simple style for the heavenly benediction, even the dogs were silent, and the babies stopped crying; and quietly, side by side, they went out into the night—husband and wife.

It was a beautiful wedding because of its simplicity, and the lack of all things artificial; yet there seemed to be no gayety among the people, and no rejoicing for the happy ones. This might be because Indians seldom show inner thoughts and feelings. The deepest feelings never change a muscle of a face or an expression of an eye. Yet Indians are as capable of deep emotion as white men. This is proved by those who know them best.

But there were to be festivities. Upon these we dared not intrude. Rumors of a dog-feast came to us. Dog-flesh is their richest delicacy and they say, "Why not? You eat pig! Is dog worse than pig?"

As we left the little chapel it seemed a benediction in itself. No massive pillars nor marble altar found we there; little to show man's handiwork, but standing so simple and plain, in the very heart of nature, it seemed a living thing, whispering Christ's message: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel."

NEAT NEW SCHEME.

One by Which an Artful Dodger Got Ahead of a Railroad Company.

As a New York Sun reporter stood in the crowd around the ticket office in the Old Colony depot in Boston just before the train left for the Fall River boat, a woman pushed her way to the window and said: "A ticket to New York, please." At the same moment a man hurried up, and, slapping down his money, called out also "New York." The ticket agent took in one of the bills, shot out the ticket and the change, which the man hastily scooped up and darted away into the crowd. The woman stood waiting for her ticket, seeing that her money was gone, and finally ventured to remind the agent that it was almost time for the train to start.

"I gave you your ticket and change," said the man.

"Why," said the woman, "that's what I am waiting for. You attended that man before you did me, though I got here first."

The woman was positive the agent had taken in her money, and had given her no return for it, and the agent was equally positive that he had handed [illegible]; one five-dollar bill. By this time the conversation grew heated, and the crowd was three deep, waiting for a chance at the window. The gong was almost sounding, and they grew restless as the dialogue grew more pointed and emphatic.

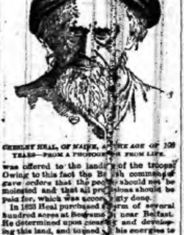
At last the ticket agent observed that the woman was crazy, to which she replied that perhaps she was, but she wanted her money and was going to have it. The matter was finally brought to an end by the woman getting a ticket shoved out to her.

The ticket-agent said later that this was a new dodge, and he wouldn't be caught that way again. The artful dodger had waited his opportunity to come to the ticket window just as the woman stepped up, and after throwing out his money to give her an impression of two bills lying on the counter, had jerked his bill back into his sleeve, seized the woman's ticket and change and made off with it, quickly losing himself in the crowd.

CHESLEY HEAL.

An American Who Lived to the Remarkable Age of One Hundred and Ten Years—Interesting Sketch of His Life and Career.

From time to time we have published, says the Scientific American, accounts of wonderful cases of longevity, and the subject of this sketch deserves such place in our gallery of centenarians. Chesley Heal was born at Westport, Maine, November 16, 1778, and died at Searsmont, Me., October 6, 1888, nearly completing the almost unprecedented term of one hundred and ten years. Of his father's family not much is known. His mother came from England at the age of fourteen years, and he had three brothers and one sister. He was married twice, and had four sons and one daughter by his first wife; none by his second. His son Isaac died during the rebellion, another died at home, another was lost on a whaling voyage, and the remaining son is still living. There are fourteen grandchildren and fourteen great-grandchildren, all living. The early part of Heal's career was a very active one. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, and served in the division stationed along the coast of Maine at Lincolnville, Northport and Belfast. He was at Belfast when the British forces under Major-General Gosselin crossed the Penobscot bay from Castine and captured the town. The English force consisted of seven hundred picked men of almost equal height, who had served under Wellington. The small American regiment was unable to cope with this force, and no opposition was offered to the landing of the troops. Owing to this fact the British commander gave orders that the people should not be molested and that all provisions should be paid for, which was accordingly done.



CHESLEY HEAL, OF MAINE, AT THE AGE OF 109 YEARS—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH FROM LIFE.

In 1823 Heal purchased a farm of several hundred acres at Searsmont, near Belfast. He determined upon clearing and developing this land, and turned all his energies to that end. He took great interest in raising cattle, and his farm was usually in a good state of cultivation. He was very frugal, very industrious, almost parsimonious in his style of living, and as he was considered a successful farmer, it was anticipated that during so long a life his accumulations would be considerable, but at his decease very little was discovered, and what has become of his wealth nobody knows. Some suspect that he buried his money, and as he never confided it to any one, his secret died with him.

He took quite an active interest in politics, and was a staunch Democrat, having voted at every election from 1800 to 1880. His first vote was cast for Thomas Jefferson. Possibly his absolutely quiet life had something to do with his longevity. He rarely left his own neighborhood, and never, it is said, traveled on a steamer or on a railroad train. He never saw any thing of the turmoil and bustle of the world, and his nerves were never disturbed. He was quite unlettered, being unable to read or write. He kept his accounts by peculiar marks on his barn door, which he alone understood. His memory was highly cultivated, owing to the constant calls made upon it on account of his being unable to read and write, and this aided him in keeping his accounts.

Physically, he was well proportioned and strongly built. He was five feet eight inches in height, and weighed normally 175 pounds. He had a full, well-developed chest. He was a great talker, and had a loud voice. His health was so perfect that during his whole life he was only once visited by a physician until his last illness. His eyesight and hearing continued unimpaired until the end. His hair did not turn gray until he had experienced the frosts of a hundred winters. He was a remarkably good sleeper, retiring usually at sunset and rising at dawn. He was a good eater, living on fresh meat during the autumn and early winter when the farmers were slaughtering, but during the summer his diet was principally salt pork cut into slices and fried. The bread on his table was made from wheat, rye, corn, barley and buckwheat from his own farm. He used tobacco nearly his whole life. He preferred to chew rather than smoke the weed. When young he was addicted to the use of spirituous liquors. He never had any mental labor of any kind, or any care or worry. A curious feature of his life is that at the age of one hundred and five he concluded to remain in-doors, and, although being quite strong and active in his movements, he did not leave the house during the last five years of his life. He did not use a cane, and at times was as active as a boy. He said he could move about the country as well as ever, and would give no reason for his voluntary seclusion. He retained his faculties to the end, and died quietly, and was buried in a field in his own farm.

It is interesting for a moment to look at the remarkable changes that have taken place during the lifetime of a single human being. Heal was born in the midst of the revolutionary war, and was nearly three years old when the surrender of Cornwallis marked the close of the struggle. He was in his nineteenth year when Washington retired from the Presidency, and during his life all the Presidents were nominated to their high offices. He was nearly fifteen when Louis XVI. was beheaded and the Reign of Terror began. He had entered on his twentieth year when Napoleon was made First Consul, and was twenty-six years old when he was elected Emperor. It was in his thirty-seventh year that the great commander was defeated at Waterloo. He lived during the period of the three French revolutions. During his life France had been three times a kingdom, three times an empire and three times a republic. He was a boy in his teens when Robert Burns was composing his lyrics, when Burke was thundering in the House of Commons and when Sir Joshua Reynolds was giving the world his great works of art. He was twenty-eight when Fulton launched the first regular steamboat, and sixty-six when Morse first brought the telegraph into practical use by sending messages between Washington and Baltimore. It was almost impossible to conceive that a single life can span such epochs in history.

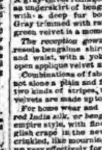
FASHION LETTER.

Reception Gowns Now an Indispensable Garment—The Latest Novelties in All Kinds of Dress Fabrics—The Sac Scarf—Fauntleroy Suits—Minor Notes.

[Special New York Correspondence.]

Now that the afternoon reception is the most frequent form of entertainment, it is necessary to have two or three gowns of rather dressy appearance that may also be used for theater or exhibition wear. The directoire is at present the most favored style, and admits of endless latitude of expenditure, or it may be of the plainest, most severe cut, according to taste and requirements. Velvet brocade, cloth, bengaline or heavy gros grain are the most popular materials for combinations, and fur is almost universal as a garniture. Young ladies are wearing light shades of gray and tan. A gray velvet redingote, a la directoire, has an underskirt of bengaline the same shade, with a deep fur border and trimming. Gray trimmed with rather a vivid shade of green velvet is a momentary fancy.



RECEPTION DRESS.

The reception gown illustrated here, is reseda bengaline shirred at the shoulders and waist, with a yoke and trimmings of open applique velvet and silver embroidery.

Combinations of fabrics are very general, not alone a plain and figured contrast, but two kinds of stripes, two brocades or two velvets are made up together.

For home wear and quiet dinner, bright red India silk, or bengaline, are made up in empire style, with fine jet trimming. English crape in the newest shades is deeply crinkled, like mourning crape, and makes up very effectively for house wear.

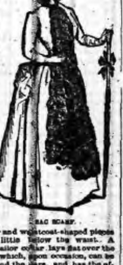
White remains in high favor. Ball, reception and dinner dresses testify to its enduring popularity. Accordion-plaited skirts of China silk are being worn by young ladies, with a full low waist and gamp of dotted or embroidered net.

Gold and silver gimps and galloons are as much used as ever, but they are of a more delicate style and less obtrusive than at their first advent.

The metal threads are artistically combined with "old" or neutral shades of silk that give an oriental appearance to the work. Beads are also seen in great profusion, but they also have undergone a refining and enriching process. The iridescent passementerie of two years ago has entirely disappeared and in its place we have very fine beads of several rich shades combined into ornaments and galloons. Velvet applique is introduced effectively and some of the handsomest embroideries are studded with fine metal and pearl beads.

Removable trains are again in fashion for reception dresses. They are either fastened at the waist by buckles or clasps, or long folds on the train are mingled with the short drapery and carried up to the waist belt.

The boa is most generally worn with evening costume for theater and opera. Ostrich feathers, marabout and Russian sable are very becoming, but those of lace seem rather more appropriate with a decollete gown. For street use the fur cape forms a part of every fashionable young woman's toilet, and is made of every variety, from sable to astrakhan. The standing collar and directoire revers and cuffs is a pretty style. The Medici collar is the newest and most practical thing in this line. A high standing collar and waistcoat-shaped pieces extending a little below the waist. A double-faced sailor collar lays flat over the the shoulders, which, upon occasion, can be turned up around the ears, and has the effect of a Medici collar. A long scarf of black lace is worn by many ladies in preference to the fur boa. (See illustration.)

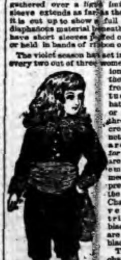


SAC SCARF.

The coat-sleeve is only seen on plain, tailor-made gowns. Not that the leg-of-mutton sleeve is universal, but something between the two. The material is slightly gathered over a tight lining, or a light sleeve extends as far as the elbow, where it is cut up to show a full sleeve of some diaphanous material beneath. Ball toilettes have short sleeves puffed on the shoulder, or held in bands of ribbon or flowers.

The violet season has set in and certainly every two out of three women in the fashionable quarter of the city have fresh violets tucked into her hat, coat or muff, or perhaps all three. White or cream velvet bonnets and toques are much worn for theater. Those are trimmed with embroidery or medallions of the prevailing color of the costume. Chartreuse-green velvet bonnets trimmed with black lace and jet are worn with black gowns.

There is little change in the style of childrens' clothes. The newest thing for boys under twelve is the Fauntleroy costume illustrated here. Dark green, blue, brown or black velvet suits with a sash of some soft contrasting silk and deep lace collar and cuffs.



FAUNTLEROY SUIT.

Lace and plaited linen jackets are much worn and give a very dressy effect to otherwise plain gowns.

THE ANIMAL KINGDOM.

Passions, Requirements and Emotions Easily Detected by Study.

The physical expressions which the animals employ to manifest their passions, requirements, distresses and emotions, are precisely similar to man's, observes a writer in Forest and Stream. They caress with their lips and limbs, show resentment by facial distortion, bites and kicks, and fear by a tremor; they leap with joy, loll with thirst, lag with fatigue, and attack for revenge and reprisal. Even fishes, with their poor deficient bodies, are able to manifest many mental operations in a manner intelligible to man as well as to each other. There is no end to authenticated instances of animal sagacity, indicating premeditation, plan, purpose, sense of duty, prudence, gratitude, method, judgment. Animals memorize. They cherish malice, they dream in their sleep, they can count, they have a sense of injustice, a consciousness of error, and notions of forgiveness and reparation. I have seen a brute of a man requite the clumsy caress of his horse by a thumping blow on the nose. His supreme intelligence did not comprehend the animal's action, forsooth. Now some men get vexed if they are not readily understood. Did the horse show temper—this noble animal whom Job represents as imbued with the spirit of the tempest? Did he even resent the outrage? Not by retaliation, although he plainly indicated his keen sense of this indignity. What may we suppose his emotions to have been at treatment so regardless and unprovoked? Yet he presently forgave all. Do not say that he forgot, for at all times afterward he shrank with apprehension when his master approached. Oh! the gentleness, forbearance and long-suffering of brutes, who ofttimes grieve in silence—speechless and unable to utter protest or complaint.

Animals meditate. Dogs have been seen to sit in a fit of abstraction, so that no one could engage their attention, and presently start off with an impetus which showed there was a mental impulse behind it. That was a keen sense of finesse displayed by the Newfoundland dog at a seaside resort when he pushed little children off the pier so that he could jump in magnanimously to the rescue, and thereby obtain the reward of a handful of candy which he anticipated the grateful parents would bestow. He repeated the trick so often that he fell into suspicion and disgrace, but his method allowed not only a conception of the efficacy of a virtuous act and its logical recompense, but the advantage of deception when successfully practiced. A crow which I know of shammed hunger habitually so as to obtain more food, which he invariably carried off and hid in a wall, and then came back for more. In this way he accumulated large hoards of provender. A certain Java sparrow was able to distinguish the click of its master's latch-key in the hall door from any other person's, and flew to meet him with demonstrations of joy as soon as he entered the house. He never made a mistake. A sagacious mastiff always pulled the door-bell when he desired to enter. A parrot in New Orleans seemed to answer questions categorically, and recognized different persons, calling them by name. The intelligence of insects is, perhaps, even more wonderful. Fishes exhibit remarkable sagacity, which has been made the theme of writers, for two thousand years.

THE STAGE VILLAIN.

An Excellent Portrait of a Long-Suffering But Patient Stage Hero.

A writer in the London Playgoer describes the stage villain as a gentleman who wears a clean color and smokes a cigarette; that is how we know he is a villain. In real life it is difficult to tell a villain from an honest man, and this gives rise to mistakes; but on the stage villains wear clean collars and smoke cigarettes, and thus all fear of blunder is avoided. He has no power of repartee. The good people in the play say rude and insulting things to him, but he never can answer them—can never think of any thing clever to say in return. "Ha, ha, wait till Monday week," is the most brilliant retort that he can make, and he has to get into a corner by himself to think of even that. His career is always easy and prosperous to within a minute of the end of each act. Then he gets suddenly let in by the comic man. It always happens so. Yet the villain is intensely surprised each time. He never seems to learn any thing from experience. A few years ago he used to be blessed with a hopeful and philosophical temperament, which enabled him to bear up under these constantly recurring disappointments. It was "no matter," he would say. Crushed for the moment, though he might be, his buoyant heart never lost courage. He had a simple, child-like faith in Providence. "A time will come," he would remark, and this idea consoled him. Of late, however, this trusting hopefulness appears to have forsaken him. We are sorry for this; we always regarded it as one of the finest traits in his character. His love for the heroine is sublime in its steadfastness. Nothing can alter his affection. She hates him, and insults him to an extent that is unladylike. Every time he attempts to explain his devotion to her the hero comes in and knocks him down, or the comic man catches him making love to her and tells the "villagers" or the "guests," and they come round and nag him. We should think that the villain must grow to positively dislike the comic man before the piece is over. Notwithstanding all this he still hankers after her and swears she shall be his. He is not a bad looking fellow, and from what we know of the market, we should say there are plenty of other girls who would jump at him; yet, for sake of settling down with this dismal young female for his wife, he is prepared to go through a laborious and exhausting course of crime and to be bullied and insulted by every one he meets. His love sustains him under it all. He robs and forges and cheats and lies and murders and arsons. If there were any other crimes he could commit to win her love he would, for her sweet sake, commit them cheerfully. But he doesn't know any others and she still does not love him, and what is he to do?

Mean But Businesslike.

The champion mean man has been found in Vermont. A young lady went into a dentist's office a few days ago and had her teeth examined, the doctor reporting them badly decayed, but by quite an outlay of money he could put them in good shape. The young lady departed, saying she would report to her husband and call again in a few days. She did so, and on her second call she was accompanied by her father, the letter telling the dentist to go ahead with the job and he would pay the bill. Thinking the dentist might wonder why he was paying the bill the father explained that the husband had said his wife's teeth decayed before he married her, and he was not going to pay for fixing them up; her father ought to do it.

CHILDREN'S CLOTHING.

Perfect Development Demands That It Should Not Be Too Tight.

Much is said in these days concerning the rights of children, but there is certainly no right to which every child is more surely entitled than that of good, sound physical health. One of the first requirements of healthful clothing is that it allow unrestrained action of every organ of the body. This is absolutely essential for perfect development so long as the body is undergoing the process of growth. According to Dress, mothers often unwittingly violate this principle in the dressing of their children by compelling them to wear clothing which they have partially outgrown, but which is not sufficiently worn to be discarded. Tight sleeves, tight bands, tight waists, etc., which have become such from the child's increased size, are certainly quite as harmful as are those purposely constructed; and added to this is the fact that the bones and muscles of the tender little ones are far more susceptible to the constriction of tight clothing than are those of persons of older growth.

The clothing of children should always be so made that it can readily be enlarged to accommodate the growing form, and should never fit so snugly as not to allow perfect freedom of movement to every organ. Whatever garments are worn about the chest and waist should always permit of an unrestrained, full inspiration, and it would be an excellent plan if mothers would frequently test the child's breathing capacity by placing a tape measure around its waist when in its night clothing, and allowing it to take a full inspiration, noting the number of inches' expansion, and then adjusting its clothing to correspond with the measure of the full inspiration, allowing one inch or two more for growth.

CROW.

There was a vigorous debate in the Maine House of Representatives a few days ago upon the dark-hued subject of Crow.

The matter came before that august assemblage of statesmen through the introduction by a farmer member of a bill authorizing the payment of ten cents bounty on the scalp of every crow killed, and instructing town treasurers to immediately destroy by fire all crows' heads deposited with them.

A warm and lengthy argument ensued. The poor crow had some defenders, but the ire of the agricultural element found vent in a terrible array of charges against him as being a pest and a plunderer, pilferer, and sneaking thief growing fat on stolen grain. The bill passed.

Like all other animate creatures the crow no doubt has a place in the economy of nature. What that exact position is we are not qualified to judge, but be what it may, we feel assured that he is in fact only a small depredator against honest industry.

There are many human crows in this country, artful and avaricious, specially privileged, but justly condemned by law, who grow proud and rich at the expense of others, and actually so upon the toilers of the soil.

Farmers would do well to watch that flock of crows.

They are all around, exacting tribute in the shape of unjust tariff taxation in a hundred different ways, and then blandly endeavoring to make the farmer believe that they are protecting him.

A black-winged crow may pick up a few grains of corn, but the bounty-grabbing crow in human form will not hesitate to carry off the farmer's pocketbook.

Gun for him and save your rightful earnings!

PATRIOTISM.

In a recent issue we spoke commendably of the noble sentiments uttered by General Sherman on behalf of rendering assistance to disabled and needy ex-Confederate soldiers.

We now have the pleasure of quoting the language of another distinguished Union Commander on the same subject.

Major-General Schofield, under date of Feb. 22, wrote thus: "The true soldier on the field, as soon as the fight is over, is ready to share his rations and his blankets with his wounded enemy. How much more readily may a generous and patriotic people relieve the necessities of those old soldiers who have long since ceased to be enemies and have become true friends and fellow citizens."

The quotation echoes the words of honor and truth and soldierly generosity.

The mistaken defenders of the Lost Cause have long ceased to be enemies, they are loyal citizens of a common country, owning allegiance to the protecting folds of one flag and ambitious for the glory and prosperity of a firmly-united Union.

Patriotism demands that with an extended friendly hand that all feelings of animosity should vanish into thin air.

So declare Generals Sherman and Schofield, and every true-hearted soldier and patriot in the land will cheerfully respond Amen!

JUDGMENT.

The Philadelphia Record remarks:

In spite of the election of Harrison and the defeat of "Free Trade," the reduction of wages continues in some of the highly protected manufactures of Pennsylvania. Had Cleveland been elected this would have been explained by the tariff croakers as the result of a Free Trade victory. What have the organs to say about these reductions? Speak up!

They speak not.

But what the Republican leaders did say during the Presidential contest is of record and will yet be answered by the people.

Their false charges in regard to Free Trade, so outrageously preferred, will come up for practical judgment.

The monopolistic idea of benefiting trade, industry and labor by perpetuating a system of taxation for the advantage of a favored few at the cost of the toiling many cannot stand the test of truth.

The Democratic party can afford to abide the result. Justice is its ally.

The Blessing of a [illegible]

The beautiful Stations of the Cross, donated to St. Mary's R. C. church by the late Virginia Lelavey Charlet, who died Feb. 13, 1888, will be blessed and arranged in the church on Friday evening, with ceremonies commencing at eight o'clock.

The fourteen stations are oil paintings selected and purchased abroad by Miss Charlet's nephew, Mons. Charles Lelavey.

"God Speed Him," but Goodness Knows How He Must Have Looked.

According to the [illegible] of Tuesday, President Harrison—whom thirty thousand drunk, sober, and insane people were shouting "God Speed" at, Monday—should have looked just too sweet.

The [illegible] says, "Mr. Harrison wore a superb gown of apricot and pale gray satin, the bodice cut low. The front was of cut velvet of the apricot shade with plaitings of pale gray on each side."

They Can Now Join the Plainfield Club.

On Tuesday evening, the Fanwood Club held its regular monthly meeting in the parlors of the Club House.

After the transaction of the routine business, the Secretary presented and read the resignations of Messrs J. B. Martine, C. C. Burnett, John A. F. Simpson, C. W. L. Martine, E. C. Kish, Wm. L. Stoddard, A. C. Horton, Geo. W. Sanders, C. E. Tool, J. W. Davis, D. E. [illegible], A. V. Kline, and Mrs. J. A. F. Simpson, and Miss Kate A. Martine, which were duly accepted.

Knocked by the Cars.

John Walkenshaw, aged about 30 years, who said that he had no home, and was on his way to Yonkers, N. Y., in search of work, had his right foot terribly mangled by the cars at the Church street crossing in this city, at 7:30 o'clock on Tuesday. He attempted to board the East bound freight train, when he fell under the cars, with the above result. John R. Lovett, one of the crew on No. 26 engine, rushed to the man's rescue and came near losing his own life. Joseph Morhan, a brakeman, assisted Lovett. Walkenshaw was taken to Muhlenberg Hospital.

Jovial and Courageous.

(From the N.Y. Star.)

Mr. Kirkner, who is one of the best-known "room traders" in the New York Stock Exchange, is a large, rather jovial man, whose physique and temperament suggest the idea that the wear and tear of Wall street life has little effect on him. He has a very large share of that aggressive courage which is necessary to one who takes large risks in a rapidly fluctuating market, and takes them, too, on the fly, as it were. He has a fine place over in New Jersey and has been State Senator for his county. Wall street, in fact, boasts of a large proportion of "honorables" among its denizens.

Another Patent to Mr. Walter Scott.

Following are the patents granted to citizens of New Jersey during the past week and reported for this paper:

W. Scott, Plainfield, printing machine; H. R. Reed, Newark, clothes-line hanging device; L. S. Chichester, Newark, water separator; J. Gibbons, Jersey City, burner; A. D. Hobbs, Bergen Point, crate; H. Holden, East Orange, sounding lead; E. R. Hull, Jersey City, fuel burner; H. Izard, Woodbury, glass tile; J. R. Palmer, Rockaway, car starter; I. Robbins, Camden, motor; W. Roemer, Newark, bag frame; E. Schill, Newark, jewelry; W. W. Smalley, Bound Brook, journal bearing; H. B. Smith, Smithville, steam tricycle; W. J. Williams, Camden, mordant.

The Methodist Conference.

The Newark Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church will convene in this city, Wednesday, April 3, and continue in session over the following Sunday. About 250 ministers are expected, and the hospitality of Plainfield will be tested.

The members of the Methodist church will not be able to entertain all of these ministers, and the friends in the other churches will do a kindness to their Methodist brethren if they will volunteer to take one or more ministers for entertainment. As the ministers always expect to have room-mates, it will be about as easy to take two ministers as one.

Those who read this, and are willing to help entertain the conference, will kindly notify the pastor, Rev. Chas. B. Mitchell. Either speak to him or drop him a postal card. All arrangements must soon be completed in order to send out notices to the ministers. Let Plainfield's hospitable homes be opened freely to these able ministers of the Gospel.

THE CUP NOT YET LOST.

The continuation of the Chess Tourney uncompleted Feb. 22, took place Monday evening, March 4, at the rooms of the Elizabeth Chess Club, when Mr. N. Hymes of Newark, who had won one game and lost none, played against Mr. R. B. Keys of this city.

Play commenced at a few minutes after 8 o'clock, with representatives from the Newark, Plainfield and Elizabeth Clubs present. Mr. C. Hymes scored for his brother and Mr. C. L. Murphy did the same for Mr. Keys. The opening was by Mr. Hymes, who started a close one, a favorite with all the Hymes brothers: P—Q 4. Mr. Keys replied with Murphy's defence against Harrwitz: B—K B 4. The game was full of vicissitudes, but after 50 moves Mr. Hymes resigned. Time of game—two hours and a half.

This narrows the contest now to a game between Mr. Pope and Mr. Keys, who have each won two and lost none, and, the then victor, with Mr. C. L. Murphy of this city, who has won three and lost none.

McCarthy—Carney.

A large audience was present in St. Mary's church, at five o'clock, afternoon Feb. 27, to witness the marriage of Mr. Daniel McCarthy and Miss Elizabeth F. Carney, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. [illegible] Carney of W. Third street. Rev. Father Stafford read the marriage service according to the prescribed rites of the Catholic church. A sister of the bride and a brother of the groom assisted in the ceremony.

The groom has been in the employ of Messrs Rogers, Peet & Co., the New York clothiers, for the past ten years, and a delegation of the employees was present at the wedding.

A reception followed at the residence of the bride's parents, at which supper was served, followed by dancing. All present seemed to feel at home, and the consequence was that everyone enjoyed themselves immensely. The newly-wedded couple left on an early train next morning to spend their honeymoon in Washington, D. C., and many were the well wishes that "Dan" and his bride might have a pleasant trip, a safe return and future happiness.

Among the guests present were the Rev. Father Connolly of New London and brother, John, of Meriden, Conn., relatives of the bride.

Among the many elegant and useful presents that the couple received, was a handsome dinner and tea set, from the employees of the wholesale department of Rogers, Peet & Co.

A BUSTED BONANZA.

The North avenue office of a firm of well-known real estate dealers and manipulators of legitimate financial speculations of all kinds, was thrown into a state of great excitement, some time ago, by the presentation of seemingly uncontrovertible evidence that petroleum was coming up out of the very ground, and floating along in paying quantities on the surface of a brook, not half a mile distant from Plainfield station and within the city's limits.

The discoverer of the find was Mr. Isaac F. Brown, of 120 Broadway, and he produced a bottle full of the stuff that he had gathered on the edges of Cedar Brook where it ran through the Martine property but a short distance from his own home. Mr. Brown had brought the evidence at once to the office of the Real Estate Trust, and sought such advice in the matter as Messrs. Frank Bacon and Wallace Vail in their experience could give him.

Experts were summoned and after the most thorough tests known, they all pronounced the find to be crude petroleum in its natural condition, just as it comes from mother earth.

Before taking any official action towards the incorporation of the Plainfield Petroleum Syndicate and Oil Trust Co., Mr. Bacon started out for a personal survey of the location of the discovery. His idea was to make a map of the territory whereon traces of the oil were visible, and to subsequently and quietly buy up all that property.

Mr. Bacon found quantities of the thick oil all about the spot where it had been first discovered. It lay in clots on the edge of the brook, and as he followed up the stream plenty more was visible. It, in fact, increased in quantity as he continued his investigation, and especially were traces of oil apparent in a little stream that flowed into the brook at South avenue near Berckman street. Leaving the brook, the explorer followed this stream up towards its source.

Then it was that patient search was rewarded with the discovery of the origin of the flow. Just outside of the Grenlock Carpet Mills was a small cess-pool into which, through an iron pipe from the building, was dripping the thick oil that overflowed and ran off down the stream and into the brook where it deposited itself along the banks. Mr. Bacon went home a wiser man, tore up the articles of incorporation and suspended for stock.

So bursted the bubble of another local bonanza. Enquiry shows that crude petroleum is used in the carpet mills for the mixing of dyes, and the waste runs off into the vat outside from whence it has to be gathered and used again.

The Hotels to Open.

All the hotel keepers in the city met Tuesday P. M., and released from bonds Messrs J. B. Miller and John E. Beerbower. Laing's Hotel and the City Hotel will reopen as "inns and taverns" only, to-morrow morning. The other hotels will probably follow suit, and again open their doors for the reception of guests.

No More Shinney in the Valley.

The possible danger of even a harmless game, was illustrated Thursday at the noon recess of the Washingtonville school. While playing at "shinney," a boy by the name of Asa Willis, struck a playmate named Eddie Compton a blow in the mouth with his stick, knocking out two of the lad's teeth and cutting his lip. Mr. Doyle, the teacher, has forbidden the continuance of the game.

Dudy's Bail Fixed at $2,000.

John Dudy, the ruffian who horribly maltreated Mrs. Kate Kennedy, in this city, last October, and who was caught in Brooklyn, whither he fled, was Feb. 27 arraigned in the Union County Court at Elizabeth, before Judge McCormick.

Dudy looked defiant when ordered to stand up, and in a loud voice pleaded not guilty. A moment later he turned deathly pale when the Judge fixed his bail at $2,000. He went back to jail.

The B. & E. Company in Earnest.

At the regular monthly meeting of Bucket and Engine Co., No. 1, of Westfield, held at their rooms on Tuesday evening, the Secretary reported having received 100 feet of new hose, making 600 feet now in use by the Company. The engine and apparatus was reported in first-class order.

A Committee of three, consisting of E. S. Brokaw, R. H. Woodruff and C. B. Clark, were appointed to revise the by-laws and have the same printed. The Company proposes to thoroughly reorganize and to lead the van in fire matters in Westfield.

They Fell Over the Stove When the Rescuers Roused Them.

A young man from Somerville spent Sunday evening with his lady love at the residence of some friends in Washington Valley, and the weather being very cold a good coal fire was kept burning until the small hours. When the young man was about to take his departure, the stove pipe seems to have received a shock in some way and became disjointed. A fact which neither noticed at the time.

Just before daylight the head of the house where the young lady was visiting, was aroused by a terrible feeling of suffocation. With some difficulty he awakened his wife, who also was almost overcome. After throwing open the windows and recovering their breath, a search was made and they discovered the disjointed pipe through which was escaping sufficient gas to smother a household.

The host proposes to sit up and attend to the stove himself when that young man calls again.

The Masquerade Ball.

The first grand masquerade ball given by the Plainfield Gesang and Turn Verein in their new hall, Monday, was the largest and most successful of any that has ever been given by the society. Fully 300 persons were on the floor, in costume, when the dancing begun. Mr. John Becker, as Chairman of the Committee of Arrangements, was ably assisted by his corps of brother members.

Almost every known character was represented from the burnt cork comedian and clown up to the Royal Prince and Princess. Many of the costumes were exceedingly pretty, and all were well gotten up. The occasion drew together a large number of curiosity seekers, who filled the gallery and other available space in the hall, and spent several hours in watching the masqueraders in the mazy dance. About midnight the masks were removed, and a general surprise followed. Supper was furnished by Caterer Boyce, and dancing was resumed to Prof. Frasse's excellent music until early in the morning.

Lenten Services at the Holy Cross.

Considering the inclemency of the weather, Sunday, there was a good attendance at Holy Cross church. A large number remained and partook of the Holy Communion, which was administered by the rector, Rev. T. Logan Murphy. Cards containing a list of the Lenten services were distributed in the pews.

During Lent the following services will be held in the church. Ash Wednesday (March 6) service and sermon at 11 A. M.

Approved by the Governor.

An error was made last week in the Senate bills approved by Governor Green. Those approved should have read:

Senate 138, permits the organization of companies which have for their objects the selling of credit or the limiting, insuring or guaranteeing of losses of wholesale dealers, manufacturers and jobbers by reason of bad debts.

Senate 51, provides that no person shall act as port warden appointed under the act.

Senate 42, to annex to the township of Fanwood, Union county, a part of the township of Westfield.

Senate 27, authorizing mutual fire insurance companies to borrow as much as $20,000 for the payment of losses already incurred or to which they may afterwards become liable.

Senate 9, authorizing the trustees of any religious society on a vote of two-thirds of the society to sell and transfer property, was filed without approval.

House 151, authorizing the authorities of cities to appropriate an amount in excess of the annual appropriation for street improvements was approved on Monday night.

THE BOROUGH COUNCIL.

Mayor Cooley and Messrs Emmons, McGee and Needham, constituted a quorum of the Borough Council, who met Friday night to finish up the unsettled business for the year. The Council Chamber was as cold as a barn with the doors wide open, and the dust on the members' desks was something less than an inch thick. The outgoing members were conspicuous by their absence. Clerk Arnold read the minutes, and they were approved as read.

A communication from the tax Collector showed the total tax collections up to date to be $7,377.98. The paper was filed.

Claims were presented and referred as follows: T. R. Crossley, $3; N. Y. and N. J. Globe Gaslight Co., $264.85 and $67.88; J. Coddington $37.50. All of the above claims were subsequently ordered paid, together with a claim of W. L. Force & Bro., for $5, sent in at a previous meeting.

Mr. McGee, from the Fire, Water and Lamps Committee, read a communication from Chief H. J. Martin of the Borough Fire Department. In it Chief Martin said that No. 1 Engine had been tested and found to be in good working order and the hose was also in good condition. The Chief further recommended the purchase of a half-dozen lanterns, and stated that the heating apparatus in the engine house was out of order. He also favored the appointment of a janitor and stated that Chief Doane of the Plainfield Fire Department had given him assurance that the city was ready to assist in case of emergency. The paper was ordered on file.

Mr. Needham reported on the petition of Justice Crossley, asking for permission to hold court in the Council Chamber. The petition was refused.

Mr. McGee took occasion to express the sentiments of the Council. He said that although this was the last meeting for the year, and only half of the members were present, he felt sure that all the members entertained a kindly feeling toward Clerk Arnold for his uniform politeness and courtesy shown the members during the year. He also eulogized Mayor Cooley for the faithful discharge of the duties devolving upon him.

Mr. Needham said he entertained the kindest feeling toward the outgoing members, and also toward those who remain in the Council.

Mr. Emmons spoke on the matter of no license in this city, and requested the Borough Marshals to keep order in North Plainfield.

Council then adjourned sine die.

PLAINFIELD'S RAILROAD FACILITIES BACK IN THE FORTIES.

"Do you think the New Jersey Central is the only railroad we ever had in Plainfield," said one of the city's oldest and most highly respected citizens to a PRESS reporter, yesterday. "The Central Railroad," said he, "is the third which has connected Plainfield with New York." The road which preceded the Central was known as the "Elizabethtown and Somerville Railroad." The road was operated upon an economical basis; then the track consisted of long timbers with strips of iron spiked to it. The trains were composed of two passenger and two freight cars, and the time between this city and New York was two hours—one hour by rail to Elizabethport, provided the rails were all properly spiked, and another hour to New York, by boat, provided, however, that the boat was not grounded soon after leaving the slip. The fare for the round trip was fifty cents. Passengers then enjoyed the journey and got the worth of their money.

But then, as now, mishaps occurred, and they often had to stop on account of snake heads and grades. The Engineer looked after the snake heads, and the conductor the axe and spikes. The cars in passing over the strap iron would loosen the spikes in the end of the iron and it would curl up. Whenever the lookout would see one ahead the train would stop. The conductor would nail down the iron, the passengers getting out to oversee the work. So they enjoyed the ride.

In those years it was a common occurrence for a train to get stuck on an up-grade. While the engine was making a desperate effort to haul the train over the grade, the passengers used to sit on the fence (Amboy fashion) and watch the proceedings, or put their "shoulder to the wheel" and push the train over the grade. The steamer "Water Witch," conveyed passengers from Elizabethport to New York at that time. In those days travel was delightful but hard on the conductor, for it was part of his duty to climb over the freight cars at the rear of the train and drive off those who got on between stations. The railroad at this early period had no hotel or sleeping cars. In every station there was a saloon and restaurant where the passengers and train hands would alight and eat "penny pies" and drink "cherry rum."

In years gone by, and long before the Central Railroad was elevated, the site where THE PRESS is now located was utilized for a lumber yard. Then the railroad company had a bell at the station here, and whenever a train was in sight, the bell was rung, not as a "chestnut," but to let the people of the village know that the cars were approaching. A person living in North Plainfield had plenty of time to bid his friends good bye and walk leisurely to the station, arriving there in time to board the train. One man acted in the capacity of freight and ticket agent, and wood sawer. Pine wood was burned in the engines in those days, as a substitute for coal. Horse power was used to pump the water for locomotives, and to saw the wood.

Oftentimes a man would come galloping in on horseback from Scotch Plains, bringing intelligence to the effect that the track at that point had been covered with debris, whereupon the ticket agent would hitch up a horse to a flat car, and with a force of men remove the obstruction. This was a common occurrence. Two trains were run each way, daily, except on Sunday.

Coal trains were not uncommon forty years ago, but a single coal yard in the place supplied the villagers with coal, an aggregate of about fifty tons a year. Coal trains in those days consisted of one car and an old horse. The coal was brought to Bound Brook by canal, thence transferred into cars and brought to Plainfield. The cars were unloaded in a vacant lot, opposite where the present station now stands. "That," said our informant, "was in the forties, but go back fifteen or twenty years further, and we have our first railroad." The trains on that road all run at midnight, and in one direction. They carried runaway slaves to freedom. Every railroad station was a hotel in those days. A little East of Richmond street there was then a farm house, barn and cow shed. The barn was used as the station in this village. This early railroad was known as the "Underground Railway," and extended from Ohio into Canada.

But a great change has taken place within the past forty years, and the inventions in recent years have been so much improved upon, that traveling is now both comfortable and convenient.

THE LICENSE QUESTION TO BE SETTLED AT THE APRIL MEETING.

The City Council met in regular session Monday, with the following members present: President Dumont, and Messrs Dunham, Erickson, Marsh, Myers, Newhall, Squires—7. Messrs Gallup and Watson came in later.

The minutes of the last meeting were read by Clerk Leonard and approved after the President stated in substance, as follows, concerning the resolution adopted at the last meeting, deferring action on all liquor license applications until after the local option election in Somerset county on May 14, and until a similar election shall be ordered in this county:

This resolution was adopted without any suggestion that it was unparliamentary, at the time it was offered. The President of the Council was not fully convinced that it was out of order. He has since examined the questions which are involved in its passage and has reached the conclusion that it may have been his duty to rule that it was unparliamentary.

There can be no re-consideration after the present meeting. He therefore directs the attention of the Council to the matter to the end that such action shall be taken as may be deemed expedient.

In the judgment of the President of the Council the said resolution is irregular and unparliamentary because it does not fix a day or time for the consideration of the matter referred to in the resolution, nor does it in terms indefinitely postpone the same.

It is irregular too, because it operates to prevent the consideration of the subject to which it relates, without providing that the subject be indefinitely postponed. The President of the Council is in part responsible for the enactment of what he regards as an unparliamentary measure. It seems to him to be an obvious duty to advise the Council of his conclusion and to get on record the reasons why it may be true that the measure ought not to have been considered.

Petitions and communications being in order the following were presented:

From sundry hackmen, peddlers and cartmen asking for licenses. Referred and subsequently granted.

From Liberty street property owners, asking Council to carry out provisions of an ordinance adopted, by macadamizing that thoroughfare. Referred to Street Committee.

For permission to remove frame buildings by the following persons: J. P. Taylor, building on North avenue to 26 East Second street; Andrew Love, house at Third and Church streets, to rear of lot; W. F. Messerschmidt house at 27 Washington street, from East to West side of lot. All referred.

The Plainfield Street Railway company petitioned Council for favorable consideration of their petition for franchise. Referred.

From N. W. Pike, a lot of trash in rhyme concerning the license question. Sent to License Committee, never again to be heard from.

From the N. Y. and N. J. Telephone Co., also one from property owners, requesting Council to designate by ordinance streets through which company's route shall extend. Referred to Street Committee. Later an ordinance was introduced by the committee complying with the request, and it was read twice and ordered advertised.

Claims were presented and referred as follows. Sundry poor claims amounting to $204.78;

Miscellaneous—J. Cheney, $2; W. S. Sliter, $2; C. Giesse, $60; R. Lynch, $60; T. McCue, $60; P. J. Flanagan, $60; G. W. Grant, $60; T. J. Carey, $90.50; O. B. B. Leonard, $125; G. M. Angleman, $140; Jno. Johnson, $125; Electric Light Co., $665.67; G. Q. Packer, $121.50; W. L. Force & Bro., $38.70; A. M. Griffen, $1; R. J. Butterworth, $6.68; M. Estil, $34.08; Geo. M. Angleman, $38; Carney Bros., $9.18; Hatfield Bros., $28. 75; American Bank Note Co., $47.50;

Fire Department—T. J. Lyness, $6.25; S. O. Doane, $32.96; Eng. Co., No. 2, $37.93; A. M. Griffen, $32.50; J. H. Albert, $4; Geo. Conover, $81.32; F. B. Hedden, $1.40; Gas Co., $32.85; C. S. Guion, $2; Martin Bros., $1.30; Jos. Cueney, $16.66; T. O. Doane, $41.66; M. Estil, $15.

Mayor Male nominated F. Moran, Jacob Kriney, Wm. V. Mundy and Andrew Muir as special policemen. They were confirmed.

Corporation Counsel Marsh reported in relation to Judge Suydam's claim for damages to horse resulting from breaking through culvert on South Second street. He said claim was based on facts and might properly be submitted for arbitration. Referred to Laws and Ordinance Committee.

Chief Doane sent in his monthly statement, recommending repairs to No. 2 Engine house; also the purchase of supplies for the Fire Department, including a double-tank chemical engine. The Chief also recommended the appointment of a janitor for each of the fire department houses, at a salary of $60 per annum; he also favored compensating the Engineers of No's 1 and 2 Engines at the rate of $75 per annum. The report was referred to the Committee on Fire and Buildings. Later in the evening the Committee reported in favor of purchasing the supplies; the Chief was also authorized to secure plans and specifications for repairs to No. 2 house, the same to be submitted at the next meeting; the matter of purchasing a chemical engine was referred to the Committee.

The quarterly report of the Overseer of the Poor was read and referred to the Alms Committee. The report stated that about $1,400 had been paid for rent alone during the year ending Feb. 1. The total amount expended during the year was upwards of $4,000.

The Board of Health communicated with the Council stating that $800 would be required by the Board for 1889. Referred to finance Committee.

The monthly report of the Treasurer and Collector were received and filed.

The petition of Mary B. Stickle, to erect frame house on East Fifth street, was granted; and an electric light was also granted on Sycamore street; also a cross-walk on Arlington place.

Mr. Marsh, from the Street Committee, read the following report signed by all the members of the Committee. It was received and filed:

To the Common Council of the City of Plainfield:

Your Committee to whom was referred the petitions for street railway, report that they have looked over the ground and examined the various petitions and have continued the investigations made by the former Committee into the system of street railway proposed by Leo Daft, Esq., and report that in their judgment the proposition of Mr. Daft seems the most advantageous of any pending, and one that on its face seems to merit the consideration of the Council.

Mr. Daft proposes to operate an electric street railway by the use of storage batteries, and at once to put a car in operation on private property to demonstrate its practicability. He proposes to establish a belt line on a circuit of about four miles, consisting of a single track in centre of street with necessary turnouts, to maintain a schedule of ten minutes, with a speed of six to eight miles an hour, running fine cars for the service, said cars to be a standard pattern, fourteen feet, Bell or Stephenson make, and fitted with Daft's improved fifteen horse-power motor, actuated by complete storage battery equipment fully capable of maintaining schedule speed with loads of forty passengers.

The track to be standard forty pounds side bearing rail commonly used in city streets, and of either the Johnson or Gibbons substructure to be put down in the most approved manner and according to the requirements of the city; and street to be macadamized two feet each side of track, where streets are not now macadamized or covered with cracked stone. Where the street is now macadamized or covered with cracked stone, but not to the full width thereof, the macadam or spreading of cracked stone to be extended four feet further each side of the track. The tracks of the track and the two feet each side of track to be kept in perfect order by railroad company and to conform to the grade of the street. Cars to be run in both directions and single fare to be five cents.

Your Committee would state that the doubt of the practicability of the use of the storage battery motor is not entirely removed from their minds, but they are assured by Mr. Daft that there is no doubt on that question and he offers to fully satisfy the Council in that respect, and to give bonds for the complete fulfilment of all he proposes to do, and the building and equipping of the road and the rendering of continuous and satisfactory service.

Your Committee would suggest that upon Mr. Daft's complying with the laws of the State in the premises, and putting himself or his company in position, within two months from date, so that the Council can act in the matter and give hearing to the parties interested, and upon his satisfying the Council of the practicability of his system and tendering himself ready to comply with all additional and reasonable conditions the Council may see fit to require and agreeing in consideration of the granting of the franchise, to pay into the City Treasury for the use of the city a reasonable percentage of the gross receipts of the railroad yearly and every year after said road shall have been in operation for a period not exceeding three years, and upon his furnishing the city with a bond with satisfactory security in the special sum of $20,000 conditioned upon the fulfilment of all the propositions made and for the maintaining and running of said road for a period of ten years after the completion thereof in accordance with the stipulations made in the petition for said franchise, that then if no legal or other objection appear, the application of Mr. Daft receive the favorable consideration of this Council.

The route proposed is along Peace street from Sixth to Front street, along Front street to Plainfield avenue, thence along Plainfield avenue to South avenue, thence to Clinton avenue, thence to Fourth street and back to Plainfield avenue, thence to Sixth street, and thence along Sixth street to Peace, with a possible deviation from Fourth street along Grant avenue, to Seventh street, thence to Plainfield avenue, thence to Sixth street.

Just which route shall be used, will depend upon circumstances that may hereafter arise. A continuous line on Madison avenue between Sixth and Front streets is also contemplated. The road to be completed in five months from time of granting franchise.

March 4, 1889.

The Water, Printing and Stationery Committee introduced a resolution, which prevailed, designating THE CONSTITUTIONALIST, Times and News as the official papers of the city.

NEW BUSINESS.

Mr. Erickson offered a resolution to the effect that the Standing Committees ascertain and report at the April meeting, the amounts necessary for the current expenses of the year. The Finance Committee was also requested to prepare a tax ordinance, leaving blanks to be filled in. The resolution was adopted.

Upon motion adopted, that portion of the mayor's message relating to a city hall, was referred to the Finance Committee.

Mr. Marsh introduced an amendment to the tax ordinance, changing the date of assessment from May 20, to May 1. Read twice, adopted and ordered advertised.

The ordinance relating to the storage of kerosene oil or petroleum, was taken up and passed on its third reading.

THE LICENSE QUESTION.

Mr. Myers moved for a reconsideration of the vote on the liquor license applications.

Mr. Squires offered an amendment to the motion fixing the date for reconsidering the vote on May 15. The amendment was lost, Messrs Dumont, Gallup, Erickson, Myers and Watson voting "no."

Mr. Erickson offered as a substitute, a resolution to the effect that the matter be postponed until the April meeting, provided, however, that in case the Legislature in the meantime annul or repeal the local option law, then the President of the Council call a special meeting to act upon the applications.

Mr. Marsh offered an amendment to Mr. Erickson's resolution in effect that a further consideration of the hotel and saloon applications to sell spirituous and fermented liquors in said hotels and saloons be postponed until the April meeting. Mr. Erickson accepted the amendment, and with another amendment by Mr. Squires striking out certain portions relating to the Legislature, etc., the resolution as adopted is as follows:

Resolved, That the consideration of hotel and saloon licenses to sell spirituous and fermented liquors in said hotels and saloons be postponed until the regular meeting of the Council to be held on the first Monday in April next.

Mr. Marsh then made a motion to take up the application of J. B. Miller for license to keep an "inn and tavern." The application was read and Mr. Erickson's motion to lay it on the table was lost. The license was granted, Mr. Gallup voting "no."

Mr. Marsh explained his vote by stating that it had been said theatrical companies and other guests could not be accommodated at the hotels because the Council had refused to license them. He for one intended to vote in favor of the application. The application of John E. Beerbower was then taken up and granted, Mr. Squires voting "no."

Councilman Squires said he was in favor of giving one hotel full swing, and he therefore voted against Mr. Beerbower's.

Mr. Dunham did not agree with the Councilman in this respect. He said that the City Hotel was one of the best managed houses in the State. Mr. Myers coincided with the statement.

The Police Committee were authorized to contract for the erection of two call boxes, to be used, by the special police, having night beats, and $700 was appropriated for work on the streets.

Mr. Erickson called up the ordinance relating to the city poor. It was adopted on its third reading.

The Auditing Committee reported on the claims sent in during the evening, and they were ordered paid.

Council adjourned at 10:45 P. M.

Molested by Tramps.

Mr. John Stine, a farmer, living just West of Washington Park, North Plainfield, notified Special Marshal Firsing, Friday morning, that three burly tramps had unnecessarily molested him on his premises. The officer at once hastened to the place, and chased the men well into the mountain. All of them escaped, however.

Giving the Council a Power It Lacks.

The Charter of the City of Plainfield limits the salary of the City Judge at $300. Therefore, although the salaries of other officers may be, and have been, increased, that of the City Judge remains the same.

In order that the Council may also have the fixing of such officer's remuneration within their control, the Hon. John Ulrich has introduced a bill in the Assembly that provides as follows:

That the common council, board of aldermen, or other governing body of any city or municipality of this State having a city judge, before whom offenses against the penal ordinances of said city or municipality are cognizable, shall have power by majority vote to fix the compensation of said city judge.

Death of ex-Mayor Rockfellow's Mother.

Mrs. Maria Rockfellow, aged 81, widow of Andrew Rockfellow, died Feb. 19, at her home in Bound Brook. Deceased was a daughter of the late John Staats of that place, and her husband for a long time carried on the business of blacksmithing. In 1837 Mr. R. built the house where both he and his widow died. Five children survive the old lady. They are George, formerly Mayor of Plainfield; William H., now residing in Elizabeth; Mrs. T. F. Sebring, of Bloomington; Mrs. Garrett Boice, of Fieldville and Miss Alice, who lived with her mother. Mrs. R. had been a member of the Presbyterian church for many years. The funeral services were held Friday, Rev. M. B. MacCauley officiating.—Messenger.

300 HORSES AT AUCTION
IN NEW YORK.
On Exhibition After MARCH 14, at the American Institute Building.
Third Ave., bet. 63d & 64th Streets, New York.
The catalogue includes large number of horses suited to every useful purpose, such as the carriage, coach, saddle, children's ponies, business and family horses, etc., as well as a splendid collection of TROTTING STOCK.
CONSIGNED BY PROMINENT BREEDERS, including horses of great speed for track and road, young trotters, partly developed, others unbroken, stallions and brood mares. Buyers are particular requested to EXAMINE THE HORSES BEFORE THE DAYS OF SALE, (which will begin Monday, March 18, and end Friday, March 22.) During the hours of sale (from 10 to 5 o'clock), it is necessary to close the stables against visitors, and there is no opportunity to examine while the horses are under the hammer. A track ¼ mile is provided for showing horses in harness within the building. Persons who will take the trouble to examine beforehand can buy suited to any useful purpose, also speed stock and breeding stock, as safely as by private purchase. All the horses are pledged by their owners to absolute sale without limit. For Catalogues address PETER C. KELLOGG & CO., Auctioneers, Office 107 John street, New York.

Packard's
Business College and School of Stenography has found more young men and young women in good paying positions during the past year than any other institution in the country. And it is simply because it has trained them for their work. Send for an illustrated Circular of this model school.

BELFORD'S MAGAZINE.
DONN PIATT, Editor.
Though BELFORD'S MAGAZINE is the latest comer in the field of periodical literature, the best proof of its prosperity is the fact that its paid up subscription list has reached a figure eminently satisfactory to the publishers.
BELFORD'S MAGAZINE is distinctly American and commends itself to all intelligent and thoughtful persons who wish to keep themselves posted on the great questions of the day.
Under the able and brilliant management of Col. Donn Piatt it will each month in its editorial department speak out fearlessly but fairly, and with thorough independence, on all questions of public importance.
Its long novel, given in each number complete, by some one of our popular authors, such as Julian Hawthorne, Edgar Saltus, Edgar Fawcett, Mrs. Elizabeth Bellamy and a score of other well known names, is a characteristic of BELFORD'S MAGAZINE.
Prof. Sumner, David A. Wells, Henry George, Henry Watterson, John G. Carlisle, Frank Hurd, are some of the contributors to BELFORD'S MAGAZINE on political and economic subjects.
Short stories, two or more of which are contributed to each number, sketches, dramatic notices, passing events and book reviews, combine to make BELFORD'S one of the most readable and interesting periodicals now before the public.
Send for a three months' trial subscription, 50 cents. $2.50 a year; 25 cents a number.
Enclose 6 cents for sample copy.

W. L. FORCE, Postmaster.

—There was more [illegible] loafing on the streets, Saturday evening, than at any time within a year past.

—One of nine new locomotives in course of building at the Grant Works, is now running on the Central railroad.

—The Plainfield Bicycle Club have rented The Crescent for an athletic entertainment, on Thursday evening, April 4.

—It seems probable that hotel liquor licenses, at least, would have been granted, Monday, if Councilman Moffett could have been present.

—A bill was presented to the Council Monday, for services in winding the town clock. The clock has evidently "stopped short, never to go again."

—Photographer Thorn is engaged in taking pictures of the members of the firemen's fair committee, which are to be framed and hung up in the Firemen's Hall.

—The Plainfield Cornet Band has been engaged by Mazeppa Hose Company of New York city, to precede them in the Inauguration parade in New York, April 30th, next.

—The barrooms of North Plainfield were largely patronized on Saturday evening. The crowd was an orderly one, however, and but one arrest is reported by the borough officials.

—Tax-Collector Johnson informs us that there is yet a balance of about $18,000 outstanding of the taxes for 1888. Out of a total levy of $121,000, about $103,000 have been paid in.

—The attention of our readers is called to the article in another column concerning the Methodist Conference which convenes here April 3. Plainfield can entertain the conference royally.

—A gentleman and his wife came out from New York on Saturday to spend Sunday in this city. They could not find accommodations at the hotels, and were obliged to go on to Bound Brook.

—The latest thing in cigarettes is the valuable addition of a small bottle of cologne which comes with each pack. Even this does not entirely abolish the horrible fumes of the filthy habit.

—On Friday evening of this week, an entertainment will be held in Hope chapel, which will consist of vocal and instrumental music, recitations, and addresses. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

—Another man has been murdered by the Fanwood bridge. With very little expense, comparatively, that dangerous spot could be made safe, yet another victim was added to the list, last night.

—It is said that the demand for small houses in this city, at the present time, is unusually large. There are any quantity of large houses in the market, but what is needed just now are houses for men of moderate means.

—It seems the state of things is merely this. Any evening that six Councilmen please to vote that this applicant or that shall have a license, the thing is accomplished. Past resolutions of postponement to the contrary notwithstanding.

—The commonality of Plainfield has refused to grant licenses to saloon keepers, and the only place now where a man can imbibe, is to take it on the sly in some drug store where the proprietor has a stretchy conscience.—[illegible] Record.

—The New Jersey Bureau of Labor has obtained statistics about the employment of children in the factories of the State, and it appears that the child labor law is violated in over 8,000 cases. The remedy for such a state of affairs lies with the people and it can be enforced.

—In order that there may be no misapprehension concerning the article published in last Saturday's Press, in relation to Mrs. Bovey's will, we desire to say that we have information and good proof that Mrs. Bovey's property was disposed precisely in accordance with her expressed wish.

—It is announced from Baltimore that, beginning March 10, the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, in connection with the Reading and Central Railroad of New Jersey, will establish a regular and complete train service between New York, Baltimore and Washington. Trains will be run through solid in each direction, avoiding transfer which heretofore has been necessary at Philadelphia. There will be five or six trains each way daily.

The Ex-President Returns by Way of Plainfield.

Mr. and Mrs. Grover Cleveland, Mrs. Folsom, and Col. Lamont and his family, passed through Plainfield Wednesday at 4:30 P. M., on their way to New York.

As the train dashed through this city, a large banner was displayed at the station, inscribed:

CLEVELAND IN 1892.

It caught the ex-President's eye as he gazed from the window, and he turned and bowed with a smiling face.

Their 15th Anniversary and Election.

The Young Ladies Mission Band of the Presbyterian churches celebrated their fifteenth anniversary, Tuesday afternoon, in the parlors of the Crescent Avenue church.

The reports for the past year were most encouraging. $261 have been raised, which is a larger sum than ever made up before in one year. Sao Paulo, Brazil, Kanazawa, Japan, and Tripoli, Syria, are the fields to which money has been appropriated.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President—Miss Clara O. Dunn; Vice President—Miss Beulah Ketcham; Secretary—Miss May Tracy; Treasurer—Miss Bessie Blair.

Managers—Miss Emily Tracy, Miss Eleanor Shepard, Miss Gertrude Wain, Miss Flora Petrie, Miss Julia Ketcham.

The Last of the Season.

The last of the series of Germans given by the society known as the "Dancing Class" took place Tuesday in the school building, corner of LaGrande avenue and Washington street. At 11 o'clock an elaborate collation was served. Music was furnished by [illegible] of Brooklyn. The German was led by Messrs VanBuren and Munger.

Among those present were Mrs. Brooks, Miss Munger, Miss Stewart and Miss Johnson of New York, Miss Erickson, Miss Dorman, Miss [illegible], Miss Fairbairn, Miss Jackson, Miss [illegible], Miss Mamett, Miss Tracy and the Misses Murray, Messrs McKinney, DeGraff, Jordan, Fairbairn, Wharton, [illegible], Moore, Kirk, Tiffany, Munger, VanBuren, Murphy and Stover, all of this city.

The German, Tuesday, was the last of a series which a select few of the society people in this city have been giving at stated intervals during the Winter, and which have been so successfully managed.

Personals.

Mr. Rudolph Thewald of West Seventh street, has returned from his trip to Denver, Col.

Mr. A. E. Faber, of Rockview avenue, North Plainfield, has returned from his round trip to Cuba.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. W. Case of Rockview avenue, Washington Park, are visiting friends in New York.

Mr. Griswold Earle has been connected with the city staff of the New York Evening Sun, for some weeks past.

Freeholder Vanderbeek and Mr. F. A. Dunham are among the Plainfield contingent, now in Washington, D. C.

Mr. Wm. M. Sandford, Jr., formerly of this city but now of St. Paul, Minn., arrived home last week for a three weeks' vacation.

A description of the Daft Electric Motor, with accompanying cuts of the apparatus, occupied a whole page in the New York World, Sunday.

Mr. Jos. Cooney, who was kicked by a horse about a week ago, has so far recovered from the injuries he received as to be able to go out.

On the 21st inst., Rev. J. W. Mitchell, pastor of Mt. Olive Baptist church, united in marriage Mr. Stephen H. Coleman and Miss Mary Johnson, all of this city.

Mr. Oscar Sabye, chief engineer in charge of the Central Railroad Company's new depot at Jersey City, was the guest of Mr. Harry Werner, Friday night.

Mr. Joseph Cooney, Jr., driver for Alert Hose Company, was kicked by a horse on Saturday, and so badly injured that he has since been confined to the house.

The Rev. C. E. Mitchell, pastor of the M. E. church, has been granted a three-month's leave of absence from the first of June. He will spend most of it in Europe.

The Rev. B. Rush Rhees is the author of a very extended paper in last Saturday's Mail and Express, on the system of night schools as adopted and followed in this city.

Capt. Walker of the S. S. "Etruria," was entertained evening 28th ult., by Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Griffen, and a few other friends were also among the guests of the occasion.

An evening sociable was held at the residence of Mr. Adelbert Vail on West 4th street, Thursday of last week. Games and other social amusements were indulged in.

Mr. Julius Winckler, a merchant, located at Detroit, Mich., has returned home, after a two weeks' visit with his brother, Mr. A. J. Winckler of North Plainfield.

It appears that the report that Mr. Wm. C. Stanbery of Scotch Plains, is going to Washington to attend the inaugural ceremonies of President Harrison, is without foundation.

Mr. John Honeyman and family of North Plainfield, have decided to take up their residence in the South. Mr. Honeyman intends to dispose of his household effect and about April 1, he will remove to Knoxville, Tenn.

About one hundred persons enjoyed an evening sociable given at Taylor's Hotel, Dunellen, on Thursday evening. Mr. Wm. Buckman of this city arranged the affair, and under his personal supervision everything passed off pleasantly.

Mr. C. E. Guion has presented the public library with a complete set of the volumes published out of the Egyptian Exploration Fund. They make a valuable and rare addition to the catalogue, and one of universal interest at the present time.

Mr. Louis Hickey, a former well-known resident here, but of late a practicing surgeon in Roosevelt Hospital, New York, died last week, and was buried on Sunday. The deceased was at one time employed in Mr. J. S. Cutter's grocery store in this city.

On the 25th ult., at the residence of Mrs. Hickman the Literary Club of Bound Brook enjoyed a rare intellectual treat which was extended by the Rev. Mr. Goodrich of Plainfield, who addressed the club on the subject of Florence, which city he had recently visited.

The funeral of the late Charles H. Bryan, who died early on Sunday morning, took place from the house, on Chatham street, North Plainfield, at 2:30 o'clock P. M. Tuesday, Rev. C. E. Mitchell officiating. Interment was made in the Presbyterian cemetery in North Plainfield.

Amy Snape, the seven-months-old daughter of Thomas R. Snape, of New York city, died early Friday morning at the home of her aunt, Mrs. W. A. Conger, of Manning avenue, where the little one had been visiting for a week. The remains were taken to New York, Saturday on the 2:57 P. M. train.

Mr. Frank Smith, the High school graduate, who was so seriously injured by being thrown from a horse on Madison avenue, about ten days ago, is recovering from the injuries he received, and is able to go out. Mr. Smith says that the accident has resulted in the loss of his hearing on the right side of the head.

The death occurred, Sunday, at Washington, D. C., of Harry M. Cornwell, son of the late Richard E. Cornwell of this city, in the thirty-second year of his age. His brother, Mr. George R. Cornwell, of Sixth street, received a telegram Sunday morning announcing the patient's danger, in time to catch one of the special trains for Washington.

Mr. A. E. Bushnell of this city has associated himself with Mr. H. C. H. Palmer under the firm name of Bushnell & Palmer, who have succeeded Messrs White, Post & Co., of No. 132 Duane street, New York, as wholesale dealers in leather and findings. Mr. Thad. Doane, son of Chief Doane, of the Plainfield Fire Department has secured a position with the new firm.

Mrs. Aletta B. Maynard was tendered a surprise party 28th ult., upon the occasion of her birthday, at her residence on North avenue. The affair was very successfully arranged by Miss E. Robinson and Miss M. Mitchell. Among those present were the Rev. and Mrs. J. W. Mitchell, Mr. and Mrs. Alonzo Hill and Mr. and Mrs. William W. Mayhew. Social enjoyment and entertainment of all kinds, completed the evening's pleasure.

About sixteen young persons, mostly members of the four-in-hand club of this city, went over to New Brunswick in Capt. Hand's stage, 28th ult., and tendered a birthday surprise party to Mr. Hardy, father of Mr. Theodore Hardy of the popular grocery firm of Howell & Hardy of this city. During the evening the guests enjoyed themselves by dancing and in various other ways. Home was reached on the return trip at precisely 6:17 A. M.

The funeral of the late Miss Alice Tallman, who died on Tuesday, took place from the deceased's late residence, Maple avenue, North Plainfield, at noon, Friday. Members of the Park Avenue church choir, assisted by Mr. E. E. Runyon, sang several hymns, and Rev. Mr. Schenck read the scripture and made the closing prayer. Rev. Dr. Lowry and Rev. Mr. Dilts each made appropriate remarks. The remains were taken to Greenwood for interment Saturday.

An evening sociable was given at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. C. Smith, on Grand View avenue, 28th ult., to entertain those who took part in the recent very successful programme at the Warren Chapel under the auspices of the Odd Ladies. About fifty were present and thoroughly enjoyed the social pleasures, supper and dancing, all arranged by the same committee that had charge of the public entertainment—Mrs. L. A. Martin, Mrs. Nellie Buckley, Mrs. T. B. Snyder and Mrs. E. Westphal.

Surprise parties are now at their height. Parties of this sort are held nightly in various parts of the city.

Mrs. Phoebe Vail, and daughter, Miss Chellie, of Madison avenue, this city, have gone to Canada, to spend several months among friends there.

Mrs. James Connolly of Madison avenue presented her husband with a bouncing girl baby Tuesday evening. The little one balanced the scales at ten pounds. Both mother and daughter are doing nicely.

Mr. Geo. Roberts, a son of Mr. D. S. Roberts, of North avenue, was brought to his home in this city, Tuesday afternoon, suffering from inflammatory rheumatism. The patient has been confined in Newark for several weeks past.

Master Percy Long, son of Gen. and Mrs. Eli Long, gave an evening party at his parents' home on Grove street, Tuesday, to about twenty-five of his little friends. There were dances, games, a supper and other enjoyable features.

Mr. Edwin H. Lewis, son of Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis of this city has returned home after an extended trip through the old country. Mr. Lewis gained considerable in health and strength, during his absence, which covered a period of several months.

While on a visit to St. Paul, Minn., recently, Mr. Winfield S. Angleman of this city had occasion to enter one of the leading banks in the city. He was surprised to find Mr. G. T. Roberts, a high school graduate from Plainfield, occupying a lucrative position as assistant cashier in the bank. Mr. Roberts has married since he left this city, a few years ago, and is now permanently located in St. Paul.

Mrs. Bovey's Will.

The will of the late Mrs. Jules C. Bovey was admitted to probate at Somerville, Friday. By it everything of which she died possessed, goes to her three little girls, and their grand parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. Obitz, are appointed guardians.

Forty New Members.

It does not often happen that five of the City's churches all hold communion services on the same day, as they did Sunday.

The additions to their membership that all received, were as follows: Crescent Avenue, 6; Congregational 4; First Presbyterian, 11; Methodist, 3; Trinity Reformed, 16.

A Narrow Escape.

Information just received shows that Mr. Charles Smith had a narrow escape from having his head blown off when his gun burst at a "shoot" about two weeks ago.

The broken gun was sent for repairs to a Syracuse manufactory, and in a letter acknowledging its receipt the makers say: "We have received the gun and empty shell that you sent us. It is useless for us to say to you that you had a narrow escape from being severely injured. The shell indicates that there was something unusual, and that the pressure at the time of the explosion was very great indeed. Upon examination we find that the explosion even broke the frame of the gun near the hinge pin."

Wedding Bells.

At the residence of the bride's parents, No. 154 Rutledge street, Brooklyn, N. Y., at 8:30 o'clock last Thursday, Mr. Geo. W. Cole, of this city was united in marriage to Miss Maud B., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. Herbert, of Brooklyn, Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, pastor of the First Baptist church in this city, officiating. The presents were of a high grade, and consisted of silverware, fancy articles, etc. Among the guests were the following from this city: Mr. Mulford Cole, the Misses Cole, Rev. Dr. Yerkes, Mr. John Meeker, Dr. C. R. Thiers, L. H. Brown, D. Cole, H. Hand and wife, A. Cole. Space will not permit us to publish the entire list of the guests.

Mr. and Mrs. Cole will reside permanently in this city.

Thanks to the Heirs of Daniel Drake.

The Board of Governors of Muhlenberg Hospital, at a recent meeting, passed a resolution thanking the heirs of Daniel Drake, deceased, for their kindness in releasing the hospital property from any claim they may have had against it.

The Secretary was directed to transmit a copy of the resolution to each of the parties named, duly attested with his signature and the seal of the corporation attached. The following are the names of the heirs:

James Drake, Elmer W. Drake, Catherine Drake, Daniel K. Drake, Lucila P. Drake, Abraham Runyon, John H. French, Mary E. French, Chas. Vermeule, Maggie D. Vermeule, Frederick E. Keep, Sarah V. Keep, Daniel D. Vermeule, Sarah A. Vermeule, Manning Vermeule.

Where Police Service is Needed.

Everybody would chip in and "All hail the Chief!" if he would run out, or run in, a few of the tramps that are a nuisance and a danger to this community.

There is a colony of them in the vicinity of South Second street and Muhlenberg place. They jump on passing trains and throw off what coal they need for warmth and cooking, and keep house under the shelter of the railroad embankment. From there they make daily raids about the city frightening folks with their demands, or helping themselves at the back doors. Recently they broke into the building in course of erection at J. B. Kline's new coal yard, and stole a lot of carpenters' tools that were afterwards found concealed under a pile of timber in the yard of the Plainfield Lumber Co.

Wanted, Consistent Councilmen.

At the Council meeting of Feb. 4, the six misguided members, led by Councilman Squires, adopted an ordinance to the effect that saloons and hotels should be licensed to sell liquor upon payment of a fee of $700, and conformably with other specified requirements.

Three weeks later these same members vote that nothing of the sort shall be done. Is that consistent, or even honest? If Messrs Squires, Myers, Marsh, Dunham, Newhall and Jenkins voted their principles on Feb. 4, they did not vote them on Feb. 25. That's self evident.

A sincere and consistent anti-saloon Councilman, would vote that way first, last and all the time—he would vote against all ordinances licensing or regulating their existence the same as he votes against their applications.

A GOOD MAN GONE.

John Calvin Runyon died at 11:30 P. M. last Thursday at his home on Arlington avenue. The illness that suddenly attacked him the day before, as reported in these columns, culminated fatally in rheumatism of the heart. He was conscious to the last, and but a few moments before he expired, raised himself up with ease and took a draught that had been prepared for him.

A widow, four sons and four daughters survive him, and of a family of 12 children several sisters still live besides four brothers—Messrs Enos W., Nelson, Frank S., and David. He was 57 years of age just ten days before his death. He was President of the Times Publishing Co., and had been one of the proprietors of the Central Times, almost since it was established.

As one of the most upright men in the community, universally esteemed and admired for his purity of character and thoroughly righteous life, his loss will be long apparent, while in that family circle which will forever remember his devotion, his loving kindness, his tenderness and sympathy, the vacant chair will never be filled.

Westfield's Republican Primary.

At Westfield, Tuesday, there was a shuffle in the Republican primary and a new deal. Of the present officers, Mr. Gale is the only one who receives the compliment of a renomination.

These were the candidates chosen:

Town Clerk—Charles Reynolds.
Town Committeeman—Charles S. Robison.
Assessor—E. A. Earnest.
Collector—A. K. Gale.

Services at Hope Chapel.

The meeting in Hope chapel under the auspices of the Hope Chapel Temperance Club, on Friday evening, was most successfully conducted by Mr. Frank Whitley. Eighteen additional signers were obtained to the total abstinence pledge.

On Friday evening of this week, an unusually interesting programme will be presented, consisting of music, recitations, addresses, etc. The members of Hope chapel are doing commendable work among themselves in advocating total abstinence.

A Divorce Wanted from a Deserting Wife.

George Belcher prays for a divorce from his wife Ellen Belcher, who he says, has deserted him.

An order was issued from the Court of Chancery, last Friday, upon the petition of Mr. Belcher, to the effect that Mrs. Belcher is required "to appear, plead, answer or demur," on or before the second day of May next, or the petition for a divorce from the bond of matrimony, will be taken as confessed against her.

Messrs Jackson & Codington are the solicitors for the petitioner.

Mr. J. C. Runyon's Funeral.

The last sad funeral rites following the death of Mr. John Calvin Runyon, took place from the late residence of the deceased, on Arlington avenue, at half-past one o'clock Sunday afternoon. Rev. Dr. Lowry spoke of the quiet life which the deceased had lived, and eulogized him in fitting terms.

Rev. Mr. Dilts spoke from a head-line in THE PRESS—"A good man gone." The members of the Park Avenue Baptist church choir were present and sang appropriate selections. The pall-bearers were Messrs Nelson, David and Frank Runyon, brothers of the deceased, and Mr. C. K. Compton, a brother-in-law. Interment was made in Hillside cemetery.

Another Victim of the Fanwood Bridge.

George M. Parks of Philadelphia, a brakeman on the Philadelphia fast freight train from New York, Engine 434, was struck and killed by the Fanwood bridge, about twelve o'clock of Tuesday.

It was not until the arrival of the train at Bound Brook, that the unfortunate man was discovered dead on the top of one of the cars. He was a single man engaged to be married in a few weeks. The accident having occurred in this county, the body was brought back to Plainfield and laid in Terrill & Cole's morgue.

The brother of the latest victim of the deadly bridge arrived in Plainfield next morning, and County Physician Westcott gave him a permit at once to remove the remains. They were taken to Philadelphia on the 2:16 train that afternoon.

The Death Record.

At the residence of her son-in-law, Mr. Clarkson Watts, on West Third street, at one o'clock, Sunday afternoon, occurred the death of Mrs. Ann B. Moffett, widow of the late William Moffett, aged seventy years and four days. The deceased was the mother of Councilman Elmore D. Moffett. Death resulted from paralysis. The funeral took place from Warren Mission chapel, on Wednesday, at 2:30 P. M.

James Moore, the Pond Tool Works Employee, who had his left arm badly crushed while at work in the shop recently, and who was subsequently admitted as a patient in Muhlenberg Hospital, died at that institution about half-past four o'clock, Sunday morning from brain trouble. The patient's wounds were healing nicely, but his brain was effected by an accident which happened to him on board a ship about twenty years ago. He leaves a widow, but no children. The body was removed to the deceased's late home near the works.

Mr. Charles H. Bryan, for many years past a resident of North Plainfield, died at his home on Chatham street, at 1:30 o'clock Sunday morning, aged 46 years and 11 months. Deceased has been in delicate health for a long time past, his complaint being consumption. He leaves a widow and several children. Mr. Bryan was a man well-known in this city. He first started years ago, the extensive baggage and furniture business which has in recent years been under the personal supervision of Mr. E. H. Holmes, the Adams Express Company agent here. The deceased was also employed for many years as compositor on the Central New Jersey Times, which position he was forced to resign on account of failing health.

Mrs. Matthew Hughes, an aged lady, died at her home on East Second street, Friday night. The deceased was 87 years of age.

AN INAUGURATION BALL IN PLAINFIELD.

The Fifth Poverty Cotillion was given Monday at the home of Mrs. John W. Murray, Central avenue and Eighth street. It was the last one of the series and eclipsed anything ever before attempted in Plainfield.

Mrs. Murray's spacious parlors were decorated with flowers, bunting and flags, and at one end of the room hung a huge picture of President Harrison, draped with flags. The figures were new and pleasing.

Probably the most original was one called the "drop-a-nickle-in-the-slot" figure. By a most ingenious arrangement two very innocent looking boxes, placed on a small table, were made to perform all the functions of an Adams tutti-frutti stand. Each couple as they passed this table were requested to "drop-a-nickle-in-the-slot and draw a partner." The nickle is dropped and presto, as quick as thought, a card drops on the table with a name on it.

The "Inaugural" figure was especially appropriate and was very amusing. The couple that was "left" each time was required to march round the room carrying a campaign transparency which displayed such mottos as "Grover's in the cold, cold, ground," "No! no! no free trade," "Cleveland's in the soup," and the like. Each person also received an "inaugural" souvenir consisting of steel engravings of Harrison on celluloid cards. Several other unique and original figures were introduced making by far the prettiest lot given at any of the "Poverties."

Mr. Wain led the Cotillion assisted by Mr. Beebe. The supper, as usual, was furnished by Marcel of New York, and the music by Austin of Brooklyn.

Among those who participated were Miss Scoville of Brooklyn, Miss Flagg and Miss Porter of New York, Miss Ricketts of Elizabeth, Miss Dumont of Brooklyn, Miss Stewart and Miss Johnson of New York, Miss Fairbairn, the Misses Murray, Miss Erickson, Miss Howard, Miss Hart, Miss Corliss, Miss Gardner, Miss Harte, Miss Mamett, Miss Dorman, Miss Murphy, Miss Yates, Miss Stewart, Mr. and Mrs. L. G. Timpson, Mr. Tompkins of Newark, Mr. Northrup of Orange, Mr. Dumont and Mr. Lyles of Brooklyn, Mr. Fred Wain, Mr. Howard Beebe, Mr. Squires, Mr. F. P. VanBuren, Mr. E. M. VanBuren, Mr. Louis Wain, Mr. Geo. Beebe, Mr. Fairbairn, Mr. Munn, Mr. Sandford, Mr. Ackerman, Mr. Yates, Mr. Martin, Mr. Kirk and Mr. Stovell.

A State Loss.

(From the Elizabeth Journal.)

In the death of Mr. J. C. Runyon, of the Plainfield Times, the editorial fraternity of this State loses a most conscientious and valued member. He was a man guided by his convictions of right, and with courage to act as he believed.

The State owes at least two good papers to his enterprise and progressive spirit, the Unionist-Gazette and the Plainfield Times. The former paper was started by him in Plainfield, but was subsequently removed to Somerville and merged into the Unionist. Both papers are Republican, and both are highly respected.

Another Attachment Issued.

Last Saturday Justice Crossly refused to set aside the attachment against the property of Mrs. Elizabeth Searing at the suit of Mr. E. R. Fairchild.

Monday upon order of the Circuit Court at Somerville, another attachment was put upon the property to protect Messrs A. D. Cook & Bro's claim of $800. Mr. Fairchild must now share alike with all the creditors, but his costs on attachment in Justice's Court must first be paid in full, and as real estate can be taken under attachment in higher court which the lower court attachment could not reach, Mr. Fairchild will probably fare equally as well under the last attachment.

THE LATTIMER WILL.

In the Orphan's Court at Elizabeth on Wednesday before Judge McCormick and associate judges, Mr. Nelson Runyon of this city, was, upon agreement of Counsel (the Counsel for the caveators consenting) appointed administrator pendente lite, over the will of the late Sarah M. Lattimer, who died recently, leaving an estate variously estimated at from $800,000 to $1,000,000. Citations were also issued for the legatees out of the State to appear at the hearing, on May 7, next. Mr. Runyon was obliged to give bonds in the sum of $100,000, said amount to be increased, as he receives the property.

Ex-Chancellor Runyon appeared for the Executors; John H. VanWinkle for the Children's Home; John H. Jackson, for William E. Gardner, and Borough Counsel Charles E. Reed, for Cashier Carmon Parse of the First National Bank.

Friends' Temperance Meeting.

The weather Sunday was not favorable for large audiences, yet quite a respectable number met within Friends' Meeting House on Peace street in the afternoon, pursuant to public notice given by the Temperance Association of that Society. Robinson Pound presided and opened the meeting by reading the XIV Psalm. The speaker was Aaron M. Powell, of this city, who, in his customary clear and chaste manner, delivered an address replete with illustrative data and close reasoning. He is an undisguised opponent of the license system, maintaining that on the score of reduced taxation, home happiness, religion, morality, good order, and the welfare of the people generally, the saloon ought to be entirely abolished. In conclusion, he personally thanked the majority in the Common Council of Plainfield for their recent action regarding licenses.

President Pound of the Association gave notice that the next meeting would be held on First-day afternoon, Fourth month (April) 7.

How a Plainfield Girl Sums up the Question of Love.

The following appeared in the Morning Journal, on Thursday, but the writer's name is not stated:

"My ideal of a husband is not that he should be young, handsome or rich, but that he should love me. This one word would begin and end the whole substance of our lives; a fulness from which we would have nothing greater to desire.

Were I sure of this one thing I should not mind his other failings—I could afford to overlook them.

For such a man I would cook and work should our means require it; and it would not make me happy to wear pretty or new dresses unless he could afford to give me such.

It would not matter whether he told me where he was going or whither he came, provided he loved me as I loved him. I could trust him anywhere and that would be sufficient. From his honor to his purse, all would be safe with me.

COUNTRY GIRL.

Plainfield, N. J., February 25."

The Best the City has Ever Had.

A small gathering of people in Music Hall, Tuesday, were favored with the finest concert ever given in this city.

Every member of Mr. William Ludwig's company—from himself to Mr. C. Kendall Irwin, the accompanist—is an artist, and the music they gave was perfectly rendered.

Mme. Adelaide Mullen, the soprano, sang with marvelous expression and sweetness. She was especially pleasing to the audience in the quaint and humorous love ballads of the "Old Dart," but she also sang a little lullaby exquisitely.

Miss Annie Layton possesses a mezzo voice of much quality. Her singing is of a different style from Mme. Mullen, but no less charming. The best of her solos was Moore's "Meeting of the Waters."

Mr. Henry Beaumont, the tenor, is by all ways the best tenor that has ever been listened to in Plainfield, at least. His shading was exquisite. Mr. Ludwig's voice, a rich baritone, also deserves the greatest praise, and Mr. Irwin's accompaniments were not a small part of the success of the songs.

A handsome harp of flowers was presented Mr. Ludwig during the concert, by President John F. Sheehan of the Embral Benevolent Association, upon which was this inscription:

COMPLIMENTS OF BRANCH 8, E. B. A.,
To our Irish Minstrels.
We appreciate our National Melodies.

The Assembly Ball at Fanwood, and Those Present.

The chief social event at Fanwood this season was the Assembly ball given Friday evening at the house recently occupied by Mr. Force. A number of dress coats were observable, Plainfield being called upon for its quota of guests as well as Fanwood.

Dancing commenced at ten and supper was served at twelve. It was after three o'clock when the last guest had gone. Mr. William R. Stanbury, as Master of Ceremonies, conducted the evening's gayeties and frivolities in a way that demonstrated his fitness for that kind of work.

Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Ernest C. Kieb, Mr. and Mrs. George Kyte, Mr. and Mrs T. J. Nicholl, Mr. and Mrs. Cottrell, Mr. and Mrs. Schirenbeck, Miss Schirenbeck, Mr. Richard Schirenbeck, Mrs. George Bates, Mr. and Mrs. McGowan, Mr. Robert J. Thombe, Mr. W. M. Carter, Miss Carter, Miss May Carter, Miss Kennedy, Mr. Louis Kennedy, Mr. L. A. Goodenough, Mr. Edwin M. Field, Miss Field, Mrs. C. L. Sykes, Miss Sykes, Dr. and Mrs. Oliver, Mr. Paul Oliver, Mr. Sam. Oliver, Mrs. Deforest Thorne, Miss Stuart, Capt. Benj. Tuzo, Miss Tuzo, Mr. Paul B. Tuzo, Mr. Louis E. Tuzo, Mr. A. Calkins, Miss Jennie Moore, Miss Ida Frentz, Mr. William Noble, Mr. and Mrs. A. McGown, Miss Edith Randolph, Mrs. Reilly, Miss Backhouse, Mrs. James E. Fancher, and many others well known both in Plainfield and Fanwood.

—On account of the severe rain storm which prevailed on Sunday evening, Rev. C. E. Mitchell, pastor of the M. E. church, postponed his sermon to young women, which he was announced to preach on that evening.

A Series of Accidents.

"The Pond Machine Tool Works, has furnished its share of accidents, since the Works opened on March 12, of last year. It is estimated that since that time, upwards of one hundred accidents have occurred to the employes, and in some instances the men have been crippled for life.

Rules for Lent.

Among the rules for Lent promulgated by order of the Bishop, are the following: The use of flesh-meat, also of eggs and white meats, is permitted at every meal on Sundays of Lent and at the principal meal on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, with the exception of Ember Saturday and Holy Saturday.

The use of white meats is allowed every day in Lent at the evening collation, and also at the principal meal on the days on which the use of flesh-meat is forbidden.

A small piece of bread, with a cup of coffee, tea or chocolate, or some similar drink, can be taken in the morning.

The Fairchild vs. Searing Attachment.

On Tuesday of last week as told in THE PRESS, Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh, on behalf of the defendent, Mrs. Elizabeth Searing, made a motion before Justice Thomas R. Crossley to quash the attachment issued against her property at the suit of Mr. E. R. Fairchild.

The motion was strenuously opposed by Messrs Jackson & Codington, Mr. Fairchild's Counsel, and an elaborate argument was made on both sides and many authorities cited. The decision was reserved until Saturday, when Justice Crossley rendered an opinion sustaining the writ of attachment and denying the motion to quash.

An Important New Law.

Secretary of State Kelsey suggests, owing to their importance, the immediate publishing of the provisions of the Sunset law repealer, in anticipation of the forthcoming Spring elections. It provides:

That in all elections, general, local or charter, to be held in this State, the polls shall open at six o'clock in the morning and close at seven o'clock in the evening, and shall be kept open during the whole day of election, between the hours aforesaid; provided, the board of election may adjourn the proceedings in such election from one o'clock until two in the afternoon, or for such shorter time, between those hours, as they shall see fit. The law has already gone into effect.

Gen'l Boulanger's Namesake Almost Buried Alive.

Friday, February 22, while Augustus Boulanger was working in a quarry on the second mountain getting out stone for foundations of buildings now in course of erection in this city, he had a narrow escape from a horrible death.

The quarry is situated on the steep side of the mountain, while the stone runs in almost level and the soil suddenly rises to a height of 20 feet above. The demand for stone being brisk, and the bank of soil frozen solid by the late severe weather, Boulanger had quarried under the bank where the stone was of the best. In this way the soil above became undermined to a considerable extent.

Suddenly the bank began to crack above Boulanger's head. Dropping his crowbar he sprang out of the hole, for it was little else, in the side of the mountain, and ran for his life. Scarcely had he when a mass of earth broke away from the mountain and hundreds of tons of stone and earth fell where Boulanger had just been working, burying his coat and the tools with which he had been working, several feet deep.

Boulanger says it will take considerable time and money to get at the face of the quarry again, but with the indomitable pluck of his namesake and countryman, he has gone to work to clear away the debris.

He regards his escape as little short of a miracle.

A Great Discovery.

The fact that castor oil, as vile a medicine as was ever discovered, has so long held its own as a laxative, is because, until HAMBURG FIGS were discovered, no medicine could take its place. Now, however, ladies and children take HAMBURG FIGS, and like them. 25 cents. Dose, one fig. J. G. Miller, Agent, Plainfield.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Sold only in cans, full weight.

My boy (three years old) was recently taken with cold in the head. It seemed finally to settle in his nose, which was stopped up for days and nights so that it was difficult for him to breathe and sleep. I called a physician, who prescribed, but did him no good. Finally I went to the drug store and got a bottle of Ely's Cream Balm. It seemed to work like magic. The boy's nose was clear in two days, and he has been all right ever since.—E. J. ONE DOLLAR A MINUTE!

That's big pay isn't it? Well, that's about what you'll save if you trade with us. For five minutes spent amid our stock will demonstrate that you can save at least five dollars on a suit comparing our prices with what they ask for similar goods elsewhere. Hardly anybody's time is worth a dollar a minute if we except, perhaps, lawyers and plumbers. And this rule applies with equal force to Overcoats, to single garments and to children's clothing.

Perhaps you think that Winter goods will not be needed now.

If we supposed the weather of the past week or so was to continue, we would offer a line of Pongees and Seersuckers. But Overcoat weather is near and the tardiness of the season favors the buyer. Come in and see if it isn't so.

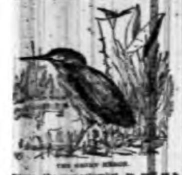
THE GREEN HERON.

The Curious Characteristics of a Remarkable Bird.

Well in the rear guard of the [illegible]



THE GREEN HERON.

Wilson, the poet-naturalist, [illegible]

North America has a fine array of herons. [illegible]

[illegible]

it serves as far as it will go and comparatively waits, with outstretched neck, until the part first swallowed digests away, when another portion is engulfed. The action of the gastric juice in the stomachs of fish-eating birds is so rapid that it takes them but a trifling time to dispose of a large mass of food.

My herons, "Tom" and "Peggy," were plucky in the extreme, and, though peaceable enough when not imposed upon, resented fiercely any domineering from the barn-yard inhabitants. Their combined forces were always more than sufficient to rout the enemy. Once only [illegible] an instance of their partial discomfiture. "Tom" had accepted the challenge of a bullying young rooster, and at the first pass was placed hors de combat, with a spur through his throat. Before the cock had time to sound his clarion of victory "Peggy," with a savage cry, came darting through the air and, alighting full on his back, by a fierce stroke of her spear-like bill deprived him of an eye. So vigorously did she follow up her advantage that the most energetic interference was required to save the fowl from complete destruction. "Tom's" wound was so severe that a considerable portion of his tongue [illegible] was exposed; nevertheless [illegible] rapidly. A contraction of the [illegible] followed, which afterwards often caused him great astonishment by refusing to pass such large articles as formerly. Occasionally he would attempt to swallow a dried sun-fish or other spiny object, which, sticking fast, could be neither cast up nor down. A little water, with some careful manipulation, always relieved him from his unpleasant predicament; but to the last, experience did not render him wiser on this point. Their exceeding tameness exposed them to great danger when they chanced to wander from their adopted home; and their fate, at last, was that of being stoned to death.
